the metal are by no means brilliant. I do not feel inclined to attach as much value to Lord George Hamilton's allusions to a possible gold standard in India, as some people do, for a good deal will have to happen yet before this can be established. But the possibility of this event must be borne in mind, and it would certainly be a severe blow to the white metal. A rise in Rupee Paper to 61¼ has been engineered on Lord George Hamilton's speech, but is somewhat premature, just as, on the other hand the speculation in Mexican Railway stocks, which depend so largely on silver, is somewhat dangerous. The more favourable outlook of the Chinese question has caused an improvement in Japanese bonds to 101½, while the Chinese loans are well supported. Business in the cycle section has again been very small. Dunlop Deferred have fallen to 13s., while French Dunlops are somewhat firmer at 5s. 3d. Humber Ordinary are easier at 15s., while the Extensions are also lower at 10s. 6d. Cycle Components have eased off to 2 7/16, while Singer's at 14s., and Swift's at ¾, show no alteration. Amalgamated Tyres are rather lower at 7s. The dividends of nearly all the leading English banks have now been announced, and I gather that amongst fifteen London institutions there are seven which have added to their distributions, while eight have maintained the previous rate, and of the two discount companies one pays 1 per cent. more, while the other makes the same payment as last time. Lloyd's Bank shows the largest increase, viz., 3¾ per cent. per annum for the half-year and 2½ per cent. for the year; the banks next in order of increase being the London and County and London and South Western. The London and Midland, too, has done exceedingly well in increasing its dividend by 1 per cent., and it is satisfactory to notice that the Clydesdale Bank has obtained an increase in its profits of over £8,000 against the year 1896, and that while the distribution of 10 per cent. is the same as last year, a larger addition is made to the reserve fund. Amongst the so-called private banks Martin's has increased its profits, the dividend of 6 per cent. for the year comparing with 5½ per cent. for 1896. Bovril shares are slightly firmer at 15s. for the Deferred. In Schweppes, the Ordinary stand at 1 3/16, the Deferred at 12s. 6d. The feature in the Industrial Market has been a sharp advance in Welsbach Gas Ordinary to 122½, while the Prefs. are quoted 102, the Deferred 1 1/16. It is said that the buying was for Vienna, but the cause is so far a mystery. Coats Ordinary are dull at 61½, and Threads are quoted ⅞ premium. Even now all the allotment letters do not appear to have been despatched. Some curious proceedings took place at the St. John's Hall, Penzance, on Friday, January 21, when Mr. E. J. Gardiner, as liquidator, presided over a meeting of shareholders in Batten, Carne, & Carne's Banking Company, Limited. Mr. J. H. Tonking read the report of the Committee of Inspection, from which it appeared that the estimated liabilities were £178,000, while the accounts estimated as available for assets amounted to £130,000, showing a deficit of £48,000, which must be met by a call on the shareholders. The Committee referred to the reckless advances which had been made without proper security, and to the fact that an actual loss of £175,000 was shown during the period of the Bank's existence—or £30,000 for six years. The liquidator objected to giving the names of the persons through whom the enormous losses were made, another speaker expressing the opinion that if the names were disclosed there would be six petitions in bankruptcy the next day, with the result that the losses of the shareholders would be further augmented. Opinions varied very much on this point, and there seemed to be a strong feeling amongst those present that the names should be disclosed. Mr. C. C. Ross, who is joint liquidator with Mr. Gardiner, owes £38,000 to the Bank on an overdraft, but it is evident that several other Directors of the Bank had also obtained overdrafts. In the end a Committee of Inspection was appointed for the purpose of thoroughly examining the Company's affairs. One would think that keeping the matter an open secret could not possibly be to the advantage of the shareholders, and that it would be far better to make a clean breast of it. Why should the Gas Light and Coke Company take £74,500 from its reserve fund in order to make up its "statutory rate of dividend of 12¾ per cent. per annum," which amounts to £377,000? One would think that in view of the fact that the electrical Companies are encroaching upon the Company's profits, the Directors would acknowledge this new factor and simply distribute as much dividend as they earned, retaining the reserve fund intact. H. Newman & Co., of 9 and 10, Railway Approach, London Bridge S.E., are forming themselves into a Company with a capital of £15,000, but the prospectus does not contain anything about past profits, the statements being confined to mere estimates. It is obvious that under these circumstances the investment cannot be recommended. Outside brokers are not relaxing their efforts, and in addition to Currie, Sons, & Co., of 30, Craven-street, Strand, W. C., to whose efforts to draw country people into their blind pools by means of circulars suspiciously like those issued by Errington, Williams, & Co., whilom of 30, Warwick-street, Regent-street, W., I have already drawn attention, we have Sanford & Co., of 48, Finsbury-pavement, E.C., endeavouring to launch deals in Union Pacifics and Milwaukees. The curious feature is that the latter people warn the recipients of their circulars against blind pools.

QUEER STORY.

A PARISH DOCTOR'S ROMANCE.

SOME time ago I received the following letter from a well-known West End physician:—

— Wimpole-street,
November 15, 1897.

Sir,—In reference to your "Queer Story" in the current issue of Truth (November 11), I should like to inform you that the story is unquestionably based on a real occurrence. I can speak with authority, because my mother was Dr. "Theobald's" favourite niece; and she often heard him talk in his old age (strictly sub rosâ), of the successful trick which he had played on the Earl of "Bodmin," in conjunction with Lord "Charles Devenish."

It may interest your contributor, and perhaps some of your readers, to know this.

And now in reference to another matter. I have a true, and I venture to think an extremely interesting story of my own to communicate to you. I herewith enclose particulars, in case you should care to make use of them. Naturally, I have not the skill, as I scarcely have the leisure, to present the story to you in a form fit for publication. I am, therefore, sending a mere bald recital of the facts, which I place at your disposal to work up in any way you please—at least, if you think it worth while.—I am, sir, your obedient servant,

The Editor of Truth.

Being then very busy with my Christmas Number, and other pressing matters, I was unable to attend to my correspondent's enclosure at the time. I laid it on one side, therefore, for future perusal. And it was only a fortnight ago that I found leisure to go through it. I at once saw that the circumstances related were exceptionally interesting. And I turned the matter over to one of my staff, to work up into a form suitable for publication in my "Queer Story" columns. In accordance with my request, he has produced the following.—Ed. Truth.

People who know me nowadays as a prosperous West End physician, with a house in Wimpole-street, and a practice worth several thousands per annum, little realise what struggles I had to encounter when, as a young man, I first set up for myself. I always say—and with reason—that I had exceptionally bad luck at the outset of my career. In the first place, my mother's uncle—the celebrated Dr. Theobald—who might have given me valuable help in my profession, died while I was still walking the hospitals; in the next, the substantial legacy which we had confidently expected from him, and a fraction of which would have afforded me the requisite capital for the purchase of a good partnership, proved to have dwindled down to almost nothing; my uncle having apparently frittered away the bulk of his fortune in rotten investments and rash speculations. My father, I may add, was a poor man, and could only afford me a very few hundreds t start life upon. Thus, instead of embarking upon my career, as I had expected, under unusually favourable auspices, I was left to make my own way from the first, practically unassisted.

With the meagre capital at my disposal I bought a correspondingly meagre practice in Greenwich. It was not, of course, the sort of practice I should have chosen if I had had my choice, lying, as it did, almost exclusively among the poorest members of the population, and producing an income not merely small, but exceptionally difficult to get in. But I was given to understand by the vendor of the practice, that if I cared to apply to the Guardians, they would, no doubt, transfer to me the post of assistant parish doctor, which he had held for some years; and for which (owing to the scanty pay and hard work) there was very little likelihood of competition among other local practitioners. His statement was justified by results. I did apply, and I got the post. They call such people medical officers nowadays, and pay them a decent, if not a lordly, stipend. At that time I was simply dubbed a parish doctor, and received the magnificent recompence of £80 per annum for my services. However, it was a certainty, and, to a man in my position, that of itself counted for much.

On the other hand, I may say, without exaggeration, that I earned the money ten times over. A calculation which I made, at the end of the first three months, showed me that I was being paid for my work among the paupers at the rate of about sixpence a visit. And such visits! The slums of Greenwich and Deptford (part of which lay in my district) are bad enough now, even under the maternal care of a lynx-eyed County Council. In those days, they were infinitely worse. The cellars and attics in which I often found myself were—many of them—so squalid and loathsome that thirty years afterwards I can hardly recall them without a shudder. The dirt and vermin, the foul diseases resultant from debauchery and drink, the——. But there! I will not pollute your ears with these unpleasant details. Suffice it to say that my work as parish doctor was at least as sickening as it was arduous—which is saying much, and that stern necessity alone kept me from throwing up the post.

But even a parish doctor may find his consolations; and I am going to tell you how I found mine. The consciousness of doing my duty? Of alleviating misery? Of earning the gratitude of the sick and helpless poor? Of serving my generation in the best way I could? Dear me! No! A consolation much less abstractedly virtuous, and much more concretely satisfactory. The most effective consolation of all, when you can get it in the proper form. Comfort incarnate. Balm in Gilead personified. That moving and breathing anodyne—a woman.*

I saw her first by the bedside of a dying woman, in a miserable garret in East Greenwich. It did not seem at all the place for a pure young girl; for the dying hag and all her family were a vicious, abandoned lot; and, indeed, the very street in which they lived bore a character which made many people loth to go down it, even in broad daylight. She was trying to feed the half-unconscious old creature with a teaspoon, as I entered. But when she heard my footsteps, she stopped and glanced up. She had large, innocent blue eyes, which looked into mine anxiously.

"Are you the doctor?" she cried. "I am so glad you have come. Poor old Mary is much worse. Can—can nothing be done for her?"

I shook my head.

"Her case is quite hopeless," I said, with a glance downwards at the comatose old woman. "She cannot last many hours."

"I—I—was afraid it was so. Will—will—she, do you think, die before the evening?" whispered the blue-eyed girl.

"I think it extremely probable."

"I—I—want to remain here until the end," she said. "I cannot bear to think of her dying all alone in this dreadful place. One of her daughters came in a short time ago. I tried to persuade her to stop, but she only laughed at me and went off. They seem to be terrible people."

"Some of the worst in the street," I rejoined; "and that is saying a great deal." Then I added, "You will not think me impertinent or interfering, will you? But—but—you can really do no good by your presence here, and this is not a fit place for you to remain in."

"I thank you for considering me," she answered, with a pleasant smile. "But I am not afraid. And I must remain with this poor creature until the end."

She said that in a quiet, resolute way, which precluded my making any further remark upon the subject. I lingered, however, a few minutes, conversing with her on other topics, before I took my departure. And when I did so, I carried with me a very pleasant vision of a fair, girlish face, with honest blue eyes and waving flaxen hair.

Late in the afternoon, I went again to see whether old Mary was still alive. Of course, my visit could do no possible good. But perhaps it was kinder to go; and perhaps I might catch another glimpse of the blue-eyed girl. The fates favoured me. As I was approaching the door of the house, I met her coming out.

"Oh, Dr. Selby!" she exclaimed. "Poor old Mary is dead!"

"Ah!" I said. "I hope she died quietly, and that you were not called upon to witness any distressing scene."

"She died quite quietly. In fact, she never recovered consciousness. Oh, no! There was nothing at all distressing; except that death, amid such surroundings, must always be distressing. One of her neighbours has come in to perform the last offices; and as there is nothing for me to do, I am going home."

"It is getting dark," I said, "and I do not like the idea of your walking alone through these abominable streets. Will you allow me to escort you—at any rate, part of the way?"

"I am not afraid. Nobody is at all likely to hurt me," she answered; adding, with her bright, innocent smile. "I shall be pleased to have your company, of course. Will you come to tea and let me introduce you to mamma? We have only been here a short time; but we have already heard of you, and your kindness to your poor patients. Mamma was saying only yesterday that she should like to make your acquaintance."

I could not refuse this invitation, which was as welcome as it was unexpected. Since I had first seen her that morning, I had been consumed with an eager desire to find out who she was and where she lived, with a view to making, if possible, her better acquaintance. But I had never supposed, for a moment, that so immediate an opportunity would be spontaneously afforded me by the blue-eyed damsel herself.

And yet there was nothing forward, nothing in the remotest degree—I—I can't get the word I want; may I be allowed to coin the adjective flirtatious?—in her manner of inviting me. Her air was just the air of a simple, friendly child. What her age may have been I did not, of course, know. I imagined, however, that it did not exceed twenty; and even for her years, it was evident that she was exceptionally ignorant of what is called "life." As we walked, she conversed in her natural way of the neglected condition of the poor who lived in these slums: and the artless schemes she propounded for dealing with this most difficult of social problems amused, while they also touched me. I was a young man myself, whose knowledge of the world was, as yet, neither extensive nor peculiar. But as I listened to the sweet-faced, flaxen child who walked at my side, I felt myself a veritable old serpent.

She led me to a quiet little house in South-street, where I was introduced to her mother. The latter greeted me with a friendly, unaffected cordiality. In appearance, she was just an elder edition of her daughter; the same flaxen hair, the same fair, clear complexion, the same large blue eyes. In her soft, pleasant voice I thought

I detected a hint of a foreign accent. Her dress was plain and homely, and all her surroundings bespoke a small and inexpensive menage. But I knew a lady when I met one, and I knew that I was talking to a lady then.

They made me at home immediately. In five minutes we were chatting as if we had been acquainted for years. I found that mother as well as daughter was absorbedly interested in work among the poor. They had only been at Greenwich about a month—as the elder lady told me—having come there because it had been recommended to them as a field in which workers were especially needed.

"We are poor ourselves," she told me, candidly. "Gladys and I have only just enough to live upon." (And so my blue-eyed maiden was Gladys. How charming a name!) "We cannot afford to give money away. But we want to do something towards alleviating the appalling misery which reigns in our vast London. Therefore, we have come to work ourselves. We are from the country, and you may imagine how shocked we were when we first began to visit among the Greenwich poor. I could never have believed in the existence of such unutterable squalor and degradation. However, we are getting used to it now. And we like the work—don't we, Gladys?"

"Yes! yes! We do indeed! But," cried out the girl, clasping her hands, while her blue eyes shone very earnestly, "I wish I was rich. I wish I had—had a million pounds a year. There should be no wretchedness and starvation and misery among the London poor—if I had a million pounds a year!"

Her mother smiled.

"Gladys has great faith in the power of money," she said, addressing me. "Perhaps we are all apt to think that we could do more good, if we had some means at our disposal other than those with which Providence has endowed us."

"Yet it is terrible to see people, almost daily, sold up and rendered homeless, aye, and often dying by slow starvation—all for want of money—money—money; and not to have the money to give them! It is like sitting with your hands and feet tied, and watching a fellow-creature drown," said Gladys, sighing.

"It is terrible!" I assented. "I have often experienced the same feeling myself. And yet," I added, "I doubt whether money is what is most wanted. You might flood Greenwich and Deptford with gold; but you might, perhaps, confer little lasting benefit, all the same, except on the publicans and the pawnbrokers."

"I am sure you are right," broke in Gladys' mother. "I do not under-estimate the value of money. No one less. But to go to these people with gold in your hand will, in nine cases out of ten, be to make yourself the victim of worthless imposture. And while I am on that subject, Dr. Selby, I should like to ask you a few questions. You know, we are quite new to the work here; and we want to give what little help we can to the really deserving. Can you, now, tell me the exact truth about So and So; So and So; So and So?"

She mentioned the names of more than a dozen poor people in the course of her inquiries. About many of them I was able to afford her information, sometimes favourable, more often the reverse. I saw that both she and Gladys noted my answers with close attention. That they took the work on which they had embarked very much to heart was obvious and unquestionable. When I rose to depart, after a most delightful hour, they both thanked me warmly for the help I had given them.

"We shall hope to meet again soon," said the elder lady, as she shook hands with me.

"Oh, we are sure to meet soon and often!" cried Gladys, with a frank and friendly smile.

We did meet very often during the next month. And a happy month for me that was. My heavy burden of work seemed easy and light, and I went about it with a blithe spirit and an elastic step, for each day the sun shone brighter—brighter—brighter. Yes, the heavy, humid atmosphere, the clouds, the smoke, the fog of a viler than usual November could not hide nor even dim my sunlight; a sunlight of blue eyes and flaxen curls; of sparkling smiles and sweet-faced girlish innocence.

To tell you the stages by which that love affair grew would be long and tedious. Therefore I will pass all this by, and just invite your attention to the culminating scene in which I confessed my love to Gladys, and asked her to be my wife.

I had called and had found her alone. It was an opportunity I had long been desiring, and I seized it. I don't remember how I said my say. I only know that I said it somehow; or rather part of it. For before I had finished she stopped me. Her image is before me now as she appeared at that minute, very pale, with a startled, pained expression in her blue eyes. I can hear the very tones of her voice, exclaiming in great distress,

"Oh, stop. Please stop! I cannot listen to any more."

"Do—do—you not—not—care for me?" I stammered, greatly taken aback; for I was a conceited fellow (as young men are), and I had felt confident of the impression I had made on Gladys.

"I do—do—care for you," she answered, and I saw that she was trembling violently. "I do care for you. But not—not—in that way. At least, I can never be your—wife!"

There was something in her tone and manner that seemed to give me hope, to suggest that she did really care for me in 'that way,' despite what she had said. I leaned forward and tried to take her hand. She just suffered me to touch it. It was very cold. Then, as with an effort, she drew it away.

"No, she said, in a low, resolute voice. "You—you have done me a great honour, Dr. Selby. I am sensible of it. I thank you for it. But—but there are circumstances which—which make what you ask quite impossible. Please do not press me for an explanation. And now I—I——"

Here, without any warning, she suddenly broke down, covered her face with her hands and burst into tears.

I was at her side in a moment. I placed my arm round her. I drew her to me. I felt, I knew, I was certain that she did—did love me; and bold in this conviction and wild with an ecstasy of happiness, I called her by every endearing name in love's vocabulary, and again and again kissed the white little hands with which she had veiled her face.

It was while I still held her in my arms, that I became aware of another presence. The door of the room had been thrown open, and Gladys's mother stood before us. I hardly recognised the gentle, genial face I had hitherto known in the imperious, haughty countenance now regarding me. The voice that struck upon my ears was strange and proud and cold.

"Dr. Selby!—Gladys!—what does this mean? I awai an explanation."

"I—I—have ventured to ask your daughter to become my wife," I stammered.

"Indeed, sir. You do us a great honour, I am sure And have you, Gladys" (turning to her daughter, wh had already extricated herself from my embrace), "give him the answer your attitude would seem to suggest?"

"No, mamma; no, indeed," she cried, running to he mother. "I have told him it is impossible—utterl impossible."

"But you did not convince him, it appears. Tell hi again, Gladys, in order that he may be sure there is n mistake."

"It can never be—it is impossible," said my darling, i a choking voice, and hiding her face upon her mother shoulder.

I was mad, frantic. I felt sure she did love me, and cried out, wildly:

"No! Not impossible. In the eyes of love nothing impossible. Why——"

"Yes, sir. Even in the eyes of love some things a impossible," her mother interrupted me, with ste hauteur. "Leave us, Gladys. I desire a few wor alone with Dr. Selby." . . . .

I left the house soon afterwards, unhappy and hum liated. But no blame had attached to me, as even th proud lady admitted. It was her own fault, she said, a so it was. For what right have Royal personages—ev with the best intentions of putting themselves in tou with the poor—to masquerade as mere middle-class people? I do not think that these two ever repeated the experiment. Perhaps the fact of "Gladys" having allowed herself to care for my humble self—as I am still proud to believe she did—gave her mother too great a shock. Perhaps she was apprehensive that some other parish doctor might emulate my presumption, and propose, as I had proposed, to unite to himself in marriage a lineal descendant of George the Third.

ART NOTES.

It was but fitting that the Old Water-Colour Society should accord the honour of a special Exhibition to the late Sir John Gilbert, R.A. He had been a regular contributor to the Society since 1852, and from the year 1871 to his death a few months ago had been its President. It is an open secret that in 1886, when many years of hard work had made a heavy strain on his health and energy, he sent in his resignation. But the members would not hear of it. In 1888, when he first suffered from the paralysis that crippled his later life, he again resigned his office. But again he was persuaded with kind insistence to remain. About two years ago an attack of greater severity led him to send in his resignation for a third time. Once more with affectionate urgency it was refused. The members determined, as Gilbert himself used to smilingly say, to keep their "King Log" to the end. It is tolerably clear, then, how much Sir John was admired and beloved by those who best knew him, and who found him as simple, as manly, as direct, and as straightforward as his manner of life and his manner of painting always were.

A one-man show is a trying ordeal for any artist. Sir John Gilbert gets through it with a very fair amount of success. The inspection of a collection of his works confirms the impression that he was a popular rather than a great artist. He did in the course of his long life a large amount of sound and good work, and he always contrived to invest it with his strong individuality. But an inspection of the collection of his water-colours and black and white drawings now on view at No. 5A, Pall Mall East, serves to emphasise the limitations of his art. It enables one to see, too, what a successful impressionist he was at a time when that now much hackneyed term had never been heard of. His battle scenes and his pageants and processions impress one with a general sense of colour and life and movement. It does not do, however, to examine them too closely. They then reveal deficiencies in draughtsmanship and technique; and one recalls the fact that Gilbert was a self-trained artist who became a painter without any aid from Schools of Art, Academy classes, or visits to easily accessible picture galleries. Without doubt he must have been born with the artistic instinct inherent in him. Even his early relegation to the office of an estate-agent in the City could not crush this, and at the age of nineteen we find him exhibiting his first water-colour at the Gallery of the Society of British Artists. This very drawing is included in the present Exhibition, and is hung next to the drawing ("The Return from the Raid") on which the artist was at work immediately before his death. It is at once instructive and interesting to make a comparison between the two. The first picture he exhibited at the Old Water-Colour Society's Exhibition was a water-colour drawing of a Standard Bearer. By a curious coincidence, his last exhibited water-colour in 1897 was a Standard Bearer also. Such subjects always had a special attraction for him. From the first to the last he was fascinated by pomp and colour, and an imposing largeness of design. Rubens, it is easy to see, was the old master with whose method he most sympathised.

I am inclined to think, however, that it is as book-illustrator that Sir John Gilbert will find his most enduring fame. I am old enough, alas! to remember the publication of the Shakespeare he illustrated for Messrs. Routledge. In the works of the Bard he was always able to find affinities. During the very years when he was almost engulfed in the whirl of current book work it was to Shakespeare's historical plays he often went for the subjects of the pictures he still found time to paint. And the edition of Shakespeare he illustrated remains his best-known achievement. It will be remembered also that during the latter years of his life Sir John Gilbert ceased to sell his pictures, having made up his mind to reserve them as a gift for the nation. In 1893 he made presentations of them to the Cities of London, Birmingham, Liverpool, Manchester, and Blackburn. It was an appropriate ending to the life of an English-born artist who had drawn his inspiration from native sources. The Exhibition at the Old Water-Colour Society's Gallery includes many of the above works, and is one which should not be missed by any who take an interest in all that is most characteristic and admirable in English art.

MUSIC.

TRAINING SCHOOLS FOR OPERA.

It has long been a reproach, though perhaps not altogether a well-deserved one, that despite the money spent upon our academies and colleges of music, we have no real school for opera in this country. The performance given on Thursday last week of Mozart's "Don Giovanni" by the students of the Royal College of Music tends, however, to prove that when one of our great music schools has the material, the reproach is undeserved. Dr. Stanford's tempi, it is true, were often strange to Londoners' ears, though considering what queer antics opera conductors have attempted in past days, I am not going to say Dr. Stanford was wrong. So far, at any rate, as the male characters were concerned, the performance of Mozart's opera would certainly have done no discredit to the regular operatic stage. In Mr. Foster the college has a representative of the Don who can bear himself and make love like a gentleman; who possesses the light touch necessary for this attractive part, which has wrecked so many professional reputations; and who, moreover, has a good voice, and is a well-trained vocalist. Mr. Thomas Thomas, the Don Ottavio is a perfect novice as an actor, although it is only fair to say that no tenor nowadays ever dreams of acting Don Ottavio. Mr. Thomas Thomas, at any rate, has a genuine tenor voice of agreeable and even powerful quality, though somewhat limited in range. These two students are already sufficiently advanced to take their place in regular operatic troupes. The Royal College also has two promising comic actors in Mr. Madoe Davies, the Leporello, and Mr. Dutton, the Masetto. The ladies, on the other hand, were rather a feeble party—a rather unusual experience, as women are mostly superior to men students from an acting point of view. The present plan adopted at South Kensington of placing in study operas in the existing repertory is very much better than the practice once preferred of performing works never likely to be seen upon the stage of to-day. The Royal College Opera Class is by far the best if not the only genuine training school for opera that we have. But even here the preparations for a single representation of a well-known opera take many months, so careful are the authorities to secure an adequate ensemble. At the Royal Academy of Music the stage of the concert room is much too small for practice, while at the Guildhall School of Music, the last two or three performances given by the students showed pretty conclusively either that the system of tuition was wrong, or that the students did not profit by the instruction of their professors.

Under the title of "Vicars and Organists" I have received from a well-known Mus. Doc. and Organist a letter concerning the ridiculous salary of £1 a week offered for multifarious duties by the heads of the Church Army. I regret that the letter in question, which would occupy a couple of pages of Truth, is too long to be inserted. As, however, the whole matter is admirably argued out by the Mus. Doc. it will be of interest to give the gist of his treatise. My correspondent is a musical graduate of one of our British Universities, and an organist of a quarter of a century's standing. He admits that the clergy as a class are neither pleasanter nor more reliable persons to deal with than are the average publicans and sinners. He has, it is true, in the course of his experience met with many petty annoyances, such, indeed, as he might have met with in other callings, but with only a few serious grievances. One is a reduction of salary without fair notice. My correspondent confesses that if he accepted an inadequate salary on taking up a post that would not constitute any ground for complaint. But a reduction of salary is a grievance, and so also are delays in paying salary and stupid excuses for the delay, arbitrary dismissal, shiftiness as regards terms of notice, unwillingness to write a testimonial though verbally complimenting in the most fulsome manner, and a general disposition to encroach and get more out of the organist for his salary, and to pry unduly into his private affairs. My correspondent confesses that a little tact has always floated him pleasantly over small annoyances. In regard to some of the other alleged grievances of organists, he does not think they are well founded. Insufficient stipend is a matter for arrangement before the berth is accepted, while as to insecurity of tenure my correspondent asks why should the tenure of an organist be better than that of an orchestral player of corresponding professional proficiency. In other words, why should a clergyman be bound to retain the services of an organist if he is not satisfied with him. Organists complain of the absence of any kind of appeal in cases of hardship, but my correspondent does not see that an organist is worse off in this respect than any other employee at a corresponding salary. He admits that the organist, or at any rate, the parish organist, has no recognised status, and this he considers may be a sentimental grievance. On the other hand he thinks the organist's status should be found in his published works, in the price his public performances command, his degrees and his academical training. My correspondent even defends the clergy, and asks whether they also have no rights. The clergy in many instances are unable to pay more than they do, but he inquires in what manner in this respect they differ from other employers and managers. That they are often meddlesome and that what they give is sometimes not worth the getting must be admitted as facts, but he rightly says "talking won't alter it." Musicians, he declares, "cannot, either singly or combined, bully the clergy out of money. If a clergyman can't pay an artist and chooses to advertise for a miserable drudge, no trade-union will prevent him doing so." The organist, however, has one grievance which is not the fault of the clergy at all. Twenty years ago there were no public musical schools of the Guildhall type, which have destroyed private teaching except in the case of delicate or backward pupils. Again, of late, churches have multiplied indefinitely, and the good old-fashioned church, with vested funds and endowments, is almost a thing of the past. Doubtless, £20 or £30 a year (or even 3½d. an hour) is poor pay, but "the love of black cloth and of 'gentlemanly' occupations is answerable for the majority of the legion of musical failures our profession is overcrowded with. They have adopted it because it was a 'genteel' calling, and not because they had a distinct vocation." It seems to me that my correspondent's remarks, although they may not be popular with organists, and may, in other respects, be open to controversy, nevertheless contain a good deal of sound sense.

Another correspondent whimsically points out that a Cathedral organist sometimes has something more of the loaves and fishes than his mere salary. In two instances very recently Cathedral organists, in point of fact, have married a considerable fortune; a fortune which would be a godsend to a rural dean, a cavalry captain, or even a swain of the rank of a stockbroker. In country places, particularly, the organist, as almost the only higher representative of art in the district, has an enormous chance of honourable alliance with a wealthy family; the more especially as, from the days of Beaumarchais downwards, it has been the weakness of young ladies to fall in love with their good-looking music-teachers.

The question of musical pitch is likely again to come prominently before the public, owing to the refusal of Mr. Lloyd to sing at the Leeds Festival if the low pitch is used. Mr. Lloyd is not bigoted in the matter, but he tried the dull pitch at last year's Birmingham Festival, with, be it said, by no means satisfactory results. Indeed, even at Birmingham, although the pitch of the organ has at great expense being lowered, the performances, at the demand of the choir, who dislike the dull pitch, are now given at the old high pitch, the organ part being transposed half a tone higher in consequence. High or dull pitch, however, a musical festival without Mr. Lloyd will certainly be a new experience.

The details of the two cycles of "Der Ring des Nibelungen" to be given at Covent Garden on June 6, 8, 9, 11, and on June 27, 29, 30, and July 2, have now been settled. The subscription price of stalls will probably be five guineas, and no single seat will be sold. The performances will begin at various times, "Das Rheingold," which will be performed without break, starting at half-past eight, while "Die Götterdämmerung" will begin as early as four o'clock on Saturday afternoon, so as to allow time for dinner after the first act, and for supper at the end of the performance. The other two operas will commence at five o'clock in the afternoon. The cast is certainly the strongest ever announced, and for this, as for other details, we have mainly to thank Mr. Maurice Grau; ably supported by Mme. Wagner's British representative, Mr. Alfred Schultz-Curtius. Jean de Reszke will be Siegfried, Van Dyck will be Loge and Siegmund, Mme. Ternina of Munich and Mme. Nordica will divide the part of Brünnhilde, Mme. Eames will be Sieglinde, Frau Heink will be the Erda, Van Rooy will be Wotan, Edouard de Reszke will be Hagen, Lieban will be Mime, while the Rhine daughters and Walkyries will be the same artists who played the parts at Bayreuth. We shall thus have a bonâ-fide Wagner Festival without the trouble and expense of going to Bavaria, and with an infinitely better cast than Frau Cosima Wagner ever put forward.

There have been some rather sharp criticisms upon the performance at Venice of Mancinelli's "Hero and Leander," which will be one of the novelties of the coming Covent Garden season, Mme. Eames then playing the part sung at the Norwich Festival by Mme. Albani. One of the critics, writing from Venice, speaks of "clumsy coryphées in pink and blue sprawling about, waving paper rosettes in a hopeless attempt to entertain Aphrodite." The criticism is, of course, directed at the performance and not at the music. But a cynic has put the case concerning Mancinelli's work this way. He declares that at Norwich every one said that the work was not a cantata proper, but was more suited to the operatic stage. At Covent Garden it is prophesied that the same writers will declare the work to have been written for the concert room, and to be better suited to the platform than to the opera house.

There seems to be a good deal of soreness in Paris because the Covent Garden management have secured M. Saleza, one of the tenors of the Paris Grand Opéra. A London engagement, however, is so very much more valuable than any sort of salary which a vocalist can secure at any of the subsidised opera houses of Paris, that the growl is rather unreasonable. It is, nevertheless, a curious truth that the best chance which an operatic vocalist stands of securing an engagement in London is by passing through one of the Paris opera houses. It has been done over and over again. On the other hand, Italian vocalists now have no hearing here. The reason, it has wickedly been said, lies in the fact that the Covent Garden Syndicate (the polyglot Mr. Maurice Grau always excepted) do not understand the Italian tongue. But they all speak French.

An extraordinary report, by the way, comes from Paris that M. Jean de Reszke has been studying during his holidays, not only Arnold in "William Tell," but also Manrico in "Il Trovatore." Of course, the co-operation of the great Polish tenor would revive the popularity of Verdi's out-of-date opera. I, however, greatly doubt whether we shall ever in London see M. Jean as Manrico, although I have heard him as the Count di Luna years ago. Apart from "Aida," and "Otello," his last Verdi part, so far as I recollect, was in "Un Ballo."

English music does not seem to be popular at Queen's Hall, and, owing to the small audiences recently drawn by the works of our native composers, Mr. Cliffe's symphony, announced by Mr. Robert Newman next Saturday, has been withdrawn in favour of one of Beethoven's symphonies. When managers neglect native music a howl comes up from certain perfectly sincere British musical Chauvinists. Perhaps, also, English programmes are not sufficiently supported at concerts by first-rate soloists as some foreign novelties have been. However, managers have to carry on their business upon commercial principles, and Mr. Newman, at any rate, cannot be blamed if he provides his audiences with the works which they prefer.

M. Paderewski has been ill of influenza, and therefore his tours in Norway and Spain have been abandoned. He will be here next month for some provincial concerts, but he has not yet decided upon giving any performances in London proper. It is, however, hardly likely that he will leave this country without appearing in the metropolis.

I learn that the music composed by Mr. Edward German for the coming presentation of "Much Ado about Nothing," at the St. James's Theatre, is partly constructed from earlier works. There is an overture, while the first entr'acte is a pastorale, the second being a berceuse, followed by a Bacchanalian dance. There is also an andante religioso for the church scene and some masque music.

The music of the past week has been rather plentiful. At the Albert Hall on Thursday there was a capital performance of Haydn's "Creation," with the rarely-heard third part restored. The public, however, obviously did not appreciate it very much, and the bulk of the audience left the hall after "Achieved is the Glorious Work." At the Popular Concerts there have been no novelties, but Smetana's Quartet in E Minor has been revived by Lady Halle, and on Monday Mr. Clinton took part in Mozart's Clarionet Quintet in A. Ballad concerts have been given both at St. James's and Queen's Halls, the latter being very largely attended. Miss Mary Carmichael, on Thursday, gave a concert mostly of her own songs and drawing-room pieces, some of them very charming, although the programme was a good deal too long. At Queen's Hall Mr. Newman on Saturday revived Lalo's suite "Namouna" and Borodine's Second Symphony in B Minor, besides including in his programme several Wagner works.

LETTERS ON BOOKS.

MY DEAR MR. WYNDHAM,—"England," said Gordon, "was never made by her politicians, but by her adventurers;" but "adventurers," when translated into any other tongue than English, becomes "buccaneers," "filibusters," "picaroons." Our edifying rage when another country seizes an island or a province to which it has no more and no less right than we, reminds me of the story of the three tarts on the dish, to two of which a brother and sister helped themselves. When the sister devoured ers in time to be the first to grab the third, the brother ied furiously, "You greedy little pig! I was just going take that!" Add to the dramatis personæ a wretched mike, to whom the third tart really belonged, but who ured not hint his claim under pain of a ferocious rashing, and you have the game-of-grab situation chronic Asia and Africa. How it was played between England and Holland for Singapore, &c., is told in an extremely interesting life of the champion of England "Sir Stamford Raffles" (1). Sir Stamford was a strong man, with, I fancy, from his many foes and quarrels, the defect of the quality—masterfulness. To him we owe—and it is a big debt—Singapore, and in acknowledgment of that debt, his statue, by Woolner, was unveiled there in 1887, to express in marble what Sir Frederick Weld expressed in words at the ceremony:—

> Look around and a greater monument than any that the highest art or the most lavish outlay can raise to him is visible in this, that his name is still held in affectionate veneration by all our races, that all acknowledge the benefits that have resulted from his wise policy. See that crowd of shipping in the harbour in front of his statue. Cast a glance at the city which surrounds it, on the evidences of civilisation—churches, public buildings, and offices. Were this all, it would still be sufficient to say, "Si monumentum quæris, circumspice." But this is only a small part of the monument. Look for it in other parts of the colony. Look for it in the Native States. Look for it in the constantly-increasing influence of the British name in these parts, and you will say with me that in Raffles England had one of her greatest sons.

Taking due discount off for the flattery necessary to the occasion, this statement may be accepted as a fair estimate of Sir Stamford's services. What amuses you most in such annexations, by the way, is the wretched goose-quill used for the forgery of the necessary deeds. Someone is set up and sustained as nominal sovereign on the condition that he makes over to his investors the very powers wherewith they have themselves invested him! Even more interesting, absorbingly interesting, is Captain Trotter's "Life of John Nicholson" (2), who did England the more heroic service of recovering an Empire well-nigh lost. He also was a strong man, if ever there was one, with also the defect of his quality. "In Nicholson," said Lord Lawrence, "were combined ardent energy, lofty aspirations, indomitable will, unswerving perseverance, unfaltering coolness, unflagging zeal, and to these moral qualities was added the advantage of enduring strength. But he had an imperious temper, and was hardly tolerant of even reasonable and necessary control." Upon learning, when he was himself dying of the wound received in his heroic assault on Delhi, that the General alluded to the possibility of our having to retire, Nicholson exclaimed, "Thank God! I have strength yet to shoot him, if necessary." Lord Roberts, then a Lieutenant, came over to Nicholson's tent for a chat, and was thunderstruck by his announcement, "If Wilson hesitates longer to attack Delhi, I intend to propose at to-day's meeting that he should be superseded." Roberts objected that Wilson's removal would leave Nicholson himself senior officer. He answered, smiling, "I shall propose that it be given to Campbell of the 52nd. I am prepared to serve under him for the time being; so none can ever accuse me of personal motives." Truly a strong man! We know what he would have thought of our present Indian frontier Generals. "You won't take the Commissionership of Leia now that you are likely to remain a General and get a division, Nicholson." "General," he said, laughing haughtily, "You don't think I'd like to be a General of division, do you? Look at them! Look at the Generals!"

Another North of Ireland man has done the State some service for which he was rewarded in Ireland by imprisonment, and in Australia by investment with the order of St. Michael and St. George. "Plaisante justice," exclaims Pascal, "plaisante justice qu'une rivière ou une montaigne borne! Vérité au deça des Pyrénées, erreur au delà." I really do not know when I have read an autobiography more interesting, more instructive, more entertaining and delightful than Sir Charles Gavan Duffy's "My Life in Two Hemispheres" (3). No English Unionist can read it without having his faith shaken in the first article of his political creed—that Irishmen are competent governors of every country but their own. "What on earth are you disembarking at Queenstown for?" asked a fellow-passenger of a Yankee tourist. "Wall," he said, "I've a fancy to see the only country in the world that Irishmen don't govern." Two measures were taken in Australia to diminish the political influence of the Irish—the importation of Irish girls only, and the importation of Germans. The Irish girls married immediately, and made their husbands, whatever their nationality, vote the Irish ticket. When Sir Charles' Inspector of Schools, visited those attended exclusively by the children of these German counterpoises to the Irish, the song that greeted his entrance was "We're Paddies evermore!" Sir Charles is over eighty years of age, yet his autobiography is as light and bright and breezy as youth itself. Another biography which will unquestionably interest you, for it is admirably done, is Mr. Vince's "John Bright" (4). Here is Mr. Vince's fair answer to Tennyson's sneer in "Maud":—

> The broad-brimmed hawker of holy things,
> Whose ear is stuffed with his cotton and rings,
> Even in dreams to the chink of his pence, and to Carlyle's denunciation of Bright as "one of the foolishest creatures he had ever heard of, clamouring about America and universal suffrage, as if there was any sensible man anywhere in the world who put the smallest confidence in that sort of thing nowadays"—here, I say, is Mr. Vince's irrefutable retort:—

> Certainly Bright's performances did not resemble those of Mirabeau, Governor Eyre, and the rest of the heroes. On the other hand, he was doing something to prevent one of those crises at which the Carlylean hero makes his distinguished appearance—generally too late to do much good without doing also a great deal of harm.

Believe me, my dear Mr. Wyndham, ever yours very sincerely, DESMOND B. O'BRIEN.

GIRLS' GOSSIP.

DEAREST AMY,—My weekly letters to you are very useful to me in keeping a straight clue to the passing of time and the sequence of events. Often and often, when I sit down to write to you, I have to search in my memory for the events of even a day or two before. How astonishingly swiftly things fade from the mind? Ruby keeps a diary, but when I asked her the other day if she ever reads it over, she answered, "Never." Now, my letters to you are far better than a never-opened diary, for they impress the different incidents on my mind. And I suppose you find the same thing with yours to me.

Well, what have we done since last I wrote? What good deeds? Alas, I fear but few, if any! What ill ones? Nothing remarkably distinguished in that line, either, I hope. We tried to be good to an old soldier, and, on writing to his old regiment about him, found that he had been "dismissed with ignominy" some years since. So, beyond giving him food and clothing, we could do no more. And now, when some really deserving case crops up, Richard will not let us do anything kind, because this other man was a bad lot. I think men are just as prone as women to reason from individual instances. And they are not half so pitiful and charitable as we are. I said so to him one day, and he observed that if it were not for women, there would not be half so many attempts at imposition as there are now.

Our idea for helping the old soldier was to buy him a barrel-organ, and we made inquiries of one or two of our friends as to where such things are sold and how much they cost. The astonishment of these good souls on being made recipients of these queries was amusing. "What on earth can you want with a barrel-organ?" they asked, and we could scarcely explain for laughing at their amazed faces. Astonishment expressed in a graphic arrangement of feature and gesture always excites mirth, on the stage and off, and it is the wish to "see his face" that inspires half the practical jokes. Don't you think so?

We went to Niagara on Saturday, and were delighted with some clever and very graceful skating we saw there. It was so soft, so easy, so flowing, and the skater—a lady—evidently revels in it, so that no one can see it without pleasure. Another lady who skated very well wore quite a summer gown, a pale mauve barège with a short double skirt, a band of white lace or embroidery below it, and another horizontal trimming, also white, on the bodice. This seemed to cut her into three instalments, and apparently abbreviated her to a considerable extent. The mauve gown was lined with pink. A very pretty dress consisted of a black umbrella skirt of the new shape and a white silk zouave bodice covered with a network of black and a broad white silk belt which came up in a point both back and front. There were many sweet gowns in the corridor. One was all black velvet and chinchilla and was worn by a very pretty woman. A tight-fitting coat of black Persian lamb had sable sleeves, revers, and collar. A little lady wore a long pelisse in green velvet trimmed with sable, and a blue velvet toque. A handsome black velvet jacket was trimmed with ermine in flat bands down the front, the bands being strapped across with narrow tabs of black velvet fastened down with diamond buttons. Her hat was quite a novelty, the brim being covered with sable as well as the crown, which was surrounded with loops of ribbon.

I also noticed a very successful toque in mauve and pink, the "smart" combination of the moment. The tone of mauve was not too aggressively bright to jar with the pink.

We are going to the Carnival Ball, the date of which has been altered from the 4th to the 8th. You will then be on your wedding tour. I wish you could be in town to go with us. These balls are very amusing.

By the way, dear, I hear for a fact that shawl-shaped capes are coming into fashion, with the points hanging down back and front. It will be just as though we had cut the neck out of our grandmothers' shawls, and hung them round us. Black silk is to be a favourite material for these, lined with a colour, and lace shawls are to be utilised in the same way with linings of white or coloured surah.

You will remember that last summer our grenadine and muslin gowns were all set loose on separate silk skirts, and the prophets of chiffons say that it will be the same this season, but only for quite thin materials. Bodices are to be tighter than we have been wearing them, so that a good figure will now have some chance of standing out from the mediocre shapes. The cape-pelerine, with its slight but useful protection to the shoulders, and its long ends hanging down in front, is to be again a favourite form, and it is to be expected that these ends will form a pretext for elaborate trimmings. An infinity of narrow ruches in chiffon or lisse will be applied to this purpose, and I greatly fear that the day of inordinate and meaningless trimming is by no means over. But we must not forget to be thankful for small mercies. The huge sleeves are a good riddance. May their shadow never be greater than it is at present! The correct pilaster for a sleeve at the present time is a little, shaped jockey, put on without a wrinkle or a fold; in other words, perfectly plain and without a single pleat. This means skill! But then, what is there in dress that does not?

A high evening bodice is now among the indispensables. Here is an idea for one that could be worn at a restaurant dinner. In fact, I saw it at the Savoy the other evening on a lady of high rank and recognised beauty. The material was white satin with the yoke covered with handsome lace which rose in a rather high collar, and accommodated a lovely dog-collar of pearls and diamonds. From the yoke downwards there were bands of black lace insertion all glittering with steel, and all of them converging toward the waist, where they were held by a black satin belt richly sewn with steel. From under this they all came out again, spreading outwards very slightly in a basque made of the white satin, the whole being bordered with jet and steel. On a stout figure this would be an advisable form, and on the lithe and well-proportioned one on which we saw it, it was quite perfection.

In the stalls of the Comedy Theatre—where we went for the second time to see that sweet little play, "One Summer's Day"—we saw some beautiful dresses. One was white satin, veiled with silver-embroidered net, and a dainty ruche of net at the end of the skirt and round the shoulders. Another was in pink brocade, with a black, wavy line straying all over it. The bodice was pink, veiled with accordion-pleated white chiffon, and edged with a ruche of the chiffon. The sleeves were white net, embroidered in black sequins to match the skirt, and finished at the shoulders with a billowy arrangement of white and pink chiffon. This was worn with a cape of pink brocade, like the skirt. The cape was lined throughout with alternate frills of white, pink, and black chiffon. Another lady had a cloak of pink brocade, with three frills round it of the same material, which curved up in front, rounding the corners of the cloak, and giving a magnificent sweep to the figure. Pink and black were predominant in the stalls.

In the first piece, "A Sheep in Wolf's Clothing," Mrs. Bernard Beere wore a charming gown of grey-blue brocade. This was lined with soft white cashmere, and was turned back in front with huge revers on the skirt, to show an under-robe of white satin, with a band of gold embroidery about six inches from the ground. The under-bodice was also in white. The brocade was held together at the waist by a gold buckle, and a gold tasselled girdle was worn. The bodice was low, and had a deep Vandyke collar of rich cream-coloured grenadine, embroidered in gold. The points of this collar formed epaulettes on the shoulders, and came far down towards the waist, both back and front. The sleeves had a puff of the brocade, above soft white chiffon, tied in with gold, which came to the elbow, and were continued to the waist in the brocade.

I fell very much in love with the gown worn by Miss Beardsley in "Oh! Susannah!" It is grey cloth of a very soft and sumptuous texture, which drapes beautifully. The skirt is hung with inimitable skill, and the semi-touched bodice has the fronts bordered with black velvet, and opening over a front of red velvet. This gown is in the latest Parisian style, clinging very closely to the figure for a long way below the waist. This was our first visit to "Oh! Susannah!" and we were astonished at the extraordinary first piece, "The Cat and the Cherub." The title prepared us for an amusing performance, but we soon found it to be most gruesome, though there are some wonderfully beautiful lines in the play, which is all about the Heathen Chinee in San Francisco.

I took the girls to the cookery lesson at Debenham & Freebody's on Wednesday, the subject being Indian cookery and the teacher Mr. Veerasawmy, the native chef who prepares the excellent dishes I told you of some time ago, and which have become quite an institution with us on Wednesday evenings. We received our lesson in a large room filled with those useful beings, cooks, who are so sadly maligned (sometimes) by a proverb relating to the sharply-contrasted sources of our food supply and our cook supply. The platform was decorated with flowers, and held a long table provided with every variety of dish, pan, and cookery implement, while another long table was fitted with two hot-plates heated by gas. Mr. Veerasawmy, who is distinguished as an historian and mathematician, wore a white and gold turban and a long coat of magnificent red brocade. The white apron and long linen cuffs that he afterwards donned seemed to be a fling the brocade, as a street boy chaffs a heavy swell.

We are all more than partial to Indian dishes, and we learned an immense deal about them on this occasion. I cannot share with you all the enlightenment we enjoyed, it would leave me no room to write of anything else, but I must tell you of a delicious way of making vegetable fritters which we learned. All the processes were conducted before our eyes, and the printed recipes were given to us to bring home, so that we have no excuse for not reproducing the dish fairly satisfactorily. The vegetables are cooked separately, and then a batter is made with vegetables and flavouring all mixed together in it and spoonfuls are fried in oil or butter. Our instructor told us that the proper thing to use was ghee, an Indian preparation of butter with no salt in it. The salt that is contained in ordinary butter turns the things brown instead of a tempting straw colour. We are going to try this dish at home so soon as we can get the proper materials, for the "bhugias" (pronounced budgias)—garlic vinegar, for instance, which is more lightly flavoured with the strong, but useful, herb than any other preparation of garlic. This sounds invaluable, does it not?

The lesson was an experiment, and it will probably be followed by a course, as there is an endless number of Indian dishes, though our experience of them is usually limited to curries. We were given a little of each dish to taste, and the girls approved very highly of poppadums, a sort of very thin cake fried for something under a minute and looking not unlike an extremely attenuated pancake. These poppadums are made of moongh dhall, or Indian lentils, but the making of them is a serious thing and kept as a family secret by those who can compass them. I should perhaps say that it was kept as very few family secrets ever succeed in getting kept in these days of proclaiming everything upon the housetops.

The report of the London Needlework Guild for 1897, which has just been published, contains an account of the annual meeting held at 9, Southwick-crescent in November. At this meeting the announcement was officially made known by Mrs. Pasil Ellis, the Hon. Secretary, that the Duchess of York had consented to take her mother's place as Patroness and President of the Guild. The advice given by the Duchess of Albany, who presided, was thoroughly to the purpose, and speaks a practical mind; and it would appear from a remark made by the Hon. Secretary that there is great need of practical advice. The carelessness or thoughtlessness of members causes endless trouble to the ladies who collect, classify, and send out the Guild garments. It is all done so economically that those who send in should feel in honour bound to comply with all requests for the furtherance of the object in view.

Expenses were increased this year, partly owing to a kindly exception made to the rule never to send things out of London. This was the despatch of 500 articles of clothing to the poor and needy sufferers from typhoid in Maidstone, a course that was suggested by the late Duchess of Teck (the then President). And a special grant was made to the sufferers from the great London fire.

We all wondered what course would be adopted with regard to the Poor Clergy Corporation, and the report informs us upon this point. As many objected to a grant being made, a written assurance was asked for and received to the effect that nothing sent by the Guild should be sold. It would have been scarcely fair to exclude the Poor Clergy from participating as usual in the favours of the Guild for the fault of one man, especially as he has no longer anything to do with the Corporation.

The Countess of Warwick established a new industry last year—the Warwick Cottage Industry—which produces knitted stockings for sale in a great variety of patterns, and on special lines, for there is now much variety of taste on the part of sportsmen, golf-players, and others in the matter of knitted hose. And they all very naturally insist that the feet shall be knitted in much finer wool than the portion that does not go into the boot. There was a time when such a subtlety as this was never thought of, and men went shooting in boots that were constructed to fit not only themselves, but their stockings, and which were, consequently, a few sizes too large. And are there not for choosing all sorts of patterns—the plait, the cross-bar, diamond, diagonal, zig-zag, cable and moss-stitch, besides the clerical greys, black, and white? Orders can be sent to the Warwick Cottage Industry, 20, High-street, Warwick.

This is a nice way of cooking rabbits, and one to which some men are very partial:—

fire. Cover the pieces of rabbit with a spoonful of mustard, a spoonful of chutney, a spoonful of Worcester sauce, a small chopped chili, a spoonful of salad oil, and an egg, previously mixed together on a plate. Have a small stewpan with some good brown stock ready heated on the stove, place the pieces of rabbit in it, cover closely and keep it hot, without boiling, on the side of the stove for about ten minutes. Arrange the rabbit in a nice pyramid on a hot dish and pour the sauce round. It may be accompanied with boiled rice in a separate dish.

Have you ever tried "Curried Scallops"? They are excellent. If possible have a little fish broth, which may be made from any fish trimmings:—

Fry a large minced onion with 1 oz. of butter in a stewpan until brown. Mix in a dessertspoonful of curry powder, a dessertspoonful of curry paste, a tablespoonful of flour, and a little chutney; add the fish broth, stir until boiling, then rub through the tammy. Return the sauce to the stewpan with a dozen blanched and pounded almonds, a dessertspoonful of tomato purée, and a chopped green chilli. Add about 8 or 9 scallops, and simmer about half an hour. When the fish is tender, add the juice of half a lemon and half a gill of cream. Serve with boiled rice in a separate dish.

Endive in velouté:—

Take off all the outer leaves of the endive, and, having opened the hearts, put them into cold water. In the meanwhile heat a kettle of water, put in it a handful of salt, drain, then throw in the endive; keep it constantly under water to prevent it turning black. As soon as the endive is tender, drain, and then put it into cold water, and when quite cold strain, and press it well; then chop it small and put it into a saucepan with some butter, salt, and pepper; stir it well, then add 5 spoonfuls of velouté or thick white sauce, and the same of good stock; reduce it till pretty thick, and before serving stir among it the yolks of 2 eggs. Serve with sippets of fried bread round the dish. This is a delicate vegetable with cutlets, broiled fowl, sausages, &c.

Do try these "little cheese creams," they are lovely and quite new:—

Make a little custard with a gill of milk and the yolks of 2 eggs. While hot, add three sheets of soaked gelatine, season with salt, pepper, and cayenne pepper, and, when quite cold, mix in 2 oz. of grated Parmesan, half a gill of whipped cream, and a few drops of strained lemon-juice. Pour at once into small bouché moulds to set. When required for table, turn the creams on to rounds of tomato aspic, put a sprig of chervil on the top of each, sprinkle lightly with coralline pepper, and garnish with chopped aspic jelly.

To Make Tomato Aspic.—Mix two tablespoonfuls of stiffly-reduced tomato purée with half a pint of cold, liquid aspic, add a teaspoonful of chilli vinegar, mix thoroughly, and pour on to a flat dish to cool. Cut into rounds with a plain, round cutter.

Ever, dear, your loving cousin, MADGE.

On February 8. Demy 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 16s.

THROUGH THE GOLDFIELDS OF ALASKA TO BERING STRAITS.

By Harry de Windt. With Map and 33 Full-page Illustrations.

THE LIFE OF NAPOLEON III.

By Archibald Forbes. With Photogravure Frontispiece and 36 Full-page Illustrations. Demy 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 12s.

"In addition to being the last, this is also the greatest book given to the world by the famous war correspondent, who was an eye-witness of the most momentous scene in the life of the man whose chequered biography he has written."—Morning Leader.

"Everybody is aware that the brilliant war correspondent had many opportunities of studying the Emperor at close quarters, and these pages show that he turned them to good account."—Leeds Mercury.

A WOMAN TEMPTED HIM.

By William Westall, Author of "With the Red Eagle," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

MISS BALMAINE'S PAST.

By B. M. Croker, Author of "Beyond the Pale," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 6s.

"Miss Balmaine is as well drawn and life-like as 'Diana Barrington' or any of her successors."—The World.

THE DISASTER.

By Paul and Victor Margueritte. Translated by Frederic Lees.

MORE TRAMPS ABROAD.

By Mark Twain. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 6s.

"At his best, Mark Twain is a delightful as well as a droll companion—a comedian as resistless as Charles Mathews used to be in 'As Cool as a Cucumber.' . . . We will end by bidding those who are in search of laughter to make haste to take, by proxy at least, 'More Tramps Abroad.'"—Standard.

THIS LITTLE WORLD.

By David Christie Murray. Author of "Joseph's Coat." Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 6s.

"Mr. Murray has never done anything better than this fine story. The incidents are presented with wonderful force and freshness, the action never drags, and in vividness and power of characterisation the story is masterly. . . . It is a book that will add to Mr. Murray's reputation."—Birmingham Post.

TALES IN PROSE AND VERSE.

BY THE RISE OF THE RIVER:

TALES AND SKETCHES IN SOUTH TYNEDALE. By Austin Clare, Author of "For the Love of a Lass," &c. Crown 8vo, buckram, gilt top, 6s.

"The best test of the value and beauty of these stories, which go deep into the pain and pathos, the strife and stress of human life, in quiet scenes and under fair appearances, and also in stirring scenes and amid the play of strong human emotions, is to be found in the fact that the dialect does not materially interfere with the pleasure which the book affords."—The World.

MR. HEINEMANN'S SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

CLEO THE MAGNIFICENT. By Z. Z., Author of "A Drama in Dutch." [This day.

THE WAR OF THE WORLDS. By H. G. Wells, Author of "The Time Machine."

The Spectator.—"As a writer of scientific romance Mr. Wells has never been surpassed. One of the most readable and most exciting works of imaginative fiction published for many a long day. There is not a dull page in it. When once one has taken it up one cannot bear to put it down. It is one of the books which it is imperatively necessary to sit up and finish."

THE TRIUMPH OF DEATH. By Gabriele D'Annunzio.

The Pall Mall Gazette.—"A masterpiece. The story holds and haunts one. . . . A great prose poem that cannot be surpassed. The work of a master—a master whose genius is beyond dispute."

THE FOURTH NAPOLEON. By Charles Benham.

Mr. Zangwill writes.—"Surely one of the most remarkable first books of our day. A daring imagination, a sombre, subtle sense of la comédie humaine, such are the characteristics of this powerful book. . . . . A thoroughness and subtlety which Balzac could not have excelled."

THE BOTH BOOK. By Sarah Grand, Author of "The Heavenly Twins."

The Sketch.—"The book is a complete success, and stands far ahead of the novels of recent date."

THE NIGGER OF THE "NARCISSUS." By Joseph Conrad.

The Literary World.—"A wonderful and fascinating piece of workmanship. An actual and literal transcription of life afloat, partly comedy, partly tragedy, wholly human. The story is one of a hundred in its freshness, vigour, and strength; a book to be read and kept and read again."

THE GOBLIN. By E. L. Voynich.

The St. James's Gazette.—"A very strikingly original romance, which will hold the attention of all who read it, and establish the author's reputation at once for first-rate dramatic ability. Exciting, sinister, even terrifying, we must avow it to be a work of real genius."

THE CHRISTIAN. By Hall Caine.

The Sketch.—"It quivers and palpitates with passion, for even Mr. Caine's bitterest detractors cannot deny that he is the possessor of that rarest of all gifts—genius."

GOD'S FOUNDLING. By A. J. Dawson, Author of "In the Bight of Benin."

London: WM. HEINEMANN, 21, Bedford-street, W.C.

CHRISTINA ROSSETTI:

A Biographical and Critical Study.

By MACKENZIE BELL,

Author of "Spring's Immortality, and other Poems," "Charles Whitehead: a Biographical and Critical Monograph," &c.

"It is natural there should be a demand for a life of so true a poet as the late Christina Rossetti. She was such a beautiful character, and she made so deep an impression upon her friends, that any authentic record of her must be worth reading."—The Times.

"Admirers of a sweet and graceful writer, much of whose work is overlooked by a busy age, will be grateful for this sympathetic biography by Mr. Mackenzie Bell."—The Daily Telegraph.

NOW READY.

MY LIFE IN TWO HEMISPHERES.

By Sir CHARLES GAVAN DUFFY.

In 2 vols. with a Photogravure Portrait to each, 32s.

 This work contains Letters from John Stuart Mill, Cardinal Newman, Thomas Carlyle, Mrs. Carlyle, Richard Cobden, Father Mathew, Leigh Hunt, John Bright, Robert Lowe (Lord Sherbrooke), Sir Emerson Tennant, Sir Arthur Helps, H. E. Childers, John Forster, William Allingham, Clarence Mangan, and from eminent Political Men in Ireland and Australia too numerous to specify.

Daily News:—"These volumes may serve for a history, not only of a man and of a movement, but of a whole nation in one of its most stirring periods. . . . Sir Charles Duffy surveys the entire field of Imperial politics, and there are few men of the first importance whom he is not able to estimate as personal forces."

Daily Chronicle:—"A bright, refreshing narrative, full of valuable information, replete with admirable stories, and abounding in thoughtful and suggestive reflections."

Newcastle Daily Leader:—"We commend Sir C. Duffy's graphic and vigorous pages to all who are sincerely desirous to know the ins and outs of the Irish questions."

NOW READY.

THE GLADSTONE COLONY; an

Unwritten Chapter of Australian History. By JAMES FRANCIS HOGAN, M.P., Author of "The Irish in Australia," "The Australian in London," "Robert Lowe, Viscount Sherbrooke," &c. With a Prefatory Note by the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone. Demy 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

Abridged Contents.—Prefatory Note—The Genesis of the Gladstone Colony—Some Preliminary Proposals—Constitution of the New Colony—Mr. Gladstone Enunciates his Land Policy—The Founding of the Colony—The Veto of Earl Grey—The Vindication of Colonel Barney—The Growth and Development of Gladstone—Experiences of a Pioneer Squatter—The Great Gold Rush—The Correspondence of Sir Maurice O'Connell—A Grevious Error of the Gladstones—Major de Winton—Oldest Living Gladstonian—The Gladstone of To-day—Mr. Gladstone's "True Principles of Colonisation"—Mr. Gladstone and the Colonies—A Couple of Colonial Lectures.

TOURGUÉNEFF and His FRENCH

CIRCLE. A Series of Letters to Flaubert, George Sand, Émile Zola, Guy de Maupassant, Gambetta, and others. Edited by H. HALPÉRINE-KAMINSKY. Translated, and with Preface, by Miss Ethel Arnold. Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

Times:—"This work has been admirably translated into English by Miss Ethel Arnold. . . . The preface contains much sound criticism very felicitously expressed. . . . The merit of the rendering is attested by the easy and idiomatic flow, and by the close correspondence it establishes between the style and the man. . . . In a word, Miss Arnold has treated the book exactly in the right spirit."

The First Edition of 10,000 Copies having been Sold, a Large Second Edition is in Preparation.

THE SCHOOL FOR SAINTS.

By JOHN OLIVER HOBBES. In green cloth, gilt tops, 6s.

SOME SELECTED REVIEWS.

J. L. COURTNEY in the Daily Telegraph:—"'The School for Saints' leaves all earlier sketches and skeletons behind. There is no longer the facile capacity for imitation, but the work of an artist assured of her powers. . . . The maturer thought, the better construction, the rounded perfection of the new volume."

T. P. O'CONNOR, in the Weekly Sun:—"In vigour, truthfulness, and picturesqueness the book is far and away beyond anything John Oliver Hobbes has yet done. It is a new departure that advances to a higher rank one of the very original writers of our times."

The Daily News:—"In her new book the author strikes a higher note than she has yet touched. . . . An extraordinarily fine study of life and character. . . . The story, by its sadness, its romance, its analytical and yet emotional treatment of character, its abounding wit, captivates the reader's attention and holds to the end."

The Standard:—"When all is said we . . . have a serious and masterly piece of work to be grateful for—the elaborate portrait of a very noble soul under the discipline of its 'blank misgivings' in the stress of the world's hard tasks. 'The School for Saints' is an impressive performance."

The Speaker:—"Since 'Lothair' there has been no such vivid reminder of the versatility of Disraeli in literature as the story which Mrs. Craigie calls 'The School for Saints.'"

James's Gazette:—"Mrs. Craigie has something more than the cleverness that is shown in cynical epigram and in smart superficial touches of character. She has thought and reflected on some high and deep subject. . . . To put Disraeli on the stage, and to make him talk as we can imagine that in the circumstances given Disraeli would have talked, is a remarkable feat to accomplish. . . . It is not so much the Disraelian manner that is mimicked as the Disraelian character and view of life. . . . It is a remarkable tour de force."

The Guardian:—"Cast in a style so vigorous, so strong, so supple, and so bright that whatever it touches becomes alert with life and vivid with interest. Wit and epigram are everywhere, and there is even humour in the conception of some of the secondary characters."

A Set of PROSPECTUSES, CATALOGUES, and LISTS, containing descriptive details of Books in every Class of English Literature, will be sent post free to any address on receipt of Card. If desired, arrangements can be made for intending Purchasers to view any Book at the Booksellers'.

MACMILLAN & CO.'S

NEW and RECENT POPULAR NOVELS.

By ROLF BOLDREWOOD.

MY RUN HOME. Crown 8vo, 6s.

Athenæum.—"Rolf Boldrewood's last story is a racy volume. It has many of the best qualities of Whyte Melville, the breezy freshness and vigour of Frank Smedley, with the dash and something of the abandon of Lever. . . . His last volume is one of his best."

By F. MARION CRAWFORD.

CORLEONE: A Tale of Sicily. In 2 vols., globe 8vo, 12s.

Pall Mall Gazette.—"A splendid romance."
Morning Post.—"A delightful novel."
Literature.—"An exciting and dramatic story."

A ROSE OF YESTERDAY. Crown 8vo, 6s.

Speaker.—"It is told with all Mr. Crawford's refinement and subtlety. . . . There is something in 'A Rose of Yesterday' which makes the book linger with a distinct aroma of its own in the reader's memory."

TAQUISARA. Crown 8vo, 6s.

Pall Mall Gazette.—"Cannot fail to be read with interest and pleasure by all to whom clever characterisation and delicate drawing make appeal."

THE RALSTONS. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

Academy.—"A book to be read, and read more than once."

CASA BRACCIO. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

Guardian.—"A very powerful tragedy and a finished work of art."

ADAM JOHNSTONE'S SON. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

Athenæum.—"It need hardly be said that the story is told with great skill."

By Mrs. HUGH FRASER.

A CHAPTER OF ACCIDENTS. Crown 8vo, 6s.

PALLADIA. Crown 8vo, 6s.

Saturday Review.—"It has a capital plot, fascinating characters, and much dramatic interest. . . . A good piece of work, full of interest and humour."

By R. M. JOHNSTON.

OLD TIMES IN MIDDLE GEORGIA.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

Guardian.—"These studies, though also concerned with the long ago, have a delicacy and grace of touch redeemed from softness by quick humour and a delightful play of wit."

Pall Mall Gazette.—"Vignettes of a very high artistic merit. There is quiet ripping humour in them, and the restrained vivid pathos of humble life. Mr. Johnston seems to have caught a glimpse of Charles Dickens's genius."

By JAMES LANE ALLEN.

Seventieth Thousand.

THE CHOIR INVISIBLE. Crown 8vo, 6s.

Speaker.—"We trust there are few who read it who will fail to regard its perusal as one of the new pleasures of their lives. . . . It is, in plain English, a beautiful book—beautiful in language and in sentiment, in design and in execution."

Academy.—"Mr. Allen's narrative skill is but one of the many qualities of a ripe, vigorous, and sympathetic nature. 'The Choir Invisible' is a fine achievement."

By A NEW WRITER.

FOR PRINCE AND PEOPLE. A Tale of Old Genoa.

By E. K. SANDERS. Crown 8vo, 6s.

Standard.—"A romance written not only with considerable historical imagination, but also with a certain distinction of style; and if it is a first effort, it is one full of promise. . . . Each member of the Doria family is drawn vividly and with rapid strokes."

By A. E. W. MASON.

THE COURTSHIP OF MORRICE BUCKLER. Crown 8vo, 6s.

Pall Mall Gazette.—"A right gallant romance of the seventeenth century, which is attractive from one end to the other."—

Spectator.—"A thrilling romance, with a most ingenious and mysterious plot. The story is excellently told."

THE PHILANDERERS. Crown 8vo, 6s.

Daily Telegraph.—"It is light, sparkling, and very well told."
Athenæum.—"Mr. Mason is to be much congratulated on a fine book."

THE FEBRUARY NUMBER

Contains

COUNT LEO TOLSTOI'S ARTICLE,

GUY DE MAUPASSANT AND THE "ART OF FICTION."

And EIGHT COMPLETE STORIES, by Stephen Crane, Beatrice Heron-Maxwell, and Others.

CHAPMAN & HALL, LIMITED, LONDON.

THE HOUSEWIFE:

A thoroughly Practical, Up-to-date, Illustrated Sixpenny Monthly, concerning Everything in and about the Home. Oldest and best of its class. Only ladies' Magazine sympathetically reporting the New Woman Movement.

"WOMEN'S WORK AND WAGES,"

The "Housewife Annual" for 1898, an extra, price 6d., is also to be had of all Booksellers and at Smith's Bookstalls.

The most weird story published for many a day.

A NEW NOVEL by RICHARD MARSH.

FOURTH EDITION, Price 6s., with Illustrations by JOHN WILLIAMSON.

THE BEETLE:

A Mystery!

The Speaker says:—"A story of the most terrific kind is duly recorded in this extremely powerful book. The skill with which its fantastic horrors are presented to us is undeniable."

The Daily Graphic says:—"'It is the kind of book which you put down only for the purpose of turning up the gas and making sure that no person or thing is standing behind your chair—and it is a book which no one will put down until finished except for the reason above described."

The Glasgow Herald says: "The weird horror of this being grows upon the reader. It is difficult, if not impossible, to lay down this book when once begun."

The Academy says: "'Dracula,' by Mr. Bram Stoker, was creepy, but Mr. Marsh goes one, oh! many more than one, better. The surprising and ingenious story succeeds in producing that sensation of horror which should make the flesh of even the least susceptible reader creep."

Answers says:—"Mr. Marsh's famous novel is one of the most enthrallingly interesting narratives of the past few years. I strongly advise all my readers to order the book at once."

The Literary World says:—"An ingenious, weird, and thrilling story, narrated with a clearness of style and a fulness of incident which hold the reader's attention from first to last."

LONDON: SKEFFINGTON & SON, 163, PICCADILLY, W.
Publishers to Her Majesty the Queen and to H.R.H. the Prince of Wales.

LONDON FEVER HOSPITAL, Islington, N.
Over 80,000 sufferers from infectious fevers have been admitted into this Hospital since 1802, and probably ten times as many other persons have thereby been preserved from infection.
Patients pay about one-fourth of their cost, the other three-fourths falling upon the funds of the institution.
The contributions received in 1897 show a serious falling off compared with those of 1896.
ADDITIONAL HELP is URGENTLY NEEDED.
Governors' subscription, one guinea or more for more than one year; Life Governors' donation, ten or more guineas in one sum.
Governors' own domestic servants and certain employés of subscribing firms clubs, and hotels, are treated free of all charge.

ABRIDGED PROSPECTUS

This Company has been formed to acquire from the Vendor about 43,000 acres of Freehold land, also about 60,000 acres of Freehold land from the Mexican Government for cultivation and colonization.

To promote subsidiary companies for the further development of the property, and to establish a trade with the various ports on the Pacific Coast.

The Company was registered on June 25th, 1896, since which time various portions of the lands have been put under cultivation; the results, as will be seen from the photographs referred to hereafter, have been most satisfactory, tobacco, bananas, sugar-cane, maize, melons, &c., having been produced very successfully, besides which, vines, oranges, lemons, limes, pomegranates, figs, dates, and olives, &c., have been cultivated by the previous owners of the property, and the trees are now producing crops of excellent fruit.

The Company's lands are situated in Lower California, Mexico (as shown on the map accompanying the Prospectus), on the Californian Gulf, opposite to the port of Guaymas, which is visited regularly by vessels of the various Pacific Steamship Companies. Guaymas is the terminus for the Southern Pacific Railway, which is in connection with the vast railway systems of Mexico and the United States of America, and is also in direct cable communication with London. The City of Guaymos is about 75 miles distant from the Company's Harbour. This magnificent harbour (Port Paraiso) is three miles long and is capable of accommodating large vessels.

The land has a coast line of about 40 miles, and contains about 100,000 acres, of which about 70,000 acres consist of beautiful level and rich arable lands. The property includes all the fertile lands of the once celebrated Jesuit Mission, Guadaloupe, which produced excellent coffee, tobacco, sugar, cotton, grain, and fruits. A photograph of the ruins of this Mission, also upwards of forty beautiful photographs of the property, showing the crops at present under cultivation on the Company's lands, can be inspected at the Company's offices—these photographs were taken by the Company's own representative sent to inspect the lands and report thereon (see report on back of map accompanying Prospectus).

Facilities will be given to a limited number of young gentlemen, who, having small capital, may desire to proceed to the Company's property and take up portions of land for cultivation. Arrangements would be made for their residence, and also for instructions in farming, fruit growing, &c., with a further prospect of remunerative employment by the Company hereafter. Preference will be given to subscribers for 100 Shares and upwards.

An abundance of very cheap labour is procurable in the neighbourhood.

From the Railway terminus at Guaymas produce can be consigned direct into the heart of the United States of America and Mexico, by the shortest, quickest, and cheapest routes, and in the case of choice fruits, which can be raised in perfection on the Company's coast lands, at least four weeks sooner than in Upper California, the earliest markets and highest prices should be secured.

The highest value may be put upon the Company's property in consequence of the abundance of fresh water for irrigation in such favourable positions as to require very little outlay in using it upon the land.

The River San José, the waters of which flow through the Company's lands at all seasons of the year, can be utilised for irrigating thousands of acres of beautiful level lands in its immediate vicinity.

Three fresh-water lakes, situated near the coast (see map accompanying the Prospectus), which are fed by springs, are full at all seasons, and from the largest lake, San Marcos, which is three miles long and a quarter of a mile wide, several thousand acres of land may be irrigated. This inexhaustible water-supply will ensure regular and unfailing crops.

The climate, which is considered the most equable and salubrious, is entirely free from frost, snow, and excessive rains.

The boundary of the land on the west is a high range of hills and mountains connected with others north and south, rich in minerals.

The Boleo Copper Mines of Rothschilds at Santa Rosalia, adjoining the Company's lands, at present engage thousands of persons.

Gold, Silver, and Copper are known to exist, and the Company, possessing all Mineral Prospecting Rights, will consider the question of developing the same.

It is proposed to plant the first 2,000 acres as follows:—

			Profit.
500	acres of Tobacco, estimated to produce	per annum	£20,000
500	" Sugar Cane, estimated to produce	"	14,000
500	" Maize and other Cereals, estimated to produce	"	10,000
500	" Bananas, the second and subsequent years	"	24,000
2,000	(See detailed Estimates, pages 6 and 7 of the Prospectus.)		£68,000

After deducting £30,000 (for administration, general working expenses, further planting and contingencies), a net profit of £38,000 would remain, which sum would be sufficient to pay a dividend of 25 per cent. on the capital.

No time will be lost in the formation of subsidiary Companies for the further development of the property, the Company leasing or selling portions of the lands to the subsidiary Companies on such terms that considerable profits should be derived by the parent Company either in the shape of a cash purchase price, Shares in such subsidiary Companies, or Royalties, in addition to the Company's own planting and trading operations.

At the present time negotiations are pending which it is hoped will result in the formation of a subsidiary Company for the development of a large area of the Company's land as a tea plantation.

The purchase price has been fixed as follows:—£10,000 in cash and 70,000 in "A" Shares of £1 each, fully paid up; but as to 20,000 of these Shares, the Directors may at their option, instead of allotting the same as part of the purchase consideration, pay the equivalent value thereof in cash, in order to meet the requirements of the Stock Exchange.

Prospectuses, containing particulars of contracts, &c., and Forms of Application may be obtained at the City Bank, Limited, Threadneedle-street, at the [illegible] from the Solicitors.

The LISTS will CLOSE on or before the 2nd February, 1898, for Town, and on the following morning for the Country.

GROSVENOR MANSIONS COMPANY (Limited), Victoria-street, Westminster.

Incorporated under the Companies Acts, 1862 to 1893. Share Capital £120,000, in 12,000 Five per Cent. Cumulative Preference and 12,000 Ordinary Shares of £5 each, of which £22,500 in Preference Shares and £40,000 in Ordinary Shares remain unissued.

ISSUE at PAR of £50,000 FOUR-AND-A-QUARTER PER CENT. FIRST MORTGAGE DEBENTURES of £100 each. The interest is payable half-yearly on the 1st January and 1st July. The full half-year's interest on the Debentures now offered will be paid on the 1st July, 1898.

The Debentures are payable as follows:—£20 on Application, £30 on Allotment, £25 one month after Allotment, £25 two months after Allotment. Payment in full may be made under rebate at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum.

These First Mortgage Debentures are redeemable at par on the 1st January, 1960; they will be secured by a First Mortgage in favour of the Trustees for the Debenture-holders over the whole of property of the Company. The Debentures will be issued with half-yearly interest coupons attached, or, at the option of any Debenture-holder, the interest may be made payable by warrants.

TRUSTEES FOR THE DEBENTURE-HOLDERS.

The City Safe Deposit and Agency Company, Limited, 13 & 15, Throgmorton-avenue, E.C.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

Sir Henry Cartwright, Director of Tottenham and Edmonton Gas Light Company.

Charles John Cox, Esq., Chairman Civil Service Co-operative Society, Limited.

Lieut.-Colonel R. P. Hare, Director Bodega Company, Limited.

BANKERS.—The Capital and Counties Bank, Limited. Head Office: 39, Threadneedle-street, E.C., and Branches.

SOLICITORS.—Messrs. Ashurst, Morris, Crisp, & Co., 17, Throgmorton-avenue, London, E.C.

SECRETARY AND OFFICES (pro tem.).—Mr. J. J. Truran, 183, Gresham House, Old Broad-street, London, E.C.

These Debentures will form the first and only Mortgage on one of the most important properties in Victoria-street, Westminster, numbered 76, 78, 80, 82, 84, and 86, and known as Grosvenor Mansions. The interest is payable half-yearly, the first full half-year's interest from the 1st of January, 1898, being payable on the 1st July next.

The premises, which occupy the large area of between one-third and one-half of an acre, are of imposing elevation with a main entrance in Victoria-street, and a second entrance in Palace-street, and contain eight floors in addition to the basement. They are most substantially built, and are situate within a few minutes' walk of Victoria Station, and of the Army and Navy Stores, about five minutes from St. James's Park, and within little more than half-a-mile of the Houses of Parliament. The commanding frontage to Victoria-street is over 180 feet in length.

The lease, which has over 63 years to run, expires on the 24th day of June, 1961. The Debentures are redeemable on the 1st of January, 1960, and the redemption will be secured under a Sinking Fund policy with the Sun Life Assurance Society.

The premises were erected some twenty years ago in a very substantial manner. They have lately been extensively enlarged at a heavy outlay, two upper floors containing eight additional flats having been added. These are now ready for letting. Further improvements are now in progress, consisting of the erection of an additional lift and a second principal staircase, the utilisation of some of the spare ground, and of the conversion of the ground floor premises into shops, for which there is a great demand in Victoria-street.

It is well known that there is a considerable demand for flats in this favourite locality, and those in Grosvenor Mansions are not only of unusually large size, but light in every part of the building, owing to the fact that the light at the back of the premises is practically unobstructed.

A large number of the flats at Grosvenor Mansions having been let to tenants at a time when rentals were far below their present value, arrangements have lately been completed with most of the tenants to surrender their tenancies on payment of a lump sum. These residences, some of which are being further improved, are now available for being let at rentals representing their actual value. It is anticipated that the whole of these flats will be occupied within a short time. Applications have already been received for several of the shops on the ground floor, and taking the rentals now obtainable for the flats and for the shops, the total rental of the premises when fully let is estimated at £11,300 per annum.

The following is a report on the properties by the well-known surveyor, Mr. B. Tabberer, of 31, Basinghall-street, London, E.C.—

To the GROSVENOR MANSIONS COMPANY, Limited.

10th January, 1898.

Gentlemen,—I beg leave to report that I have made a survey of your property situate in Victoria-street, Westminster, with regard to the rentals obtainable and the consequent value of the leasehold, which I understand has about 64 years unexpired at a ground rent of £4,000 per annum.

The buildings are of very substantial fireproof construction, and situated in one of the best positions for letting in flats. There is also now a great demand for shops in the locality.

When the works now in progress in erecting a new staircase and lift to the block at the corner of Palace-street, the conversion of the whole of the ground floor into shops, and some works which are required in fitting and improving certain of the flats ready for occupation are completed, I am of opinion that a total gross rental of £11,300 would be obtainable, as shown on the schedule accompanying this report.

Taking this return as a basis of calculation, and allowing the necessary deductions for ground rent, rates, taxes, and other outgoings, I consider the value of the property may be fairly estimated at £91,000.

I am, gentlemen, yours faithfully,

(Signed) BENJ. TABBERER, Surveyor, F.R.I.B.A., F.S.I., Surveyor to the Worshipful Company of Pewterers.

Out of the present issue a sum of £10,000 is set aside for the alterations and improvements referred to, and for working capital.

After deducting the ground rent from the rental of £11,200, there will remain a sum of £7,300 per annum, whereas the interest on, and sinking fund for the redemption of, the Debentures require about £2,400, leaving a large balance available for outgoings, dividend on the share capital issued, &c.

Attention is drawn to the present prices of similar Debentures, taken from the Official list of the 19th January, 1898:—

Name of Company.	Stock.	Present Price.
Ashley Gardens Properties, Ltd.	4½ p.c. Debenture Stock	114—117
City Offices Company, Ltd.	3½ p.c. Mort. Debenture Stock	107—110 ex div

Savoy Hotel, Ltd.	4 p.c. 1st Mort. Stock	111—114

The Memorandum and Articles of Association, the Trust Deed securing the First Mortgage Debentures now offered, and the above-mentioned report may be seen at the offices of the Solicitors to the Company.

Where no allotment is made the deposit will be returned in full, and in case of partial allotment the balance of deposit will be applied towards payment of the first instalment. Any further surplus will be returned. If default be made in the payment of any instalment at the due date the deposit and instalments previously paid will be liable to forfeiture.

Debentures will be issued in exchange for the letters of allotment and Bankers' receipt in due course.

Applications for Debentures must be made on the following form or the form accompanying the prospectus, and sent, together with the required deposit, to the Bankers, the Capital and Counties Bank, Limited, or to the Secretary of the Company.

THE MOUNT LYELL FIELD.

INTERVIEW WITH MR. JAMES CROTTY:

In the interests of the shareholding public a representative of "The Financier" waited on Mr. Crotty, so well known in connection with the Mount Lyell field, on Saturday, in order to gain from him information as to the particular Companies in which he is interested, with the result that we are enabled to publish the following particulars :—

"Now, Mr. Crotty, will you be so good as to inform us what Companies you are interested in in the Mount Lyell field?"—"I am only interested in the Companies along the line of hematite defined by us some thirteen years ago, and carefully examined since by us, when we came to the conclusion that these were the only Companies we would have anything to do with. These are the South Mount Lyell Mining Company, the Mount Lyell Mining and Railway Company, the West Mount Lyell, the Lyell Extended, Lyell Consols, North Mount Lyell, Tasman Lyell, and Lyell Comstock."

"Is the Lyell Tharsis not on the line of hematite?"—It is not on the line of hematite; but it is very close to that line, and as the underlie of the formation is westerly, it stands in a very good position to get a portion of the lode at a depth."

"Outside this hematite line you have not a good opinion of the field generally?"—"I have no opinion of the Mount Lyell field outside that line of hematite, which is well defined, the enclosing rocks being conglomerate and quartzite to the east and schist to the west. This hematite is peculiar; on assay some of it is very rich in gold, while it almost invariably gives a trace. Another distinguishing feature is that it contains baryta or heavy spar."

"I notice, Mr. Crotty, a number of registrations of Lyell Companies with not too modest capitals. One of the most recent of this class of Company is the Mount Lyell Proprietary, in which I am assured you are interested."—"I have absolutely nothing to do with it. I know the property well. It was open to us for years and years; but I confined myself, as mentioned, to the hematite line, from which I have no intention of deviating. Here is a plan showing the properties along the line of lode."

"There is one Company whose property is situated to the east of the Mount Lyell Company. I shall be glad if you can give me any information as to its prospects of getting the ore body."—"As regards their nearness to the Mount Lyell ore body on the east, they might be within a foot of that ore body and have not the slightest chance of getting it, as it is proved now that the ore body dips fast to the south and west. In proof of my statement, the No. 5 tunnel in the Mount Lyell Company's property has got the ore body at a depth of nearly 500 ft., and at that depth it has dipped to the west and south about 20 degrees, that is, more than 1 in 4. In other words, it has pitched west and south a distance of 135 ft."

"There is another point that I hear. I hear that the North Mount Lyell and Mount Lyell Mining and Railway Companies are about to amalgamate."—"There is absolutely no truth in that statement. Some people know more about other people's business than they themselves do."

"I should like to ask you a question about the extent of ore body proved on the Mount Lyell Company's property. You will recollect that in a well-known interview which was published last autumn you stated, on the authority of Mr. Sticht, the engineer in charge of that mine, that the ore body proved was 22,500,000 tons. From the report of the proceedings at the recent meeting of shareholders of that Company in Melbourne, the Chairman (Mr. Bowes Kelly) would appear to have discredited the statement made by the general manager. This has occasioned very considerable discussion of the position of the Company, and possibly you may be able to throw some light on the matter."—"The Chairman has placed himself in a very extraordinary position. There is not the slightest doubt that Mr. Sticht's estimates are correct, even to the odd 500,000 tons, which he was very careful to state. He is a gentleman who does not make mistakes, certainly not as regards the affairs of his own Company. If I had made the calculation for myself at the time, as I intended to do, I should certainly have come very near Mr. Sticht's estimate, for the following reasons: The eminent Dr. Peters estimated five years ago that there were 9,200,000 tons of ore in sight. This estimate was made on only 200 feet of the eastern portion of the ore body, the remaining western portion (which amounted to over one-third of the entire mass) not being taken into consideration, as being not sufficiently productive. Since that estimate was made the ore body has been proved to be infinitely greater than Dr. Peters supposed. This must be taken in connection with the fact that not alone the 200 ft. which Dr. Peters reckoned on at that time is being broken and sent to the smelters, but the entire western portion of the ore body is also being dealt with, and to a far greater extent than the richer western portion—that is to say, the whole mass of pyrites from the eastern to the western wall is proved to be productive, and is being treated. In the face of this, Mr. Kelly's statements at the meeting are unwarranted, loose, and misleading, and consequently injurious to the interests of the shareholders. I openly challenge Mr. Kelly to deny, if he can, my statements, and as it is clear he cannot deny them, the only reparation he can make to the shareholders is to voluntarily retire from the directorate."

"Then I conclude that you are not satisfied with the present administration of the Mount Lyell Company's mine?"—"Certainly not; and if I wished to go into this matter just now, which I do not, I have data which would convince the most sceptical that a change in the administration is urgently required. I content myself at the present time by showing you a letter which I have just received from Tasmania fully bearing out what I have stated. Of course, you will understand that I am in close touch with the mine and with everything that is going on there just as well as if I were on the spot."

"May I make an extract from that letter?"—"Certainly, if you care to."—"Thank you, I will."

The extract is as follows :—

Extract from letter from Tasmania to Mr. Crotty, dated December 12th, 1897:

"Mount Lyell Mine—I have visited the open-faced workings pretty frequently of late, and note their course of procedure; they appear to be bringing in the benching pretty regularly—that is, taking all before them from foot to hanging wall, although, if anything, the hanging or low-grade side is extended the furthest. The idea seems to be to keep the ore grade at about its lowest paying limit; very little ore is being produced from the south drive No. 4 tunnel, although the various winzes, rises, and stopes show really good grade material. Along the hematite on surface No. 2 and 2½ benches some very nice ore is showing, but these parts are further projecting than the same level hanging wall, or poor side, showing that the principle for breaking the ore for smelting is to keep the average at about 4 to 4½ per cent. If the whole width of the deposit were taken in exactly even, or at right angles to its length, the grade would be much higher, as the richer and considerably deeper portion of the ore body is on the footwall, the slope of the hill being from the hematite towards a small break (gully) along the hanging wall; and, as the benches are level, it will easily be seen that more ore comes off (or should do) the hematite side than the hanging-wall side, if the benches are kept continuously going at right angles to the direction of ore body. The south drive No. 4 tunnel is now carried along for 810 ft., showing the pyrites deposit to still continue solid and of average value. A cross-cut from this level to the outer wall has been made, and shows that the ore body is not making so much westerly as formerly, although, on the whole, the trend is south-west."

"From what I gather it is obviously your opinion that the present quotation of the Mount Lyell Company's shares is below their intrinsic value?"—"Most certainly; and they are bound to advance, in spite of maladministration. The shareholders will move in their own interests immediately they realise their true position. Even now there is no dividend-paying mining stock on the London market that can be named in the same breath with Mount Lyell."

"I presume that you have nothing further to add about the North Mount Lyell, as you have so recently met the shareholders."—"Nothing more than that the advices to hand by to-day's mail most explicitly confirm all that has been said as to the great future of the Company's mine."

"I am sorry to trouble you at such length."—"I am only too pleased to have had the opportunity of replying to your questions."—Financier, Jan. 24th.

THE ORE BODY of the MOUNT LYELL MINING and RAILWAY COMPANY, Limited.

"In another column will be found a letter from a 'Mount Lyell Shareholder' in reference to the estimated quantity of ore in the Mount Lyell Mine. We are pleased that our attention has been drawn to the matter by one interested in the property, and hope now to give an explanation that will fully satisfy the shareholders in the Mount Lyell Mining and Railway Company and the public generally.

"At the last half-yearly meeting of the Mount Lyell Mining and Railway Company (Limited), held at Melbourne on the 26th ult., an account of which appeared in a previous issue, the usual formal proceedings were, to the astonishment and dismay of the shareholders, diversified by an ill-timed exhibition of the Chairman's quality as a person of humour and sagacity. The episode demands serious notice, not only on account of its deplorable result in the sudden fall of the Company's shares, but for its ominous revelation of a source of possible recurring danger to the Company's interests in the future. In this community, where the Chairman is well known, his utterances could under no circumstances excite particular interest, and certainly nobody would seek for an explanation of his remarks in any supposed subtle policy of breaking down the value of the Company's shares in emulation of the late Jay Gould. His deadliest enemies, if he has any, would admit that Mr. Bowes Kelly is not a Jay Gould, and that, by the natural limitations of his intellectual equipment, he never will be. Any suggestions, therefore, of the Napoleonic projects for adding to his existing holding by the masterful method of creating a panic, designed to flood the market with the scrip of alarmed shareholders, may be dismissed at once. Other persons in the background may have had such designs and may have already profited at the expense of the shareholders, as they have profited in the past, but obviously no such aim need be attributed to Mr. Bowes Kelly. But if mischief is done, the consequences are not mitigated by the absence of evil intent on the part of the mischief-maker.

"The shareholders in the Mount Lyell Company are a numerous body, and as a large number of them live in remote parts beyond the seas, it is important that those to whom they have entrusted the management of their interests should in their public appearances act and speak with at least ordinary wisdom and decorum. Having no reason to doubt that they are thus efficiently represented, and accustomed as they are to see only men of ripe experience, proved capacity and attainment at the head of colossal enterprises, they are apt to assume that the same rule holds good here, and therefore the explanation of Mr. Kelly's display, which is so obvious to those who understand the position here, is the very one that distant shareholders are least likely to adopt. They will suspect unpleasant motives where we on this side recognise mere gaucherie. It is a sorry explanation, and hardly less damaging than the one which all but those acquainted with him can perceive to be the true one. It is not Mr. Bowes Kelly's fault that he is a round peg in a square hole, and that as Chairman of such a Board of Directors he occupies a position in which he must always command the sympathy of his best friends. With a stock-whip in his fist, securing the plains of Riverina on horseback, they might, for anything we know, feel proud of his skill in an occupation for which nature and training had so admirably fitted him. But to elevate him to the Chairmanship of a great Company was to place him where, amongst many delicate and difficult duties requiring a commercial education, he would have to occasionally open his mouth with the always imminent danger of 'putting his foot in it,' to the possible detriment of his own as well as other people's interests. And that is what has happened at the recent half-yearly meeting; and the danger is that he is just as likely to say what he doesn't mean on the very next emergency. While nothing certainly was farther from his intention, he contrived, by mere blundering maladroitness of speech, to stultify and belittle the manager and to disparage the mine. But Mr. Bowes Kelly's gifts of unpremeditated speech are not known to shareholders abroad, who naturally picture him as the ordinary careful-speaking Chairman of their acquaintance, and our readers can imagine the perplexity and alarm with which they will peruse the report when it appears in the London Press. His ambiguous statement with regard to the ore in the mine, that there is 'plenty there for the next few years,' will inevitably suggest the ridiculously false impression that the estimate of its size has been revised, and that its present extent is ascertained to be even less than that given by Dr. Peters, after the deduction of 50 per cent. from his own estimates of five years ago. Most people would regard thirty-six years as considerably more than 'a few years' in the life either of a mine or an individual. And yet, at its present rate of working, it will take the Company absolutely thirty-six years to smelt its ores, supposing that not a ton more had been discovered since Dr. Peters calculated the minimum quantity five years ago. That Dr. Peters' figures were under the mark he himself admitted at the time, and they have long since been proved to have been so; and if the work of the past five years has not demonstrated that the mine is bigger by many millions of tons than Dr. Peters' largest estimate, then the Company's half-yearly reports for years past have been a series of lying fables. But we are told that Mr. Bowes Kelly, when he used the phrase 'a few years,' accompanied the words with a significant expression of the countenance, implying that by 'a few years' he meant 'many years.' This we can well believe; but, unfortunately, Mr. Bowes Kelly's expressive countenance and knowing wink cannot be distributed broadcast, and absent shareholders must peruse the report in cold type, unassisted by the explanatory smirk which happily reassured the meeting, including the irrelevant and intruding Tapp, who was so mysteriously 'turned on' for the occasion. But the whole affair was a sorry and silly exhibition. Whether Mr. Sticht was in error or not to the extent of several millions of tons, or to any extent at all, is a question which does not practically concern this generation of shareholders and the paltry quibbling at his totals has left no impression upon those who personally know the mine and its brilliant manager. Our hope is that the distinguished position which Mr. Sticht holds in his profession, acknowledged as it is in the best scientific circles of Europe and America, will help somewhat to neutralise the mischief to which the Chairman's utterances may give rise. With regard to Mr. Sticht personally, whether Mr. Bowes Kelly's insulting innuendoes were serious, or whether they represented merely a crude and elephantine humour peculiar to himself, we do not pretend to determine. They were unpardonable in any view, and their perusal must bring a flush of shame and indignation to the cheek of every one at Mount Lyell and elsewhere who knows that, eminent as Mr. Sticht is in his profession, he will always be as highly respected and admired in his character of gentleman."—MOUNT LYELL STANDARD, Dec. 15, 1897.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 986.

The Prize in this Competition has been awarded to ROUGHTY for the following Epitaph on A. A Prime Minister. B. A 'Bus Conductor. C. A Low Comedian. D. A Railway Guard. E. A Stockbroker :—

A. Gone out with the flowing Tide. B. He has taken his last fare well. C. One whom the "gods" loved. D. Tipped off the track. E. Waiting for the settling day.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 989.

A careful collation of the lists received (some of which were published in TRUTH for January 27) shows that the following Epitaphs were selected by the largest number of competitors :—A. A prey to dissolution.—Mac. B. He has taken his last fare well.—Roughty, Granite, Ooloo, &c. C. One whom the "gods" loved.—Roughty. D. We must all travel in his train.—Elk. E. He died because he had no option.—Quilp. No competitor included all these in his or her list; but SCOTUS VIATOR selected three out of the five, and the Prize will therefore be awarded to him.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 993.

Many requests have been made for another Translation Competition, and accordingly the usual prize is offered this week for

THE BEST RENDERING INTO ENGLISH RHYMED VERSE OF THE FOLLOWING STANZAS FROM THE LATE MR. DU MAURIER'S WELL-KNOWN NOVEL "TRILBY."

As many would-be competitors may not have a copy of "Trilby" at hand, I append the stanzas in question, which are to be found on pages 291-2 of the novel. It will be remembered that the Laird and his friend made a pilgrimage to the studio they remembered so well. There, as they examined the relics of the past still remaining, they found, the author tells us, "under a square of plate-glass fixed on the wall by an oak frame, Little Billee's old black and white and red chalk sketch of Trilby's left foot, as fresh as if done only yesterday. Over it was written, 'Souvenir de la Grande Trilby, par W. B. (Litrebill).' And beneath, carefully engrossed on imperishable parchment, and pasted on the glass, the following stanzas :—

"'Pauvre Trilby—la belle et bonne et chère!
Je suis son pied. Devine qui voudra
Quel tendre ami, la chérissant naguère,
Encadra d'elle (et d'un amour sincère)
Ce souvenir charmant qu'un caprice inspira—
Qu'un souffle emportera!

"J'étais jumeau: qu'est devenu mon frère?
Hélas! Hélas! L'Amour nous egara.
L'Eternité nous unira, J'espère;
Et nous ferons comme autrefois la paire
Au fond d'un lit bien chaste où nul ne troublera
Trilby—qui dormira.

"O tendre ami, sans nous qu'allez-vous faire?
La porte est close où Trilby demeura.
Le Paradis et loin . . . et sur la terre
(Qui nous fut douce et lui sera légère)
Pour trouver nos pareils, si bien qu'on cherchera—
Beau chercher l'on aura!'"

A literal translation is not asked for; but competitors should keep as closely to the original, both in sense and metre, as they can. In no case must the number of lines in the original be exceeded. All versions of the stanzas intended for competition must reach me by the morning of Monday, February 14, at the latest.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

QUOTATIONS FROM POETS WHO WROTE IN ENGLISH DURING THE PRESENT CENTURY CONTAINING THE NAMES OF TOWNS AND CITIES IN ENGLAND AND WALES.

 It may be said at once that the results of this Competition have fairly astonished me. Competitors have, in several instances, succeeded in finding such a large number of quotations that it is impossible to make room to print even one of the longer lists in its completeness. COMMA, for example, claims to have found 524 quotations. It has been thought well, therefore, to print one of the shorter lists, and I have chosen for this purpose that sent by ABBOT. By next week I hope to be able to carefully examine all the lists received, and to announce the Prize Winner's name.

ENTRE NOUS.

THE Queen is to return from Osborne to Windsor Castle next week, probably on Thursday, accompanied by Princess Beatrice and Princess Louis of Battenberg, who are going with her Majesty to the Riviera, starting on March 8 or 9. The Queen will not visit London until May 2 or 3, when her Majesty is coming up to Buckingham Palace for three days.

After Royal favours have been for so many years lavished upon the Army almost exclusively, it is satisfactory to find that the Queen has at last remembered the existence of the Navy. It may be hoped that her Majesty's reception of the officers and men of the St. George in the Indian Room at Osborne last Wednesday will be the beginning of a new era in these matters. Prince Louis of Battenberg, whose hearty interest in the Navy is well known, is said to have originated this function by suggesting it to Princess Beatrice. The men were entertained at luncheon in the stables after they left the Indian Room, and the officers refreshed themselves at a buffet in the billiard-room. The Queen sat in a low chair on the north side of the room, with Princess Beatrice on one side and Princess Louis of Battenberg on the other. The officers of the St. George were presented by Sir Michael Culme Seymour, and then the men passed through the room, each man halting before the Queen's chair and saluting.

A daily paper professes to give particulars of the Queen's daily life at Cimiez, according to which her Majesty breakfasts in the private garden of the hotel at ten, and dines at eight. As a matter of fact, the Queen takes a light breakfast in her own rooms at nine o'clock, and afterwards goes out for about an hour in her donkey chair. The time between eleven and half-past one is devoted by the Queen to business, Sir Arthur Bigge and his assistant (usually Colonel Carington) working simultaneously in another room. Luncheon is served at two, and at half-past three the Queen starts on her drive, seldom returning until past seven. Tea is always served in the course of the drive. Dinner is at a quarter to nine, the same hour as at Windsor Castle. The drive is often postponed until four o'clock, in order that the Queen may receive visitors at three o'clock, and, as a rule, there are guests at dinner. Last year Royalties were literally swarming on the Riviera when the Queen was at Cimiez, and her Majesty was consequently quite overwhelmed with company.

The Prince of Wales is to arrive at Marlborough House from Sandringham next Monday, and the Princess and Princess Victoria are coming to town about the 21st. The Royal party are to pay a "dine and sleep" visit to the Queen at Windsor Castle on the 22nd or 23rd, and on the evening of Saturday, the 26th, the Prince is to leave London for Paris on his way to Cannes. The Princess and Princess Victoria will stay in town for a few days longer before proceeding to Copenhagen, where they are to travel by way of Calais, Brussels, Cologne, and Hamburg; and they may possibly break the journey by a brief visit to King Christian's sister, the Duchess of Anhalt-Bernburg, at Ballenstedt.

At the beginning of April, the Prince of Wales will return to England, and H.R.H. intends to spend the Easter holidays at Sandringham, and will come to town for the season on Monday, April 18. The Princess and Princess Victoria are to return from Denmark about April 28, but the date of their departure from Copenhagen will depend upon the arrangements for the wedding of Prince Christian, eldest son of the Crown Prince, and the Duchess Alexandrina of Mecklenburg-Schwerin, which is to take place directly after Easter. It is not yet settled whether this marriage is to be celebrated at Cannes or at Copenhagen.

The Prince of Wales's sale of shire horses from the Royal Stud Farm at Wolferton, near Sandringham, is to take place on Friday, at one o'clock, after luncheon, which will be served in an immense tent at twelve, H.R.H. being in the chair. There are fifty-four shire mares, fillies, and stallions in the catalogue, and the sale will be entirely without reserve. These animals are all grandly bred, and several of them are prize winners. The Prince and Princess of Wales will entertain a large party at Sandringham for the sale, the guests being invited to dine and sleep at the Hall to-morrow.

The Duke and Duchess of York, who are to arrive in town next week from Sandringham for the season, will go to Copenhagen for the celebration of King Christian's eightieth birthday on April 8. The Duchess of York is herself nearly related to the Royal Family of Denmark, the Duchess of Teck having been a first cousin of Queen Louise.

The first "house party" of the season, which assembled last week at Dublin Castle, before the Levee day, was a large one. It included Lord Londonderry and Lady Helen Stewart, Lady Headfort, and Lady Beatrice Taylour, Lord and Lady Dudley, Lady Annesley, Lord and Lady Clonbrock, Miss Dillon, Lady Coventry, Lady Dorothy Coventry, Lord Castlereagh, Ladies D. Long and Mary Currie, Miss Farquharson, and others. Lord and Lady Lurgan also arrived at Dublin Castle, where Lord Lurgan holds the place of State Steward in the Viceregal Household.

The Irish Viceregal Household is sufficiently imposing in numbers to keep up the dignity of a Court. Only the jobs which Viceroys persist in, with regard to retaining old officials and making the Upper Castle a kind of home for pensioners, brings it into disrepute. A "Castle" clique is created and made a fixture, which does a good deal of jobbing on its own account. The establishment consists of a State Steward, Comptroller, Chamberlain, and Master of the Horse, one Gentleman Usher, four Gentlemen-in-Waiting, four Private Secretaries, four paid Aides-de-Camp, and four unpaid. The salaries are on a strictly economic scale, and the work chiefly ornamental.

The first Levee, to inaugurate the Dublin Castle season was held last week, over 900 attending it.

Everybody in Dublin has been laughing at the egregious exhibition a certain high and mighty lord has been making of himself. He is a life member of the Royal Dublin Society, and he wrote the following entry in the complaint book at that institution :—

> I had occasion to refer to "Burke's Peerage" while here this day. I inquired first from a female who sits at the table, who referred to a boy by a wave of the hand, and I was brought one (sic.) for 1893, which is of no use. When I asked for complaint book the female at the head of the table insisted for some time on my using a book which contains the names of proposers and seconders of members, until I gave my name, when she condescended to wave the same boy downstairs and bring up this book (sic.). I think her impertinent in demeanour. . . . .

It will be seen that, under the stress of his emotion, this haughty peer became somewhat incoherent as well as decidedly impolite. There are now further entries in the complaint-book in which other members severely criticise his attack upon the lady librarian, whom he so contemptuously describes as "the female." It is suggested by one of his fellow members that his lordship's high sense of his own dignity and importance was shocked by the omission of the lady to rise up, then fall down and cry "Hail to the great lord ——"; and some of the other remarks are still more personal and caustic. In fairness to the nobleman in question, it may be added that he did not object—as spiteful people might suppose—to the 1893 "Burke" because it was too ancient to contain the record of his own elevation to the peerage. His title dates back so far as 1889.

Lord Carlingford was an excellent administrator and a remarkably luminous speaker. He was in office for more than thirty years under Lord Palmerston and Mr. Gladstone, and sat in several Cabinets. He practically retired from society on the death of his wife in 1879, and he took no part in public affairs after the fall of Mr. Gladstone's Administration in 1885. He had been in failing health for more than ten years, and he divided his time between his place in Somersetshire, the Engadine, and his place in Ireland. His marriage with Lady Waldegrave, which gave him a great social position, was a very happy one, but she left her affairs in a seriously embarrassed state, and Lord Carlingford devoted himself for a long time to paying off debts and nursing the estates in Somersetshire and Essex, which now pass to Lord Waldegrave. Lord Carlingford was always most genial and hospitable, and he had a charming manner and talked remarkably well. He was a fine scholar, and very accomplished, with an excellent and well-cultivated taste in art and literature. His death will be sincerely deplored by his tenants and his country neighbours, and he will be regretted by many former friends who had not seen him for years.

During the time when he held the office of Chief Secretary of Ireland, Lord Carlingford was well known in Irish Society. Of late he usually spent some months every year at Ravensdale, his picturesque place in Louth. Never was the Chief Secretary's Lodge such a brilliant centre of Society as in Lady Waldegrave's time. She used her social talents there as at Strawberry Hill, and practised her gift of discovering all the gifted amongst those whom she met. Her large mind made her superior to narrow exclusiveness. Society, as cultivated by her, was worthy of the name.

I see it stated in a newspaper that the Marquise di Santurce bought her title. This is a mistake. She had known the late King of Spain well in his days of exile, and when he resided in England. On his attaining the throne he made Mr. Murrieta a Marquis, and it is in this way that Mrs. Murrieta became a Marquise: there was no buying in the matter.

Colonel Ibbetson, who died last week, devoted himself to playing whist and to reading. He was best known through his sensational elopement from Brighton to Gretna Green, in 1845, with Lady Adele Villiers, daughter of Lord and Lady Jersey, and sister of the famous beauty, Lady Clementina Villiers. Their mother, Lady Jersey, figures in several of Lord Beaconsfield's novels as Lady St. Julian. Ibbetson was then a very handsome man, and a dashing officer of the 10th Hussars. There was a story that Lady Adele (who had been brought up in Olympian exclusiveness), writing during her honeymoon to her prime confidante, from her father-in-law's house, thus finished an enthusiastic description of the place :—

Indeed, my dear, till now I had not the slightest notion of the style in which these sort of people live.

Mr. Sydney Buxton, in a letter I have just had from him, tells me that the Society for the Protection of Birds, of which he is the president, finds its chief difficulty in combating the ignorance of ladies in regard to the amount of cruelty perpetrated in obtaining feathers for millinery purposes. It is not my fault if this ignorance prevails among the readers of TRUTH, for the subject has been frequently dealt with in these columns. It seems, however, that, in spite of all that has been said, the destruction of the white egret during the breeding season for the purpose of obtaining the so-called "osprey" plumes and "aigrettes" for ladies' hats and bonnets still goes on as mercilessly as ever, and the complete extermination of the breed cannot be far distant. The extent of the slaughter may be judged from the fact that a single bird in good plumage only produces about one-sixth of an ounce of feathers, so that a fine showy aigrette represents the destruction of several birds. A firm in the feather trade sold at one sale last year 11,352 ounces of osprey plumes. From this it is easy to judge of the extent of the massacre that goes on every year.

In conversation the other day with a coach-builder, I was told that the roofs of broughams have been raised of late in order to accommodate the hats of ladies, and a good deal of business has also been done in lowering the seats of carriages built before headgear rose to the height which it has recently attained. It is not only the egret, therefore, that bleeds to provide ladies with the millinery they fancy. Husbands and fathers have their turn too.

A singular omission occurs in a specimen portion of a commercial chart of the world which Messrs. W. & A. K. Johnston, the well-known map publishers, are issuing. In that part of the chart showing the South African Republic, Pretoria and other smaller places are duly marked and named, but not a trace can be discovered of Johannesburg. The "gold reef city," as our poetical Poet Austin called it in a famous ode, seems, in fact, to have entirely disappeared from the face of the earth. Is this a mere oversight? or is it a sinister prophecy?

One of the latest dodges of the pushful tradesman is to place with hotel managers cards of invitation to view his wares, which are addressed and delivered to the guests, the understanding being that the manager receives a commission on any orders booked in this way. Probably many visitors staying in London hotels at present have been favoured with attractive invitations to visit a certain art gallery in the West End. The invitations are explained by the fact above mentioned. The best hotels, of course, set their faces against practices of this kind, but possibly in many cases they are carried on by managers, or even waiters, without the knowledge of the proprietors.

It was Mark Twain, if I remember rightly, who pointed out the ingratitude and inconsistency of the human race in neglecting, during all these years, to put up a memorial to Adam, to whom (under Providence) the whole race practically owes its existence, while erecting monuments to so many worthies of later date, whose services to posterity are comparatively insignificant. We are getting on in that direction, however. King Alfred is to have a commemoration, and (I take for granted) a statue. Hengist and Horsa will no doubt have their turn next. There is hope for Adam yet. Everything comes to him who can wait.

I trust that the Mayor of Winchester will pardon me for not publishing the letter which he has sent round to the Press on the subject of the Alfred millenary festival. It has had so much publicity that a little more or less cannot make much difference, and, upon my word, I don't know that I can get up much enthusiasm about the deceased monarch. Not that I have a word to say against his public character or his private life. For a king and a successful man Alfred seems to have been a highly estimable individual—something between General Gordon and the late Prince Consort. But what weighs with me is the possibility of a statue. In view of what we see around us, the man who does anything which may add to the number of our graven images of defunct worthies incurs a grave responsibility. It is a risk, too, to which we ought never lightly to expose the great dead; and when a man has escaped a statue for a thousand years, his claim to be let off altogether becomes so much the stronger. You have also to remember that even if we erect a statue to our own satisfaction, it is ten to one that posterity pronounces it an eyesore, and sells it for old iron, or removes it to some decent hiding-place—witness the fate of the Iron Duke, late of Hyde Park Corner.

My Paris correspondent seems to have erred last week in speaking of "a Duc de La Rochefoucauld" as married to a "Mademoiselle Rumboldt." The lady referred to is apparently Miss Rumbold, sister of Sir Horace Rumbold, who married Comte Gaston de La Rochefoucauld.

It has often struck me when perusing a new number of some of the cheaper monthlies that the multiplication of fly-leaf advertisements between their pages is becoming an intolerable nuisance. I have refrained from complaining on my own behalf, but during the last two or three months I have been fortified by the receipt of several letters suggesting that the evil is one calling for notice in Truth; and at last I am emboldened to speak by a gentleman who forwards by parcel post a huge bundle of these advertisements, culled from the February number of a popular monthly. By all accounts competition in the magazine business is extremely brisk. I suggest to any proprietor of one of these publications who feels the stress, that it would be good business to exclude loose advertisements, and announce the fact to the public. To say nothing of the annoyance of having your reading interrupted, can anything be more irritating than to have your floor littered with tradesmen's handbills every time you open a magazine?

After all, however, the loose fly-leaf is a small abomination compared with the interleaved advertisements which are now part and parcel of so many periodicals. Speaking as an editor, it would seem to me an impertinence to thrust on my readers a page full of somebody's soap or somebody else's corsets in the middle of an article or a story; and how the public stand this sort of thing to the extent they do I confess I do not understand. It can only be, I suppose, because they are glad of any temporary relief from the literary matter offered to them.

The writer of a Queer Story, published in a recent number of Truth, wound up with the following sentence:—"I leave it to wiser men than I to analyse the process." A schoolmaster challenges the accuracy of the expression "I leave it to wiser men than I." It ought, he says, to be "wiser men than me," or "than myself." Heaven forbid that I should argue this point, especially with a professional grammarian. If, however, the construction is wrong, the error is a very common one, and I fear I am falling into it myself almost every day. It would seem, moreover, that greater authorities than I (or should it be "than me"?) have fallen into the same blunder. I turn to the first authority I have at hand, "Webster's Dictionary," and I find "than" defined as "a particle expressing comparison," and "usually followed by the object compared in the nominative case." Instances are given. "Sometimes, however," says Webster, "the object compared is placed in the objective case, and 'than' is then considered by some grammarians as a preposition." As an example of this he quotes no less an authority than Milton, who speaks of "Beelzebub . . . . than whom, Satan except, none higher sat." The inference which I draw from this is, that the usage even of high literary authorities is divided upon this point, and that if grammarians deny this, it is only because their literary knowledge is defective. I imagine that the use of the nominative after "than" in a sentence like that penned by the writer of my Queer Story, is to be explained on the ground that the sentence is elliptical, the full form of it being, "I leave it to wiser men than I am." Perhaps I had better say, in conclusion, that I do not invite further correspondence on this subject.

The Lord Chancellor appears to be decidedly eccentric in his dispensation of Church patronage. The Rev. Edgar Sheppard has been appointed to a residentiary stall at Gloucester on condition that he resigns his office as Sub-Dean of the Chapel Royal. This stall is worth only about £350 a year, with house. A few months ago Canon Hervey, Rector of Sandringham, was appointed by the same Lord Halsbury to a stall at Norwich, value £650 a year, with house, but in his case there was no stipulation that he should vacate his benefice. There really ought to be one weight and one measure for all ecclesiastics in these matters, instead of a special arrangement being made for each case, as caprice, or friendship, or pure and simple favouritism may suggest. If Mr. Sheppard is forbidden to hold other preferment with a canonry of £350 a year, why, in the name of common-sense and common fairness, should Canon Hervey be allowed to retain his living in spite of his appointment to a canonry of £650 a year? It is, besides, highly objectionable that a clergyman should hold a living with a canonry, and there are now very few cases indeed where such pluralities are permitted. Canon Hervey cannot possibly devote himself to the diocesan and other duties at Norwich, which he ought to undertake, and at the same time carry on his work properly in the parish of Sandringham, which is quite at the other end of Norfolk.

The fact is that Lord Halsbury has sanctioned this exceedingly unsatisfactory arrangement simply from a wish to please certain members of the Royal Family with whom Canon Hervey is a favourite, and it is discreditable that the understanding not to permit pluralities, which has generally prevailed for some years, should be audaciously ignored in this case. There are now very few residentiary canons who hold livings, as compared with the number twenty years ago, and the vigorous remonstrances of the Press have done something to put an end to such abuses, as to which the Church papers observe a stupid silence. Canons Rawlinson (Canterbury), Fleming (York), Knox-Little (Worcester), and Duckworth (Westminster), all hold benefices along with their stalls. Canon Duckworth's case is the worst, for he has a stall of £1,000 a year, with a Crown living of £1,000 a year, and two excellent residences.

Mr. G. J. Talbot, who recently succeeded Sir Walter Phillimore as Chancellor of the Diocese of Lincoln, has been appointed by the Bishop of Ely to the same office in his diocese, the post being vacant in consequence of Mr. Albert Grey having received a place in the House of Lords. The High Church party are anxious that the patent granted to all new Chancellors should be so framed as to make this official entirely subservient to the Bishop. It is well known that at York Lord Grimthorpe exercises a free hand, as the terms of his patent enable him to override the Archbishop in various ministerial matters, notably in the issue of marriage licences.

The valuable living of Houghton-le-Spring, which is worth about £1,200 a year, and is in the gift of the Bishop of Durham, has become vacant by the resignation of Canon Norman, who was appointed a few years ago, on the death of the Rev. John Grey, a son of Earl Grey, the Minister, who was rector of the parish for nearly half a century, having been presented by Bishop Maltby. Canon Norman is retiring through ill-health. Houghton-le-Spring was formerly worth upwards of £3,000 a year, and it was at one time held by the celebrated Bernard Gilpin.

The Archbishop of Canterbury calls attention to the united temperance movement which is now taking place, with the view to securing, during the present year's session of Parliament, an Act for compulsorily closing all public-houses on Sundays throughout the United Kingdom. I must not for one moment be supposed to champion the cause of drunkenness when I venture to question the "benefits" which have accrued to Scotland and Wales through the possession of this piece of legislation, or if I fail to see "that the great class which lives by manual labour would heartily welcome such an Act of Parliament." Even if it were admitted that the cause of sobriety would be advanced thereby, I still think that the comfort and convenience of the many should not be sacrificed to an unpopular endeavour to check the shortcomings of a weak few; neither do I think that the total abstainers have any right to force upon others a deprivation which is no sacrifice to themselves.

I do not know who is looking after the affairs of the Diocese of Salisbury during the Bishop's absence abroad, but I would suggest to his lordship's locum tenens, whoever he may be, that the parish of Damerham is in urgent need of his good offices. On two consecutive Sundays last month the parish church was entirely closed, the Vicar (the Rev. W. Owen) neither holding any service himself nor arranging for anybody else to take his place. I am told that similar neglect of duty has occurred on previous occasions, and it seems time, therefore, that Mr. Owen was reminded that the parishioners are entitled to the ministrations for which he is paid £400 a year.

The address of Canon McLarney, Rector of Clonfert, is Banagher, not Benaghet as given in last week's Truth. I trust that this correction may be in time to prevent any subscriptions to the Clonfert Cathedral Restoration Fund from going astray.

Two of the young women who rattle collecting-boxes in the faces of every passer-by at street corners and railway stations were last week prosecuted by the District Railway Company for trespassing, in spite of repeated warnings, at Charing Cross Station. The Company deserves the thanks of the public for undertaking the prosecution, and it is a pity that Sir James Vaughan did not impose a heavier fine than 5s. for the offence. Not only are these collectors a public nuisance, but the funds and institutions for which they collect are mostly of a shady character. The Hospital Saturday Fund has now abandoned the street-collecting business, and it is high time that some steps were taken to stop it altogether. It ought to be for the police, and not for railway companies or private individuals, to prosecute beggars of this class.

It should be clearly understood, both by the public who part with coppers under such solicitation and by the police whose business it is to stop begging in the streets, that the young women who go about in this way are begging for themselves quite as much as for the funds they nominally represent. In the Charing Cross case the two collectors were working for a so-called Metropolitan Provincial Association which professes to give "free meals to the children of the slums." The promoter, manager, and treasurer of this fund is a Mr. F. Harris. Although this gentleman publishes audited accounts, the public have practically to take his word for the financial regularity of his operations, which, with all respect to Mr. Harris, is not a satisfactory state of things. This much, at any rate, is certain, that the collectors get 25 per cent. on the takings in the boxes, not to mention other expenses of administration. Out of every £1, therefore, which is put into her box, the collector gets 5s. for herself, and it is very doubtful whether out of the whole amount collected as much as 10s. in the pound ever goes to the nominal object. The people who encourage "charity" in this shape must be indeed fools.

I have several times commended to the favourable consideration of my readers the very excellent little work carried on at a very small outlay by the London Spectacle Mission Society, which supplies spectacles at trifling cost to workers in poor circumstances who need them. I hear from the honorary secretary, Miss Waring, of 197, Sutherland-avenue, W., that the work is still growing, and that the Society hope, if the means are forthcoming, to carry their operations this year into the East End. Doubtless many will be ready to assist in enlarging the undertaking.

Up to the present, the War Office apologists have not come off particularly well in their attempts to refute Mr. Arnold Forster. Seldom has a more crushing rejoinder been delivered than that with which that gentleman favoured Colonel Bulwer. The Colonel undertook to deny Mr. Arnold Forster's remark that "not one of the officers who hold the British Army in the hollow of their hand have had one day of experience as officers commanding a battalion." Colonel Bulwer answered by citing the case of Sir Evelyn Wood and ten or eleven other officers employed at the War Office. He omitted, however, the Commander-in-Chief, the late Adjutant-General, Sir F. W. Grenfell, and several other officers in high positions. The retort of Mr. Arnold Forster is highly instructive. Although it is true that Sir Evelyn Wood nominally commanded a battalion for thirteen months, he was during the whole of that time absent on staff duty in South Africa. Lord Wolseley has only had five years' regimental service, and never rose above the rank of captain in that time. Sir Redvers Buller, though he had sixteen years' regimental service, never rose in that time above the rank of captain. Thus, looking at those who have "held the British Army in the hollow of their hand" for the better part of the last five years, the Commander-in-Chief and the Adjutant-General only served regimentally as subalterns and captains, while the Quartermaster-General only served actively up to the rank of major. On the other hand, seven of the principal officers at the Admiralty have each served as Commander and Captain for periods ranging from twelve up to eighteen years. These facts may account for a good deal of the difference between the work of the two Departments, as shown by results.

I will say one thing, however, for the War Office under the present régime. It is showing a certain amount of readiness to take advice. The provision for Reservists to rejoin the colours which was granted the other day to the Guards, has now been extended, mutatis mutandis, to the whole of the Infantry of the Line. I have not seen the text of the new order, but if the terms are correctly given in the daily papers, any Reservist with two years or upwards still to serve will be free to rejoin (subject to the consent of the C.O.) without refunding deferred pay, and on other conditions which seem fairly equitable. Having been hammering at this point for many a year past, I congratulate myself, as well as the War Office and the Reservists, on seeing the concession made at last. As a matter of fact, I have never suggested that the Reservist should be allowed to come back after the first year from his discharge, so that the War Office has gone beyond TRUTH this time. I hope that the result will justify the experiment.

The Director-General Army Medical Staff has lately made himself responsible for two appointments which are open to highly unfavourable criticism. At Leeds, one of the most important recruiting stations in the North-Eastern District, furnishing upwards of 1,500 men to the Army per annum the recruiting duty usually performed by a Senior Medical Officer, has been handed over to a young civilian practitioner, the son of the Director-General. The passing of recruits is a duty requiring exceptional experience, and, above all, Army experience. It is impossible that any young general practitioner, however gifted, can perform it efficiently.

Again, the charge of the Lunatic Hospital at Netley has just been given to a Surgeon-Lieutenant-Colonel, who certainly possesses no special knowledge of this branch of medical practice, while at least one officer with exceptional qualifications for the post has been passed over. It seems a tradition of 18, Victoria-street that lunacy experience is not requisite in the superintendent of an Army Lunatic Hospital; for I believe that the last occupant of the same berth at Netley possessed no special qualifications at the time of his appointment, and actually went through a course of study before he entered on his duties.

When I published a letter last week reflecting on the craving of Army medical officers for titles, I had no intention, as some of my readers seem to think, of endorsing the imputation, although I think it might be fairly levelled against a certain number of the military medical fraternity. No one knows better than I do that Army medical officers are exposed to innumerable snubs and insults, and it is desirable that anything which can be done to rescue them from this position, by conferring upon them a better defined rank than they at present hold should be done. Here are two fresh examples of the sort of slights that medical officers have to put up with. In one case a doctor was ordered to a certain Indian station as senior medical officer of the British troops there. In due course, he called upon the wife of the Commandant, and other ladies, and none of them was at home to him. He subsequently heard the Commandant's wife boasting within his hearing that she "drew the line at doctors." For ten months this medical officer occupied the next bungalow to the Commandant and his lady, and never during all the time received the slightest mark of social or personal recognition, until the day when the Commandant's wife was taken very seriously ill, when the doctor was of course called in. No doubt many a medical officer can corroborate this with similar stories of studied incivility, and the profession are right to resent such treatment.

Here is a later case. An officer, who resigned from the Medical Staff a few years back in India, has applied to be presented to H.R.H. the Prince of Wales at the Levee on the 21st instant. The War Office reply that, having retired, he must be privately presented. There is no such rule applicable to the Service generally, as many retired officers, including representatives of the Pay Department, are presented from time to time by the Adjutant-General. A special exception is therefore made to the disadvantage of the Army Medical Service, whether for this occasion or as a general rule matters not. The offensiveness and injustice of this exception are aggravated by the fact that medical officers are the only members of the Service who, after resigning their commissions on gratuity, remain liable to be recalled for further service. That being so, they ought to be the more favourably treated after resigning their commissions.

The officers of the 4th Hussars continue to earn distinction in India. A few weeks back they provoked a chorus of sarcastic protest in the Indian Press by their behaviour to the Madras Gymkhana Football team, which went over to Bangalore to play a match with them. The team were met at the station by a sergeant, and, after the match, were invited to enjoy the hospitality of the regiment in the sergeants' mess. This was politely declined, and the team went off to feed at the nearest hotel. Under any circumstances the conduct of the 4th would have been an offensive display of snobbishness. But it seems to have been aggravated by the fact that all the members of the visiting team were members of the Madras Club, where the officers of the 4th have not been above accepting hospitality for themselves.

Private letters from India are filled with accounts of the profound dissatisfaction which prevails in the Indian Army in consequence of the scandalous abuse of patronage on the part of the War Office authorities in appointing officers of the Household Cavalry, who happen to be visiting India, to Sir Bindon Blood's staff as orderly officers. This is stated to have been done "by orders from home," without the approval of the Indian military authorities, and to the exclusion of "the tried and qualified officers of the British and Native Army in India, who have served years in the country through all its privations and discomfort." It is grossly unfair thus to pitchfork officers from England into posts which qualify them for decorations and mention in despatches, and every one knows that there are bitter complaints of the utter incompetency of many of the staff officers.

An Army tutor sends me an analysis of the last batch of Staff Corps appointments from Sandhurst, which shows in the most conspicuous way the flagrant jobbery which characterises the distribution of these commissions. The published list of successful candidates was made up as follows:—

Cavalry	14
Infantry	83
West India	4
Queen's Cadets	2
Queen's India Cadet	1

Thirty-six appointments to the Staff Corps were to be filled up, and, these appointments being the most valuable, they should only be distributed—at any rate subject to the wishes of the candidates—in the order of the published list. As a matter of fact, the Staff Corps list was made up as follows:—

One Queen's Cadet (not one of the successful candidates).
Ten Queen's India Cadets (seven not successful candidates).
Two Honorary Queen's India Cadets (not among the successful candidates).
One Cavalry (first on the Cavalry list).
Twenty-two successful candidates (the lowest being thirty-fifth Infantry).

Of the three Queen's India cadets who appeared among the successful candidates, one was ninth on the Cavalry list, and another sixty-fifth. It will be seen that ten Staff Corps appointments were given to cadets who had not figured in the list of successful candidates, while another was given to a man whose marks would not have secured a Staff Corps commission had the names been selected in the order of merit. Moral: In order to make sure of the best-paid appointments in the Army, it is better to have influence at headquarters than brains and industry.

There was a paragraph in Truth of December 30 referring to the failure of any officer to turn up on the occasion of the funeral of a soldier of the Welsh Regiment at Poonamalee, the officer who should have been on parade excusing himself on the ground that he had been out snipe-shooting and was too tired. On behalf of the Welsh Regiment I am asked to state that, whoever the officer may have been, he did not belong to that regiment. Poonamalee is a Sanatorium, and there has been no officer of the Welsh Regiment there for over two years.

Is it regular or customary for quartermasters in the Army to take contracts for clothing Volunteers? I ask in view of certain evidence laid before me from one of the Scotch depots. If this evidence is to be believed, not only is the depot quartermaster engaged in clothing a local Volunteer company, but incidental irregularities have occurred which in the public interest require investigation. Even if inquiry should prove that everything is in proper order, the system seems one liable to abuse, and requiring very careful watching.

The following history is highly characteristic of our present military administration, and full of interest for the British taxpayer. In the middle of November last the Circular Redoubt, Harwich, was taken over by a certain company R.A. In the cook-house at the time was a coal box, slightly the worse for wear, but perfectly fit to serve its purpose for some time to come. It was not, however, on the barrack schedule. For this reason, the officer in charge, on discovering its existence, ordered it to be returned to the barrack store. The cook-house was consequently left without a coal-box, and for some time the coal, when taken in, was shot down on the floor in a corner. At the end of a week or two the C.R.A., Eastern District, discovered this state of things, and reported upon it. A long correspondence ensued respecting the absence of a coal-box, with the result that, after a considerable expenditure of ink and stationery, not to say time and labour which would have been put to a much better use, the Royal Engineers appeared upon the scene, and converted, at further cost of time and labour, two recesses in the cook-house into coal bunkers. This work was completed by the middle of January. In the meantime a Board of Survey had assembled, and had sat upon the coal-box, which was condemned and ordered to be broken up. At the end of last month its mortal remains were lying about in the barrack yard. That's the way the money goes!

In connection with the recent case of Sergeant-Major Sullivan at Rangoon, referred to the other day in TRUTH, there are one or two other points which accentuate the necessity for some further inquiry into the charges made by Sullivan against his Commanding Officer. The charges arose, it will be remembered, out of the court-martial on a Quartermaster-Sergeant Smith, who was accused by Sullivan of being drunk in barracks in the afternoon. It seems that at the trial it was stated by the prosecuting officer that Major Molesworth, the C.O., had informed him that the prisoner was at work with him in the office until half-past two on the date of his alleged drunkenness. The C.O. himself did not give evidence directly at the trial. Now, the evidence in regard to Smith's drunkenness was very strong, Sullivan, at the time when he placed him under arrest, having had him inspected by two other N.C.O.s. The C.O.'s statement, as conveyed second-hand to the court-martial, does not disprove the charge, and it certainly seems an extraordinary thing that, after the Sergeant-Major had placed a man under arrest for drunkenness, and others had seen him in that condition, an attempt should be made to put in a second-hand statement from the Commanding Officer as evidence for the defence. On the face of it, there is here some justification for the Sergeant-Major's complaint against Major Molesworth's proceedings, and the matter undoubtedly demands further inquiry.

A very good remark is made on this case in a recent issue of the Mandalay Herald. It is that if Sullivan had been actuated by any malice against the Commanding Officer, he could easily have made public his allegations in other ways without exposing himself to any trouble in connection with them. In preference to that he took the bold and straightforward course of laying what he had to say directly before the authorities. For merely doing this, and without any inquiry whatever into his charges upon their merits, he is charged with insubordination, and heavily punished. This is a most scandalous proceeding, and the scandal is increased if the authorities intend permanently to abstain from any inquiry into the truth of Sullivan's charges.

The following complaint was recently put forward, in accordance with the regulations, by a gunner of No. 3 Company, Eastern Division, R.A.—if I remember rightly, the very same company to which Sergeant-Major Sullivan belonged. The man stated that on December 2 Corporal Haycock and Corporal Strutt, of his company, accompanied by three bombardiers, came up to him at Syriam, and, after putting a question to him which he did not answer, informed him that they were going to drown him. They then pulled off his coat and trousers, hustled him to the shore of the lake near by, and pushed him in. Two of the party then threw stones at him while he was in the water, one of which cut him over the eye, and another over the lip. He was then pulled out by Corporal Haycock and told to go to his room. He fainted on the way back, and was attended to by the apothecary. On the next day he went sick, and was seen by the assistant surgeon, and subsequently went to hospital. These facts he reported in writing to his Captain, who forwarded it to the Officer Commanding Royal Artillery in the district. The reply of that Officer was that he did not see any occasion for the complaint to go further, and warned him that he would probably get into trouble if it were done. The R.A. authorities in Burma certainly seem to have the most amazing notions of administering justice. Assuming that this complaint was unfounded—as would seem to follow from the intimation that it would get the complainant into trouble—that furnishes only an additional reason for investigating it and punishing the man who put it forward. On one side or the other there must have been gross misconduct, and the course taken by the Officer Commanding can only have been prompted by a desire to hush up a scandal.

In a regiment now stationed at Malta a man was put in charge of the shoe-maker's shop, some three years ago, and at the same time received the lance stripe. Finding as time went on that he was passed over for promotion, he made inquiries on the subject, and was told that he was not eligible for promotion, and, though wearing a stripe, was not really a lance-corporal. He then requested to be allowed to return to duty, and was told that, if he did, he must go as a private. It appears that this man has every qualification for promotion in certificates and character. He is an old Duke of York's boy, and comes of a soldiering family; and it certainly seems an extraordinary thing that he should be debarred from promotion because he has obtained a post like the charge of the shoe-maker's shop, and still more so that he should have been allowed to go on for three years in this position without being informed of the consequences.

At the best the life of our troops in Crete is not exactly a happy one, and it would seem that not much is done by those in authority to improve it. A ship recently came into Candia with about 700 tons of timber for constructing huts, &c., and the men of the 2nd Seaforth Highlanders had to unload it, a task which involved very heavy work for several days, there being no cranes or other appliances, and no extra allowance of any kind being made on account of the job. In one of the companies of the said battalion a recent order requires every man to parade daily at 10.30, with his bayonet, until he has removed the stain caused by the spring or catch inside the scabbard, which is said to be tantamount to asking him to perform a physical impossibility. Two hours' extra fatigue have also been imposed lately for the crime of dropping orange peel about in camp. Here is another growl from the same quarter which shows the difficulty which a soldier sometimes has in pleasing those in authority over him:—

A certain officer in our company insists on seeing a certain amount of oil on the rifles; whilst another never fails to check us if he discovers oil. To avoid getting into trouble we have to try and find out which of the two officers is going to inspect us on parade and deal with our rifles accordingly. If the wrong officer happens to turn up, we pay for the mistake.

In an unguarded moment, I remarked the other day that the supply of Tommy's grievances for the TRUTH pillory had run short. The consequence is that I have been literally overwhelmed with the communications of gallant fellows anxious to make up the deficiency, and I find myself in the position of being quite unable to attend to the whole of the correspondence thus poured in upon me. Below, however, I give a selection of a few cases which seem most deserving of notice :—

2nd Battalion Somersetshire Light Infantry, Aldershot.—A recent battalion order lays down that "the regimental police have at all times authority to enter the barrack rooms when in the execution of their duty." This is a somewhat unusual order, and a result of it, which might be foreseen, is that active and intelligent young regimental policemen are obtruding themselves into the barrack rooms at all times in search of crime. One of these active and intelligent ones, a private with less than two years' service, discovered the other day two men engaged in what he described as gambling, and they were put into the guard room and brought before the C.O., charged with that crime. It turned out that they were raffling a pin-cushion, and they were discharged. A policeman, civilian or military, is a very good thing, but he ought to be kept in his right place.

2nd Battalion Wiltshire Regiment, Fort George, Guernsey.—In consequence of the unsteadiness of the drill the whole of the N.C.O.s of this battalion were recently ordered an extra hour's recruits' drill daily until further notice. A correspondent on the spot asserts that the whole cause of the unsteadiness which brought about this result was the mistakes of officers in giving the words of command. It might be well for the Commanding Officer to look into this allegation, for the spectacle which has been visible during the last week or two, of the whole of the N.C.O.s, some of them men of nineteen or twenty years' service, doing recruits' drill every afternoon for the amusement of the privates, is not one calculated to improve discipline or good feeling in the regiment.

Depot, South Staffordshire Regiment, Lichfield.—The following incident is curious: In his monthly accounts a sergeant was charged considerably more than he reckoned he had to pay, and on inquiry found that 5s. 6d. had been entered against him as paid to the cycle club on his account, whereas the amount should have been 3s. On reference to the president of the cycle club, it appeared that 3s. was the only charge that had been put in against the man. The sergeant accordingly brought the matter up at Orderly-room, and upon his doing so the odd 2s. 6d. was refunded. The pay-sergeant, through whose hands the matter had passed, did not produce the cycle club account, alleging that he did not keep bills, which seems in itself an irregular proceeding. Now, who refunded the 2s. 6d.; in whose hands had the money been between the time it was paid and refunded; and how came an amount to be entered on the sergeant's accounts for which there could be no voucher? These questions seem to require investigation.

2nd Battalion Royal Dublin Fusiliers, Pietermaritzburg.—In the barracks at this station there is, attached to each barrack room, a room intended for sergeants' quarters, and capable of accommodating two men, or thirty sergeants altogether. For some reason nearly all these rooms are at present used as store and pay rooms, and in one case as a barber's shop, the consequence being that the majority of the sergeants have no separate quarters. It is never a desirable thing to make sergeants sleep in the barrack rooms, and it would be interesting to know why, if proper accommodation is provided in the barracks, such a practice prevails in this instance.

Royal Marine Artillery, Eastney Barracks.—From this quarter a case is reported similar to one recently noticed in TRUTH as having occurred in a company of the Army Service Corps in the Eastern District. An officer suddenly seized the whole of the non-regimental caps in the possession of the men, and destroyed them without warning, and without giving the men an opportunity of disposing of them for what they would fetch. It may be necessary to prevent men furnishing themselves with caps except through the regulation channel, but the motives which lead them to give their custom elsewhere are generally laudable, and if it is necessary to prevent non-regimental caps being worn, at least the thing might be done with some regard for the men's feelings and their pockets.

By the way, I am sorry to hear that the alterations in the bathrooms at Eastney Barracks, on which the authorities were complimented in TRUTH some few weeks back, have never yet been properly completed. The work seems to have been taken in hand, and then discontinued; and as, in the meantime, the bathrooms cannot be used, the last state of the men in barracks is worse than the first.

Army Service Corps, Woolwich.—"For about the last three months the butter has been unfit to eat and the tea unfit to drink. Half the men in this company (No. 27) have to buy extras from the coffee-bar or else eat dry bread." So runs a complaint from this quarter. If half the company are prepared to support the statement, it would appear to have some foundation. The complaint dates back to a change in the canteen management.

Medical Staff Corps, Netley.—A private was brought up before the C.O. on the charge of disobeying an order, and was awarded seven days' C.B., without being allowed to offer a word of explanation in his own defence. The order had undoubtedly been disobeyed, but the explanation which the man had to give was a simple and reasonable one. The private, considering himself aggrieved, paraded again before the C.O., who again declined to hear him. He then paraded before his captain, in order to lay his complaint before the officer commanding the station. This also was refused him. This is a clear breach of the rights of a soldier as laid down by Act of Parliament, as well as a further proof of the high-handed and inconsiderate way in which things are managed at Netley.

It is a strange anomaly that the men who were brought over to London to represent various colonial forces in the Diamond Jubilee procession have received the Jubilee medal, while their comrades who stayed at home have been passed over. I have a touching complaint on this subject from an officer in a certain colonial police force, serving in one of the vilest climates in one of the most out-of-the-way regions of the British Empire. He remarks that he and many others would have been only too glad if they could have obtained leave to come home to figure in the Jubilee at their own expense, but such a chance was not for them; whereas the two members of the force who had a free trip home and a long leave for the occasion are further rewarded by a special mark of Royal recognition. Of course the rest of the force have to consider that they are honoured in the persons of their comrades, and that they have, as it were, received the Jubilee Medal by deputy. But I don't know that that is much comfort.

A non-commissioned officer who lately performed a voyage out in the hired transport Spartan, belonging to the Union Steamship Company, gives an account of the feeding arrangements on board which agrees only too well with much that has been heard respecting the Indian trooping service. The complaints relate specially to:—(1) the bread, which is described as having been badly baked, dark brown in colour, and so unpalatable that more than half of it was thrown overboard by the men, and other bread bought in its place; (2) the tea, which was quite undrinkable for the first half of the voyage, owing to the foulness of the water with which it was made; and (3) the excessive prices charged in the dry canteen. It seems that a price list is exhibited at the dry canteen, but it does not cover all the articles sold, and those not specified are apparently priced at any figure which suits the convenience of the storekeeper. The statement in regard to the bread is specially serious, because the extra bread which the troops have to buy is bought of the ship's baker, and if he can bake eatable bread for cash, he ought to be made to supply eatable bread for the free rations.

Another complaint which seems worthy of notice is the impossibility of obtaining, unless surreptitiously, either beer or spirits during the voyage. In former days, I believe, a pint of beer or porter used to be issued daily to troops on board ship. This has been stopped, and no compensation is given in other directions. The compulsory deprivation of beer is, in many cases, a hardship, more especially when everybody on board, except the soldiers, is able to obtain any liquor required. If teetotalism is to be compulsory for one class of passengers, it should be for all, officers included.

A system also seems to prevail on board the Spartan—whether it exists on other troopships I do not know—of selling, during the evening, plates of stew and soup made up from the leavings of the saloon. Under the circumstances, the price is high—6d. a plate for the stew and 2d. for the soup. The idea of feeding the lower ranks with the crumbs which fall from their masters' table is at the best not an agreeable one, and if the thing is done at all, it should be done at much lower prices than this; for I presume that the food which goes to the saloon is paid for once by the passengers to whom it is served. It must be good business to sell the surplus over again at the above prices. Unless men were very insufficiently fed already they would not buy such food on these terms.

In Truth of January 13, there was a statement (published on good authority) with reference to N.C.O.s of the Marines being drilled on board H.M.S. Royal Sovereign by a second class petty officer. I have been asked, on what ought to be even better authority, to contradict this statement. My latest informant states that no N.C.O.s have ever been drilled by a second class P.O. or by any one else. This denial comes from the Captain of the Royal Sovereign himself. I would gladly publish the letter he sends me, but as Captain Grenfell appears to have cultivated an unusually rich quarterdeck vocabulary, and as Truth is largely read by ladies, clergymen, and others who have a prejudice against "swear-words," I fear that the publication of the epistle would get me into trouble, and might not create a very favourable impression about the writer. So strong, indeed, are the gallant officer's feelings that he has been compelled to express them here and there in asterisks, though he has relieved his mind by underscoring the principal points in red ink. He desires me, in conclusion, to tell my original informant from him that he is "a lying son of a ——," the blank to be supplied by a reference to a certain nautical novel. I have much pleasure in complying with this request.

By the way, was not it the Royal Sovereign that we read so much about in the papers a few months back, in connection with sundry mutinous demonstrations? If the gallant Captain has as brusque a way with his subordinates as he has with the editors of journals which displease him, it is not surprising that there should be a little friction on board.

If there is an atom of truth in the statement published broadcast that for years past it has been the custom at Portsmouth and other Royal Dockyards to allow a system of charging twice over for work, a most searching inquiry must be at once instituted in the interests of the British tax-payer. At present, this charge is made on the testimony of the dockyard labourers, and is an outcome of the recent action of the Admiralty in dismissing the leaders of the men who held a public meeting outside the dockyard gates at Portsmouth, in order to ventilate their grievances. There should, however, be no difficulty in at once refuting what is stated to be common talk in Portsmouth, that the Government labourers are compelled to cheat to enable them to live, and the sooner an emphatic and authoritative denial to this is published, the better it will be for those in authority.

I have been asked to publish a very severe criticism of the recent action of the General Medical Council in prohibiting the employment by medical men of unqualified assistants. The writer is a gentleman with considerable knowledge of the subject, and I do not gather that he has any axe of his own to grind; but, with all respect to him, I hardly see my way to endorse his views. No doubt it is true, as he argues, that there are large numbers of men who, for one reason or other, have been prevented from technically qualifying, but who have yet acquired a wider medical knowledge and more practical experience than many qualified practitioners. I have myself known unqualified doctors' assistants whose advice I would much rather have relied upon in an emergency than upon that of their employers. It is also true, no doubt, that the action of the Medical Council is in some degree prompted by trade-union motives. At the same time, this looks like one of those trade-union regulations which are, on the whole, to the interest of the public as well as that of the trade. If any means can be suggested by which the qualifications of a technically unqualified practitioner can be tested, and the qualified unqualified, so to speak, be separated from the unqualified unqualified, well and good. But until that is done, the public ought to be protected against the technically unqualified man, whether practising on his own account or under cover of one technically qualified.

Who says that the Post Office do not lend an attentive ear to the complaints of the public? In the autumn of 1896 a gentleman at Exmouth called attention to the inadequate staff of telegraph messengers at the local post-office, and the consequent delay in the delivery of messages. On February 2, 1898, he was gratified by the receipt of the following communication:—

General Post Office, London.
February 1, 1898.

Sir,—With reference to your letter of October 28, 1896, I am directed to inform you that the force of telegraph messengers at the Exmouth Post-office has now been strengthened.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant, L. Bridger.

The hearty congratulations of the public are due to the staff of St. Martin's-le-Grand upon this performance. Let no man in future despair because a complaint has not been answered. It may be a matter of years, but sooner or later, there will always be henceforward a chance of a reply coming to hand.

It is interesting to come across a case in which the Post Office has over-reached itself in its desire to look after the pence. A firm in the North who had several postcards, received in reply to a circular, to forward on to London, put them all into an envelope and posted them with a halfpenny stamp. They were returned by the Post Office as not transmissible in this way, and were accordingly redirected and sent free, the Post Office, consequently, having to transmit half a dozen packets instead of one, and losing the halfpenny for their postage. As it may sometimes be a convenience to the public to send a batch of postcards in this way, the Post Office might well allow them the privilege of paying a halfpenny for so doing, in preference to sending them separately for nothing.

There was an acrimonious discussion at a recent meeting of the Glasgow Town Council on a charge in the Corporation accounts of £15 5s. 6d. for white gloves and ties. The Lord Provost at first declined to discuss the matter, as being "below the dignity" of the Council, but, as some contumacious members persisted in demanding an explanation, it transpired that the magistrates often forgot to bring white ties with them to the Court, so the Council officer was instructed to provide a stock, in order that there might be no inconvenience. The Lord Provost added that it would be "undignified" for a magistrate of the city to be required to pay up a few pence for a white tie. It seems to me that it is far more "undignified" to cadge upon the ratepayers for any such articles of attire.

The tendency of vestrymen to get themselves inextricably mixed up with jobs was amusingly illustrated in the recent case of Barnes v. Scantlebury and others, heard before Mr. Justice Wright. A lady sued her landlords for neglecting to carry out necessary sanitary alterations in her house. In the course of the case it was elicited that the landlords' agent was a member of the Paddington Vestry, that the builder to whom the important sanitary work was committed was a brother vestryman, and that a son of the latter was the sanitary inspector of the parish, and in that capacity was called upon to report upon his father's work. Small wonder that the learned Judge denounced it as a reproach to the whole system of local government that a state of things should be allowed to exist which must, as he put it, "promote a conflict between public duty and private interest." And it is to such bodies as this vestry, under the glorified name of municipal corporations, that Lord Salisbury would entrust the duties now discharged by the County Council!

The Home Secretary has declined to take any action in reference to the death of the woman Bird at Bromyard Workhouse, and the Local Government Board does not deem it expedient to institute an inquiry "at present." It is only fair to the Board to say that when this decision was arrived at they were in ignorance of the decision of the Home Secretary. Probably they thought that the Home Secretary would undertake the further investigation which the case demands, and his failure to do this is somewhat astounding. He appears to be under the impression that the "local authorities" properly discharged their duty of ascertaining the cause of the woman's death; but if he had taken the trouble to read a report of the proceedings he would have seen that the inquiry by the coroner and jury was of the most perfunctory and inadequate character, and that the verdict of suicide was arrived at by a process of mere hasty guessing. There is now strong reason to believe that this unfortunate woman was the victim of a foul murder, and it is absolutely scandalous that the crime should be allowed to pass without any real attempt to throw light upon it.

For some strange reason, the rule which prohibits a magistrate from adjudicating in a case in which he is interested does not apply when his interest arises from his membership of a municipal corporation. There was an example of this at Halifax the other day, when a member of the Halifax Corporation, Alderman G. H. Smith, sat as Chairman of the Justices who heard and granted an application made by the Town Clerk on behalf of the Corporation, as owners of certain public-house property, for the removal of the licence from an hotel which is about to be closed to another hotel which is about to be opened. In a legal sense the Alderman was fully justified in acting, but his presence in the chair on such an occasion has probably mystified a good many people besides the local correspondent who draws my attention to the matter. If only for the sake of appearances, it would be much better for magistrates to retire from the Bench during the hearing of any matters concerning public bodies to which they belong.

The just and desirable practice of giving the prisoner the benefit of any doubt in the case against him does not seem to commend itself to the Slough Bench. A few days ago a casual inmate of the Eton Workhouse, named Hughes, was charged with neglecting to perform his allotted task of work. He was sick and unable to eat the food supplied, and he pleaded that he was too ill to do the work. The medical officer who examined him was unable to discover any symptoms of illness, but at the same time he admitted that a man might suffer sickness and pain without showing any evidence of the fact; and the superintendent of police testified for the defence that he had advised Hughes—who was not a man of the professional tramp class—to go to the workhouse because he certainly thought that he was ill. This made it questionable, to say the least, whether the prisoner was malingering, but the Magistrates, nevertheless, sent him to gaol for fourteen days' hard labour. It is apparently their sagacious idea that a man cannot be ill—despite what the doctor says—unless he exhibits outward and visible signs of his illness.

There is much grumbling among suitors, solicitors, and others in reference to the enormous amount of arrears and the consequent block of business at the Wandsworth County Court. A case is practically never heard on the day for which the trial is fixed, and frequently two, three, and even four adjournments take place, causing endless and useless expense and annoyance to the parties. A legal friend says he does not think the Judge can really be blamed for this, as although he undoubtedly adds to the annoyance by being invariably unpunctual in the morning, yet he sits late at night, and does his best to deal conscientiously with the work. In addition to Wandsworth, where the business is very heavy, his Honour also has to hold courts at Hungerford, Newbury, Reading, Chertsey, Croydon, Epsom, Aldershot, Guildford, and Kingston. This circuit is more than one Judge can properly undertake, and in view of the congestion of business at Wandsworth it is to be hoped that the Lord Chancellor will try to make some rearrangement of the courts.

In reference to that most iniquitous provision of the Game Laws under which persons convicted of night poaching are ordered, in addition to a sentence of hard labour, to find sureties not to so offend again for a certain period, or in default to undergo a further six months' imprisonment, a City Justice's clerk suggests that the order for sureties may sometimes be made in ignorance of the fact that it is optional. Under the statute 9 George IV., c. 69, such an order was obligatory upon a conviction, but the Summary Jurisdiction Act of 1879 gave the Justices a discretion in the matter; and my correspondent thinks that this amendment of the law may not yet have penetrated the dull minds of the Great Unpaid in the rural districts. It is, perhaps, a charitable view to take of some of the shocking sentences that are recorded nearly every week in my Legal Pillory; but I am afraid it is hardly correct. It is not because they are under an impression that such a course is compulsory that the country magistracy demand sureties from poachers. It is because they persist in punishing all offences against the sacred interests of the game-preserver with the utmost harshness and vindictiveness. The administration of the Game Laws nowadays is, in many districts, just as ferocious as it was fifty years ago, when John Bright used to denounce it with such scathing eloquence.

In this connection, a remark that fell the other day from the Chairman of the Isle of Ely Petty Sessions is worth notice. Two youths, named Lambert and Fisher, were fined 5s. each, with 17s. 6d. costs, for trespassing in pursuit of conies, the fact being that they saw some rabbits and went after them, but did not catch one. Fisher had no money, and, in default of payment, he was at once removed in custody to undergo fourteen days' imprisonment. Shocked at the committal of the lad to prison, some people in Court subscribed 9s. towards the amount of the penalty, and requested the Bench to allow Fisher a fortnight for the payment of the balance—a request which the Chairman (Mr. A. W. English) granted, with the observation that it was "a curious incident." To the minds of these Ely Shallows, devoted to the holy cause of game preservation, it would, you see, have been quite in the natural order of things that a poor youth should be punished with fourteen days' imprisonment for chasing a few rabbits.

There is a serious side to the question of Divorce Court costs, and I was not oblivious of it when referring to the subject in a frivolous spirit last week. A country solicitor sends me a letter which brings out the importance of this matter so well that I venture to publish it verbatim:—

The expense of getting a divorce is a very serious matter for the poorer members of the community, and we have frequent experience of the hardship. One recent case is particularly in my mind.

A gardener earning 25s. a week consulted us. His wife had deserted him, and was living in open adultery with a young man formerly lodging in his house. He was left with three young children, the eldest seven years of age. He had to sell up his home and go into lodgings, and get a woman to look after his children. He was at work all day.

He came to us to know the absolutely cheapest way of getting a divorce, as he had the chance of marrying again—a most respectable woman who would look after his family. There was absolutely no dispute as to the facts. We made the most careful estimate and inquiries, and were informed by our London agents that Court fees, counsel's fees, and out of pockets would be certainly £15. They offered to take £10 for their work—a merely nominal sum. But the worst of it was that if the wife chose to consult a solicitor, and she could find any one who would take up such a case, she could get an order for her costs to be provided for, and these costs might be £50 at the least, and the case could not be set down for hearing unless security was given.

Even if the petitioner sued in formâ pauperis, the Registrar was of opinion that he must provide for his wife's costs.

The poor man had only saved £10, and his brother, also a labouring man, offered to give him £5, but they could do nothing more.

The man must have a housekeeper to look after his house and children, and the sequel can easily be imagined.

There are scores of poor people living together unmarried, not from immoral desire, but because one or other is tied to a husband or wife who has deserted, and they have not the means to get a divorce.

Surely some means of preliminary inquiry might be sanctioned before a County Court judge in the case of all persons working for weekly wages or with an income, say under £100 per annum.

If the County Court judge is satisfied it is a proper case, it should be remitted to the Divorce Division of the High Court at reduced fees, and with no liability for costs of the other party. Divorce should not be too cheap or easy, but at present only rich people can afford it, and the poor do without it.

The exponents of Woman's Wrongs have a great deal to say about the unfairness of the divorce laws towards women; but I have never heard of them taking into account the hardship which the same laws inflict upon man. I have myself known of a case very similar to the one described above, and probably they are frequent. No doubt it is necessary for the protection of women who have no separate estate that the husband should have to provide them with the means of defending themselves where there is any substantial ground of defence. But in a case where the facts cannot be seriously disputed, a man ought not to be debarred from relief because he cannot pay down in advance two sets of costs. A sort of "Order XIV." proceeding before a County Court judge, such as the writer of the above letter suggests, would remove this hardship, and would be in the interests of public morality as well as private convenience.

The asinine absurdity of the law with regard to the heinous crime of sleeping out is aptly illustrated by the cases from Newtown, Penge, and Salisbury, which figure in my legal Pillory this week. Could anything be at once more ludicrous and more monstrous than the system under which the punishment for this so-called offence is exclusively reserved for persons who are destitute, those who are in a position to pay for lodgings being able to "sleep out" with impunity? The other contrasted sentences in the following list speak for themselves, and the only case to which I desire to draw special attention is that from Gateshead, where a brute convicted for the second time of inhuman cruelty to his infant daughter is let off with half the punishment he received on the first occasion. If he had been convicted for a second time of theft, poaching, or vagrancy, his sentence would have been increased instead of being reduced:—

Bath City Police-court. Before the Mayor and other justices. John Willcox, charged with ill-treating and torturing a horse. Defendant was instructed to kill the horse, and by means of a spike and a mallet he knocked a hole in the animal's head. The horse fell but was not killed, and defendant then pushed a stable prong into the hole. He next fastened a chain round the horse's neck and tried to hoist it, still alive, on to a knacker's cart. Finally, after twenty minutes' agony, the horse was killed by a blow with an iron bar. Fined £5 or one month.

Nuneaton Police-court. George Hill, Thomas Sharrod, and Frederick Steptoe, charged with assaulting Frederick Ware. The three defendants attacked Ware, who had never seen them previously, threatened to kill him, punched him, knocked him down three times, kicked him, and treated him so brutally that he sought refuge in a neighbouring cottage, and stayed there the night. Fined £3 each.

Chesterfield Police-court. Before the Mayor and other magistrates. Thomas Joseph Austin, convicted of cruelty by working a horse while it had a broken fetlock. Fined 10s. and costs.

West Bromwich Police-court. Samuel Marshall, charged with assaulting Thomas Payne. Without any provocation defendant kicked complainant several times in the ribs and above the eye, inflicting injuries which confined him to his bed for more than a week. Fined £2 9s., including costs.

Portsmouth Police-court. Before Messrs. G. Curtis, H. G. Matthews, R. Barnes, and J. J. Young. Charles Smith, dockyardman, charged with assaulting Lily Hanson, aged twelve years. Because he supposed that the child had knocked at his door defendant punched her on the face and gave her a black eye. He also hit her sister in the face and kicked her legs. Fined 15s.

Ashbourn Petty Sessions. Before Messrs. H. C. Okeover, W. B. Badnall, J. Simpson, T. O. Farmer, and F. Wright. George Chadwick, charged with absconding from the workhouse. Prisoner, who was an imbecile, got over the workhouse wall and went to his parents' house. One month.

East Grinstead Police-court. Before Dr. E. Stewart and Mr. C. H. Everard. John Mitchell, charged with poaching. Five weeks.

Broseley Petty Sessions. Before Colonel Wayne, Messrs. J. Bodenham, — Dyas, T. Cooke, E. W. Shorting, and F. R. Smith. John Owen, charged under the Poaching Prevention Act with being found in possession of nine rabbits and a rabbit-net, and John Baugh and Edward Williams, charged with aiding and abetting Owen. Owen and Baugh fined £5 9s. each; Williams, £3 11s.

Londonderry Petty Sessions. Before Alderman Bell and other justices. Fred. Lawrence, charged with stealing 1 cwt. 14 lb. of coal from the quay. One month.

Harwich Police-court. Before the Mayor, Messrs. S. Evans, W. J. Nalborough, and H. G. Everard. Alfred Smith, labourer, charged with stealing a piece of coal, weighing 65 lb., from the railway works. It was the prisoner's first offence, and the chairman said "they proposed to deal with him as leniently as they could." Fourteen days.

Salisbury County Petty Sessions. Before Mr. W. Eyre Malcham and other justices. Caroline Cooper charged with doing damage to the amount of sixpence by lighting a fire on land belonging to the Earl of Radnor. Defendant and her four little children were found round the fire. She had no money. Committed to prison for two days.

Bedford Borough Petty Sessions. Before the Mayor and other justices. Charles Gough, charged with cruelty to a dog. For a "lark" he dropped the animal into a tub of water which was nearly boiling. Fined £2 and costs.

Salisbury County Petty Sessions. Before Mr. W. Eyre-Matcham and other justices, Charles Grace, charged with sleeping in an outhouse, and having no visible means of subsistence. It was stated that there had been numerous complaints against the prisoner for sleeping out, but as he was not without visible means, having the sum of one shilling in his possession, he was discharged.

Saffron Walden County Petty Sessions. Before Major Biscoe and other justices. Frederick Start, Wm. Barker, and Frank Rushforth, summoned for trespassing in search of conies. Fined £2 each and costs.

Newtown Police-court. Before Mr. R. Lloyd. Richard Roberts and Thomas Rees, charged with sleeping out and having no visible means of subsistence. Roberts fourteen days, Rees ten days.

Penge Police-court. Mary Chantrell, charged with sleeping out on a doorstep. Four days.

Gateshead Borough Police-court.—Joseph Cooney charged with illtreating his daughter, aged three years. He beat the child with a piece of leather in the most brutal manner, her back being fearfully bruised. He had previously had six months' imprisonment for severely assaulting the same child. He was now let off with three months.

It is satisfactory to know that the efforts that have been made to expedite legal procedure are bearing fruit. An action on a dishonoured bill was recently disposed of in the High Court. The bill was dishonoured on December 28, the writ issued January 4, and the case tried out in the short cause list before January 31—a little over a month from the time when the cause of action arose. The expense to the parties is of course reduced in proportion to the time. Lawyers seem to be beginning to recognise that quick and cheap justice means, after all, good business, and I hear that the state of the cause list on the Queen's Bench side bears ample evidence of this. A legal friend tells me, in connection with this, that the proposed compulsory retirement of Masters and other court officials at sixty-five years of age is entirely in the interest both of the profession and the public, the old stagers who have been brought up under a different system not falling in readily with the new rules and the new system of pleading. It is generally best to have new men to work a new machine.

A great deal of soreness has been caused in the Dublin Metropolitan Police by the action of the Commissioners in forming an ambulance class of their own at Kevin-street Barracks. The Force has already a highly efficient ambulance team, which gained the first prize in a recent competition among the teams of the United Kingdom at the Crystal Palace. The men are naturally proud of this distinction, and resent in proportion the official attempt to form an opposition team under different auspices; and it seems likely that the work of the St. John's Ambulance Association in Dublin will suffer if this attempt is persevered in upon the present lines.

Mr. C. W. Bell, J.P., writes to inform me (1) that he was not one of the magistrates who adjudicated on the poaching case at East Grinstead Petty Sessions, which I pilloried last week; and (2) "that he has further good reason to believe that the poacher was not ordered to find sureties for future good conduct." With regard to the first point, I fully sympathise with Mr. Bell's anxiety to relieve himself of the obloquy of being concerned in the sentence which his colleagues passed, and I regret that his name was erroneously mentioned in connection with the case. It was given in the report in the Sussex Daily News—usually a trustworthy paper—but possibly the explanation is that Mr. Bell quitted the bench before this particular case was reached. As to the second point, I confess I should like a more positive assurance from some one who was present that the prisoner was not ordered to find sureties. It would be a strange freak on the part of the reporter to deliberately invent the circumstantial account which was given of this addition to the sentence.

The libel action at Chelmsford Assizes on Saturday was another case of a newspaper being sued on account of a mistake, for which it had at once apologised, and, in addition, offered monetary compensation. Considering that the plaintiff failed to show that he had suffered any special injury through the libel—his one allegation that it had caused him to lose the chance of an appointment being refuted — the jury seem to have been exceedingly liberal in awarding him £50 damages. Probably they were influenced by the summing up of Mr. Justice Grantham, who evidently differs from more eminent Judges as to the course which justice demands when a newspaper has published a libel not maliciously but by accident, and offered reasonable reparation for it. His Lordship said that managers of newspapers must exercise the highest care, and if a mistake of this kind was made they must "make adequate compensation." But mistakes will happen even when the greatest care is exercised. A Judge himself, as Mr. Justice Grantham may know, sometimes makes a mistake, and he is not called upon to make compensation, adequate or otherwise.

One more illustration of the anomalies and absurdities of the muzzling order was afforded at Leicester Police-court last week, when the owner of two greyhounds was summoned for allowing them to be at large unmuzzled. The hounds were in slips in charge of an attendant, and the defence was that as sporting dogs out for exercise they were exempted from the order. The Bench held that the case did not come within the exemption, their worships expressing the opinion that "the fact that the animals were being led through the town militated against the idea that they were being exercised." Why this fact should militate against that idea is not at all clear; and I should have thought myself that these hounds were entitled under the order to go unmuzzled.

I say this, of course, without for a moment approving of the exemption of sporting dogs, which to my mind—seeing that such animals are just as liable to rabies as any others—is wholly indefensible. No doubt it was framed in the interests of country gentlemen and sportsmen. But if there is no danger in allowing whole packs of unmuzzled hounds to run about the country, there can be no danger in allowing a couple of unmuzzled hounds to be led through a town. It would be interesting, by the way, to learn how "sporting dogs" are defined. One of the most "sporting" dogs I know is a terrier. His sport is with rats; but it seems to me he is just as much a sporting dog as one which hunts a fox or courses a hare.

If a man may run a lottery for a church, why should he not run one for himself? To the logical mind of Mr. A. A. Hogg, of Glasgow, it appeared that what was lawful in the first case must be equally lawful in the second; and so, after gaining experience in the promotion of lotteries for a United Presbyterian Church, he launched out in the same line of business on his own account. Much to his surprise, he was last week haled before Bailie Dick, who let him off with an admonition, only because he thought there was some excuse for the accused in the fact that he had not seen any churches "pulled up," as they ought to be, for the same offence. At the same time, the Procurator-Fiscal promised to take proceedings in respect of any church lottery which was brought to his notice, and the Bailie intimated that in future he would fine "church managers or any one else" who broke the law. I hope the police will act upon these hints, and no longer turn a blind eye to lotteries which happen to be got up for religious objects.

The old question of magisterial reluctance to grant bail to prisoners incidentally cropped up in connection with the wrongful conviction at Norfolk Quarter Sessions which was quashed on Saturday by the Court of Crown Cases Reserved. It seemed that the prisoner in this case was not allowed bail pending his trial at the Sessions, nor again pending the decision of the Judges on the point of law that was raised, so that he has altogether had a considerable term of imprisonment. The Lord Chief Justice pointed out once more that questions of bail ought not to be regarded from the point of view of punishment, but from the point of view of securing the attendance of the prisoner. He was afraid, he added, that notwithstanding what Judges had said, there was not that disposition to accept bail in cases of this kind, which, in the opinion of the Judges, ought to characterise the conduct of Magistrates. This is perfectly true. Judges have been hammering away at the woodenheads of the Great Unpaid for years past, but without making any appreciable impression. They continue to go their own way, heedless of the judicial admonitions they receive, and regardless of the injustice they inflict on untried prisoners.

Yet another instance of the sharp and shady methods of the usurer Shuckburgh, alias the Clerical and Medical Bank of Bristol. A widow named Hichens borrowed £30 from him for a year, with interest at 60 per cent., the security being a bill of sale. Because she omitted to send to him her last quarter's rent receipt Shuckburgh obtained and executed a warrant for the seizure of her goods for the sum—including most exorbitant fees and costs—of £52 18s. The matter came before Mr. Justice Day, who held that the seizure was wrongful, and refused to allow Shuckburgh anything beyond the £30 principal, and the 15s. due for interest when the seizure took place. This decision, I am glad to say, was last week affirmed by the Court of Appeal, which dismissed Shuckburgh's appeal against it, and saddled him with the costs. It is always gratifying to see the vaulting rapacity of such a rascal overleap itself.

A firm of merchants at Newcastle-upon-Tyne have been favoured with a delectable piece of impertinence in the shape of a circular from Mr. H. Hayle, of 18A, London-street, E.C. "A friend, for whom we have done financial business, informs us," writes Hayle, "that you may feel inclined to increase your working capital." Then, of course, he goes on to mention that he is just the man to "arrange a financial transaction on a satisfactory basis." The firm in question tell me that they are not in want of any capital, and they appear somewhat incredulous as to the existence of the "friend" from whom Hayle says he derived his utterly erroneous information. I think their incredulity is justified, seeing that Hayle does not give the name of his "friend," and that the statement in reference to him is part of a circular which is apparently sent out in all directions. The "friend," I suspect, is only another Mrs. Harris.

Apropos of the recent suggestion in these columns that the Money-lending Committee should obtain information as to the operation of the laws against usury in the United States, I have been reminded that there is a place nearer home where similar legislation, enacted two centuries ago, is still in force. The Tynwald Court of the Isle of Man in 1691 passed an Act "that none shall take above £6 for the loan of £100 for a year," and the interest must not exceed the same rate for a greater or lesser sum, or a longer or shorter period. It is provided that all bonds, contracts, or assurances for the payment of interest above the rate of 6 per cent. per annum shall be "utterly void," and furthermore that any person doing anything contrary to "the tenor or meaning of this statute shall forfeit and lose for every such offence . . . the treble value of the moneys, wares, merchandises, or other things so lent, bargained, sold, or exchanged." One of my Manx readers in sending me a copy of this interesting statute says that it has worked well; and the Parliamentary Committee certainly ought to secure official evidence from the island on the subject. Thanks to the Home Rule which they enjoy the Manxmen seem to have protected themselves very effectively from the curse of Shylockism.

Here is an instance of the wiles to which the notorious Isaac Gordon resorts in the pursuit of his prey. A man applied to "Mr. J. Williamson," 44, Park-road, Bristol—one of Gordon's innumerable aliases and addresses—for a loan of £10, but on learning that for this amount he would have to repay £16 in instalments of £2 per month, he prudently declined to have anything to do with the bloodsucker. It is part of Isaac's system, however, never to let any likely victim escape his clutches without a determined struggle, and about a month after his interview at the office the applicant received a letter asking him to call again and promising him a loan on "most easy and reasonable terms." He took no notice whatever of this letter, but a week or two later he was favoured with another entirely unsolicited communication from the usurer enclosing two £5 notes, together with a promissory note for £16 which the recipient was requested to sign and return. This communication was also ignored, with the result that at the end of four days Gordon wrote, in his usual impudent style, demanding the return of the £10 under threat of legal proceedings. To get it back, however, he finally had to send his representative to the house of his intended dupe, a distance of two or three miles.

This kind of confidence trick is often practised by Gordon, and although it was unsuccessful on the present occasion, it generally pays. He takes good care, of course, not to forward money to any person until he has satisfied himself that its repayment is morally certain; and he counts upon the temptation supplied by the actual possession of the required cash inducing a man to agree to exorbitant terms of interest, which he might otherwise reject. When the dodge fails, Gordon pretends that the money was forwarded "by mistake," and his first letter enclosing it is so artfully worded as to give colour to this statement. But the mistake is made so systematically that I have little doubt that in the event of any one leaving him to take legal proceedings for the recovery of the money, the Judge would saddle him with the whole of the costs.

Scotland Yard ought to look into the little incident described in the letter given below. It is written by a young lady residing in a street off the Hackney-road to a brother serving with the British force in Crete. The individual who perpetrated the fraud here described must be a heartless as well as an ingenious rascal. It is probably not the first time he has played the trick successfully, and it should not be impossible to trace "Mr. Jackson, of Burton, Surrey." The occurrence took place about the first week in January:—

My Dear George,—We had a gentleman called home the other evening. He said he called on behalf of you. He said he was captain of the band, and he used to call you his boy. You liked him because he was like father. He also said you had sent presents home for us all, and a note inside who the present was for. Of course we thought it very kind of him. We made him very welcome as you know we should do. He said he was with you twelve days ago, but he come home after serving twenty-one years' service, and also going to get his discharge on Monday. Dear George, he said you did not drink, which we were very pleased to hear; he said he did not know the taste of it for fifteen years, and his account of you was everything that was good. He also said you had a pet monkey, but his hobby was parrots, and he would give mother one if she had a cage to put it in. Out of respect she had for you, mother did not like to refuse the bird, so she gave him fourteen shillings for the cage. He said he would get it at his end, as he did not like to send the bird in a box, and we should receive the presents and the parrot the next day. But, George, we have not received anything, but we think we have been swindled of our fourteen shillings. This man said he had spoken for you to be an officer's servant, and that would be three shillings more a week for you, which pleased us very much. Dear George, I want you to answer this letter as soon as you receive this, because if there is no truth in any of this and you have not sent us presents by this man, we are going to Scotland Yard, if we can do good by other poor mothers and put them on their guard. So please write at once. If it's a lie, I think you ought to speak about this for the benefit of the other soldiers' mothers. I should speak to the head one about it if I were you, so, dear George, one and all send their best love.—I remain, your loving sister, ———.

P.S.—The man's name is Mr. Jackson. c/o. H. White, Penrith Villa, London-road, Burton, Surrey. That is the address he gave us.

The Protean Leigh Sampson has come out in yet another new character. Here is a letter just addressed by him to an American gentleman in London :—

20, Rue Lenliette, 20, Boulogne-sur-Mer, France.
January 19, 1898.

Dear Sir,—Can you greatly oblige me by giving me upon a foreign post-card (stamps for which is enclosed) the names and addresses of any American publishers you know, who would possibly publish a novel dealing satirically and sarcastically with modern English life?

I have written such a book, but know that it is useless even to seek for a publisher in London, where prejudice if not ignorance has supreme command of the book market.

If you will help me by replying with the information, I will not only never forget the kindness, but will strive in after years to repay you.—I beg to remain, dear sir, your very obedient servant,

H. Travers.

I would recommend the publisher to whom this work is offered to make sure that it really is Sampson's, and not, like the pictures which he has been hawking about for so many years past, the production of a "ghost." Of course, this inquiry after an American publisher is all bunkum. There are plenty of publishers in London who would be only too glad to get hold of a novel satirising modern life, however caustically, if it were of respectable literary merit. One can only suppose that this letter is the opening move in some new kind of application for a cash advance.

Notwithstanding all that has been said on the subject in Truth, I still get inquiries from time to time from people who are in the dark as to the nature of the operations carried on by Mr. Ernest Day, of 439, Old Kent-road. I therefore ask my regular readers to excuse my mentioning once again that Day, whose black-edged circulars are now more in evidence than ever, is a dealer in old curiosities, and similar rubbish, who endeavours to dispose of cheap prints of deceased worthies by representing that he has come into possession of them through the death of a relative, and is willing to part with them at a terrible sacrifice. His sacrifice consists in obtaining a guinea, or perhaps two, for an article worth possibly sixpence. Looking only at the collection of his letters that has come into my possession during the last three weeks, it would seem that Day's deceased relative must have had enough old prints on hand to stock a small gallery.

Are any of my Manchester readers familiar with the pencil manufactory of Mr. W. D. Metcalfe, of 49, Great Portwood, Stockport? I ask the question in view of a cadging circular distributed from house to house in various parts of the country with an "indelible ink pencil," purporting to be manufactured by Mr. Metcalfe. Metcalfe's appeal to the public is, for a tradesman, somewhat unusual. It begins thus :—

Dear Sir or Madam,—It is owing to the depression in trade that we submit to your inspection, optional to purchase, the enclosed sample, and trust that the same may meet with your approval, as, by becoming a purchaser of same, it will enable us to employ many more of the willing hands, and be the means of supporting many Starving Families. . . . Being the manufacturer, I can afford to supply these pencils at a very low price, placeing (sic) the pencils within the reach of everybody. . . .

This, it will be seen, is virtually an appeal to charity, not on behalf of Mr. Metcalfe himself, but for the benefit of the many starving families whom he is anxious to employ in manufacturing pencils. A stony-hearted Welshman, at whose house the circular and pencil have been left, actually suggests to me that these pencils are not only dear at the price asked, but are made in Germany. I should be very glad, therefore, if somebody in the neighbourhood who has seen Mr. Metcalfe's works and the starving families employed there would give me the necessary evidence to enable me to relieve a genuine philanthropist of this stigma.

Some interesting facts were given in Truth two or three weeks back respecting an advertisement purporting to emanate from a "lady leaving to join her husband in India," who wished to sell a lovely drawing-room upright grand piano. Any doubt that might have been felt as to the character of this advertisement on the facts then stated is entirely set at rest by information which has come to hand since. To begin with, I hear that the advertisement, which had then to my knowledge been running for at least three months, has been appearing in one form or another for some years. The advertiser was originally "a medical gentleman about to take a practice in the Colonies," and he also wished to get rid of an equally desirable instrument at an equally alarming sacrifice. I have this information from a gentleman who saw the advertisement, and had the piano sent to him on approbation, the offer so to send it being a part of the advertisement then, as it is to-day. He had a professional friend ready to inspect the instrument on its arrival, and it was pronounced to be a shoddy instrument, obviously made merely to "sell" (in every sense of the word). On its being returned, the gentleman who had inspected it was favoured with a letter, representing that the carriage had cost £2, and begging him to reconsider the matter, which, naturally, he did not do.

"Truth" will be sent weekly to any address in the United Kingdom for 7s. for 3 months; 14s. for 6 months; or 28s. for 12 months. The subscription for all countries included in the Postal Union is, 3 months, 7s. 8d.; 6 months, 15s. 4d.; 12 months, £1 10s. 8d. All subscriptions are payable in advance, and cheques and P.O.O.'s should be made payable to the Manager, "Truth" Buildings, Carteret-street, S.W.

Since I called attention to the advertisement, the "lady leaving to join her husband in India" has once more changed her sex, and become a gentleman who has suffered from serious losses in business. Here is the latest form of the advertisement as it has appeared in the Standard, Telegraph, and other papers, including the Guardian :—

PIANOFORTE (upright iron grand).—A gentleman, through serious losses in business, is compelled to sell his most superb walnut-wood drawing-room piano. Panel front, choicely inlaid marqueterie in three compartments, seven octaves, full trichord, check repeater action, brilliant powerful tone, delightful touch. Absolutely faultless and unscratched, new this season. Original price, 55 guineas; accept 19 guineas. No handsomer or finer toned instrument can be obtained. Owner will send on approval and pay carriage both ways if unsatisfactory.—W., 193, New Cross-gate.

I had this advertisement answered, and received the following letter in reply :—

35, Erlanger-road, New Cross Gate, S.E.
January 29, 1898.

MADAM,—I have to thank you for your esteemed inquiry re piano addressed W., 193, New Cross Gate, and shall have great pleasure in showing it to you here, 35, Erlanger-road, at any time you may appoint.—I am, madam, yours faithfully,

REGINALD GRATTON.

35, Erlanger-road, it will be remembered, was the address of "Mrs. G.," the lady who was three weeks ago leaving to join her husband in India. This identification of the two advertisers at the same address removes all doubt that the advertisement is a trick. What part Mr. Gratton plays in the game I do not know. He may be a principal, or merely an agent.

I hear, from another source, that in some cases where this trick has been played the manufacturers of shoddy pianos get an impecunious householder to house the instruments, and attend to replies to the advertisements, taking a commission on all business done. In such cases inquisitive neighbours have been much puzzled at seeing pianos going into or out of the house two or three times in a week. It will be seen from this that a roaring trade is done by means of this dodge. It is not a particularly new one; the piano is evidently a near relation of the time-honoured "horse, property of an officer going abroad," which used to be always on sale through the columns of one or other of the papers. But no doubt the trick is good enough to deceive plenty of small people with limited means, equally limited knowledge of music, and unlimited desire to furnish their drawing-rooms in the most imposing style. The offer to send the piano "on appro." carriage paid both ways, shows that the vendor, whoever he may be, must have a good margin of profit on the price.

The great New South Wales snowball continues to roll on its serio-comic course, and every week brings some new addition to my collection of the addresses of the lady who is supposed to be collecting a million postage stamps for the benefit of an unknown hospital in an unknown place in that colony. To show how the matter stands at present, here are a few of the addresses already given in TRUTH :—

Miss Ardley Griffon, Mill-street, Hivitoville, near Sidney, N.S.W.
Miss Griffin, Botoga Hill, St. Hankwell, N.S. Wales.
Miss Griffith, Bologna Mill, St. Hurst Villa, New South Wales.
Miss Suffen, Shellionga Mills, Fleutsville, U.S.A.
Miss Audley Griffin, Walwage Hill, St. Harp Villa, N.S. Wales.
Miss Griffin, Hurtsville, Rockdale, near Sydney.

The above list was published some three or four months back. Since then the following have been added to the collection :—

Mrs. Dudley Gibbons, Montague Mills, New South Wales.
Miss Griffen, Hartsville, U.S.A.
Miss Griffin, Naluga, Mid Saint Harville, N.S.W.
Miss Suffin, Flintville, S.W.
Miss Grifton, Katanga, Great Hunt's Villa, South Wales.

One of the latest letters of which I have heard was actually addressed to a gentleman on the Continent by an Italian, dating from a remote village in the Abruzzi Mountains, the letter being written in French, so that the snowball has now rolled onto the Continent. We may therefore expect shortly to hear of even more surprising variations of Miss Griffin's address than any yet recorded.

A Torquay correspondent wants to know if I will show up an advertising tipster. He holds that he has been swindled by this tipster, because out of twenty tips for which he paid seventeen were losers and only three winners at very short odds. No, my friend, I will not show up the tipster. If I felt inclined to show up anybody, it would be the simpleton who thought he was going to make a fortune by such an investment.

As a warning to other water consumers who may be similarly victimised, a householder asks me to mention his experience of the ways of the New River Company. For a long period he innocently paid the company £4 10s. per annum, the amount demanded. Finding at last that he was being illegally charged upon his rental of £63 instead of upon the rateable value of £50, he disputed the claim, with the result that the company, after refusing for some time to accept any reduction, have now been compelled to acknowledge that the full amount to which they are entitled—comprising a charge of 5 per cent. on the rateable value and four "extras"—is only £3 10s. per annum.

In other words, the company have hitherto been robbing the customer in question to the extent of £1 a year! Many similar cases have been brought to light, and no doubt there would be hundreds more if Londoners would always check the demand notes of the water monopolists. Every consumer has a statutory right to full particulars of the charges he is called upon to pay; yet nine out of ten pay without demur the lump sum demanded, and so run the risk of being year after year over-rated or fleeced for extras for which they are not liable.

The following advertisement, which has just appeared in the Bankers' Institute Journal, has an instructive bearing upon what has lately been said in these columns on the remuneration of bank clerks. £100 to £120 per annum for a man of eight or ten years' experience is not a very princely remuneration, but evidently the advertisers reckon that there are plenty of men in receipt of lower salaries at rival establishments who will be attracted by this magnificent offer :—

> Bank Clerks.—A leading joint stock bank (Metropolitan and country) has Vacancies for a few Clerks, unmarried, with eight to ten years' banking experience. Salary, £100 to £120 per annum.
> Apply, with full particulars, &c.

Note the stipulation, "unmarried." It will be remembered that, in the course of my recent correspondence on the subject, reference was made to the rule of some of the leading joint-stock banks which forbids any clerk to marry until he reaches a salary which he can hardly expect to obtain under forty years of age. The truth, of course, is that the banks are afraid to employ married men in the lower grades of the service, knowing the temptations which they would be exposed to upon the miserable pittance allowed them.

An anonymous correspondent, writing in defence of the Mercantile Bank of Lancashire, informs me that the bank is a comparatively young one, and that several of the branches do but small business, and so on. The point of the argument I do not perceive. If the Directors are prepared to say that the bank is doing such a poor business that it cannot afford to pay its staff properly, I am quite willing to give publicity to a properly authenticated statement to that effect. I hardly expect that they will say so, however. I have the last balance-sheet before me, and it shows that the bank is making very fair profits. The Directors seem to think that intimidation is the wisest policy, for I hear that on Wednesday last the staff were treated to an harangue on the evils of discontent, and the determination of the Board not to be coerced into raising salaries, with more to the same effect.

At a meeting of shareholders of the Clydesdale Bank at Glasgow a sympathetic shareholder took up the cudgels on behalf of the junior staff. The bank in question had made during the year a profit, including balance carried forward, of over £155,000. Its deposits had increased during the year by £230,000, and after carrying £30,000 to the reserve fund, writing £10,000 off the valuation of the bank buildings, and carrying forward a balance of £12,000 odd, a dividend of 10 per cent., free of income-tax, was declared. Upon this Mr. James McCull moved that out of the £30,000 proposed to be carried to reserve, a bonus of £10 should be paid to every clerk, excluding apprentices, whose income did not exceed £120 per annum. The proposal, however, did not find a seconder, and the chairman's comment upon it was that it would have been a vote of want of confidence in the Directors, who had spent £1,000 out of the £150,000 profit made during the year in increasing salaries. He went on to enlarge upon the enviable position of the clerks, who received a rise of £10 every year after they entered the service until they reached the splendid income of £100 a year, after which "the salary was accommodated to the value of the office held," whatever that may mean. However, the Clydesdale Bank comes out better than a good many of the joint-stock concerns whose meetings have been held during the last week or two, for I have not seen a single other meeting at which even one shareholder has been found to suggest that the staff ought to be considered before the profits were divided.

With the Pope's "Index Expurgatorius" everybody is familiar, but it is somewhat unusual to hear of one of his ecclesiastical satellites arrogating to himself the right to exercise a censorship over the newspaper Press. The Archbishop of Colombo does this, and some time ago he prohibited the faithful under his jurisdiction from reading certain periodicals, among them being the Ceylon Independent. It is now announced that the interdict against that particular paper has been formally removed, as the result of certain "assurances" which the editor has given to the archbishop. I do not know the precise nature of the offence which caused the Ceylon Independent to be placed on the black list, but from the little I have seen of the paper I should have thought it was a perfectly harmless and thoroughly respectable publication. It is pretty clear, however, that its title of Independent was chosen on the lucus a non lucendo principle.

I referred last week to certain changes at the Bodleian which have been rendered necessary in consequence of the increased and increasing depredations of unscrupulous visitors. It appears from the report of Mr. Nicholson, who has been Bodley librarian for fifteen years, that 156 books have been stolen during that period from the open shelves in the Radcliffe Camera, which is the reference part of the library. This does not include the very large number of volumes which have been stolen for a time, and then surreptitiously replaced in a more or less mutilated condition. Last year no fewer than thirty-two volumes were stolen, and it is strongly suspected by the Bodleian officials that twelve of these were taken away by one person. Panizzi stopped thefts from the Library of the British Museum by an ingenious system of spy holes.

Mr. Rhodes has evidently been very free with his confidences lately. The other day the Chronicle published some conversations in which he gave away the case for Rhodesia with engaging frankness. Now the Daily News, in an interview with Mr. Gambier Bolton, has fully confirmed these Rhodesian confessions. This is the sort of thing :—

> Oh! yes—he talked freely, when I was alone with him, and didn't scruple to admit that Rhodesia at present is practically worthless from the agricultural point of view, what with horse and mule sickness of two kinds, tsetse fly, and rinderpest or cattle-plague, scab, locusts, drought, and, above all, the scarcity of native labour. And even from a mining point of view, owing to the want of labour. . . . . As for the ordinary emigrant—he is the last person they want in Rhodesia. So long as food for man and grain for animals have to be brought into the country the cost of living must be enormous—far higher than any wages would provide for. No—the only sort of emigrant Mr. Rhodes wants is the capitalist—capital, capital. Capital—to develop the mines—to buy the crushing machinery—for the extraction of more gold from the earth.

Precisely. Before you get any gold out of Rhodesia you have got to put the gold in.

On the question of native labour Mr. Rhodes was frank to the verge of artlessness. "It was almost pathetic," says Mr. Bolton, "to hear him hurl anathemas against Exeter Hall and the Aborigines' Protection Society." Again :—

"The natives won't work unless they're made. They say they don't want the white man's money. They lived without it before he came to their country, they can do so now. They are mostly warriors, and fighting and hunting are all they care for. 'Look at them,' exclaimed Mr. Rhodes, raging, 'there they sit, great able-bodied men, squatting round their huts week after week, plotting and scheming, loafing, eating, and sleeping—and the country going to rack and ruin for want of the labour which they alone can give us, if we are to work our mines and farms profitably. Exeter Hall and the Aborigines' Protection Society have dealt us, and me personally, the worst blow that has ever fallen on this country, and, if things go wrong from this cause, on their heads must be the blame.' These are almost Mr. Rhodes's own words."

"And has he no 'cure' to propose?"

"Local self-government—a free hand except in affairs affecting the whole empire."

"A free hand" to introduce slavery! "Self-government" in such a form as will enable Messrs. Rhodes & Co., after robbing these great able-bodied loafers of their country, to compel them to work for their keep in more or less bogus mines for the benefit of their "self-governing" oppressors. It must be pathetic, indeed, to hear Mr. Rhodes lamenting over the contumacy of the inconsiderate native, who prefers to keep himself alive his own way, and denouncing the unpatriotic conduct of "Exeter Hall." I do not quite know who Exeter Hall is. Perhaps it is I. Why did not Mr. Rhodes say "Little Englanders"? It would be highly gratifying to many of us to know that in addition to his other offences against his country, the Little Englander is now guilty of the crime of objecting to slavery under the British Flag. There was a time, and not so long ago, when the anti-slavery cry was the rallying cry of the Jingo.

A Scotch Member has been censured by his political committee for having played at golf on the Sabbath. What the fact of his having, during his Sunday constitutional, knocked a ball along before him has to do with his political relations with his constituents, I am at a loss to understand. The Scotch are a level-headed nation in most things, and their censorious interference in the private Sabbath avocations of their Members has always been a matter of surprise to me. I had thought that this meddling fussiness was dying out. Years ago I represented a constituency, and one of my constituents wrote to reprove me because he had seen me, he said, rowing on the river on Sunday. I replied that, so far as he knew, I might be a Jew, in which case my Sabbath would be Saturday, or a Mahommedan, when it would be Friday, or a Lutheran or a Roman Catholic, in which case such amusement as that in which I had indulged was deemed permissible on Sunday, or a member of the Church of England, most of whose members agreed with Lutherans and Roman Catholics as to Sunday amusements, but that however this might be, the matter in no way concerned him.

I doubt whether people in this country yet appreciate the gravity and danger of the policy the Government of India is pursuing with regard to the Press. Mr. Justice Strachey's strained interpretation of the law in the Tilak case showed how severely the liberty of the Press may be curbed under the existing Code. In view of the result of that prosecution, it was, indeed, hardly possible to see what further check upon newspaper criticism the authorities could desire. But the possibilities revealed by the Tilak case have apparently only had the effect of whetting the appetite of the Government of India for further repressive legislation. The extraordinary lengths to which they propose to go in this direction will be understood from the following comparison of the present law in reference to sedition with the amended law which Mr. Chalmers has brought forward in the Legislative Council :—

Whoever, by words, either spoken or intended to be read, or by signs, or by visible representation, or otherwise, excites or attempts to excite feelings of disaffection to the Government established by law in British India, shall be punished with transportation for life or for any term, to which fine may be added, or with imprisonment for a term which may extend to three years, to which fine may be added, or with fine.	Whoever by words, either spoken or written, or by signs, or by visible representation or otherwise, brings or attempts to bring into hatred or contempt, or excites or attempts to excite disaffection towards her Majesty or the Government, or promotes, or attempts to promote, feelings of enmity or ill-will between different classes of her Majesty's subjects, shall be punished with transportation for life or any shorter term, to which fine may be added, or with imprisonment which may extend to ten years, to which fine may be added, or with fine.

If we had such a law in force at home nearly every political speaker and writer in opposition to the Government would, at one time or another, render himself liable to punishment. Mr. Chamberlain, for instance, in his Radical days—or, as Lord Salisbury would say, his Jack Cade days—might assuredly have been transported for life. In India the new law will make it practically impossible for any journalist to express disapprobation, however well merited, of any act of the Government, or any officer of the Government. The measure applies, of course, to the Anglo-Indian as well as the Native Press, and judges like Mr. Justice Strachey would doubtless manage to bring within the wide terms of the Code such strong comments as the Pioneer and other journals have published respecting the conduct of the Frontier campaign. In short, if this proposed legislation is passed, no newspaper writer in India will be safe unless he is content to be a mere lickspittle of officialdom.

Equally open to objection is the proposal to make cases under this clause triable by District Magistrates, instead of being, as at present, triable only by Courts of Session or High Courts. What this means is admirably put by a correspondent of the Englishman in a letter which that well-known Anglo-Indian journal prints under the significant heading, "Quem Deus vult perdere" :—

Let us take the case of a man who for some indiscreet utterance is prosecuted for sedition with the consent of the Government in a mofussil Magistrate's Court. What would be the relative positions of the parties to the suit? It would, of course, be a Government prosecution. The Government would initiate it, and having, like Pooh-Bah, given itself its own consent to the course it had itself proposed, would hale the unhappy culprit before—whom? Its own executive officer!

The system of placing executive and judicial functions in the same hands is bad enough in ordinary cases. To extend it to cases of this kind, and make an accused journalist amenable to the jurisdiction of an official whose administration may possibly have fallen under his censure, is to pave the way for the most iniquitous oppression and injustice.

I understand that this retrograde legislation, though introduced by Mr. Chalmers, has been chiefly suggested and fomented by Sir Antony MacDonnell, who exercises great influence over the Viceroy. At present Lord Elgin and his advisers appear determined to pass it, and with an official majority on the Legislative Council there is no doubt that it will be passed if they persist. Parliament, however, should have something to say which will modify their intentions. I know from the correspondence that reaches me that the proposals of the Government are viewed with serious misgivings not only by educated natives but by many Anglo-Indians, both official and non-official; and the slight changes which have been adopted in the Bill since it was first laid before the Legislative Council have done little or nothing to make it more acceptable. The gagging of the Press will shut down the only safety-valve for native opinion in India, and remove the sole check upon despotism. No surer means of promoting popular discontent and encouraging secret conspiracies could be devised. If incitements to sedition are published, the existing law affords ample power to deal with the offender. But as Sir Richard Garth, formerly Chief Justice of Bengal, has testified, it is not on account of sedition that the Government of India brings forward this drastic measure for silencing the Press. "I read native papers myself week after week," wrote Sir Richard, "and never see anything there approaching sedition or even disloyalty or disrespect to English rule. What I do find, and what I rejoice to find, is thoroughly well-deserved censure of the arbitrary conduct of many of the Government officials. I am afraid this is exactly what the Government would wish to repress." There, in a few words, is the true explanation of the action the Government of India is taking.

There was a time when I regarded Birmingham as the Radical Mecca. Even when many Radicals there went wrong on Home Rule, I still believed them to be true in all else to Radical principles. At present I have lost all respect for them. They humbly and submissively submit to Mr. Chamberlain's orders, and are prepared to send a Tory to the House of Commons, although in the division in which there is a vacancy the Liberal Unionists outnumber the Tories by three to one. Talk of rotten boroughs! Never was there a more rotten one since a Tory threatened to send his black servant as representative of the free and enlightened constituency that he owned. Does any one suppose that, had Mr. John Bright been alive, he would ever have agreed to be a party to Birmingham being represented by a Tory? Fallen, indeed, are the Birmingham Radicals from their high estate.

And what is the inwardness of this behest? Mr. Chamberlain has made up his mind that it is contrary to his interests to maintain any longer the distinction between Liberal-Unionists and Tories. He aspires to lead the united Party, and the Tories being in the majority, the Liberal-Unionists are offered up as a sacrifice on the Tory altar. They are not even allowed to have a voice in the choice of the Tory who is to misrepresent them. To keep their noses well to the grindstone, Mr, Chamberlain has ordered them to adopt as their candidate a gentleman to whom, apart from his political views, they appear to have a special objection.

THE BRUMMAGEM TYRANT AND HIS SERFS.

Scene.—The Liberal-Unionist Council Chamber at Edgbaston. As the curtain rises some scores of Liberal-Unionist Delegates are discovered in animated conversation.

First Liberal-Unionist Delegate.: Be firm, my friends! That's what we have to be.
Too long we've knuckled under to J. C.
He's trodden on us for these ten years past;
But let us show him worms will turn at last.
Be firm, then, I repeat.
Second L.-U. D.: Just so; be firm!
I'm tired, for one, of being but a worm.
Third L.-U. D.: And so am I!
Fourth L.-U. D.: And I!
Fifth L.-U. D.: And I!
Sixth L.-U. D.: And I!
First L.-U. D.: 'Tis well! Our tyrant we'll forthwith defy.
Take courage! Make your minds up to be bold!
And let the truth this very night be told.
Let's tell our cruel despot we intend
Our rights as citizens to now defend.
Shame on the terror that our will benumbs!
Shame on—but, hist! What noise is that? He comes!

A flourish of trumpets is heard without, as the doors are flung back to admit Joseph the Brummagem Tyrant, who stalks haughtily in, attended by Jesse, Kenrick, Powell-Williams, and other humble minions.

Joseph (scowling at his assembled serfs): Why sit ye there so silent and so pale?
Slaves, I am here! Why don't you cry "All Hail!"
(After a pause.) Still silent! Is this mutiny I see?
Why don't you rise and shout "All hail!" to me?
First Delegate (pushed upon his feet by his neighbours):
May it please your Mightiness, the time has come
When we object to stay beneath your thumb.
We've meekly borne for years your snubs and slights,
But now we've vowed we will assert our rights.
We are free citizens!
Joseph (bitterly): What's that you say?
My slaves you've been, my slaves you are to-day!
Free citizens, forsooth? Pish, pish! Pooh, pooh!
You are mere items, bound my will to do.
Free citizens? What rubbish! Have a care
How my authority to thwart you dare.
First Delegate (deprecatingly): But surely—— Joseph (fiercely): Silence! Not another word!
This feeble interruption's too absurd.

I've only come to tell you what's my will,
And my behest you've merely to fulfil.
Your silly murmurs reached my ears in town,
And, to my great annoyance, brought me down.
For London's filling up on every hand,
And, socially, I'm greatly in demand.
This very night, instead of being here,
I should be dining with a famous peer.
No wonder, then, I bitterly resent
Your childish show of futile discontent.
And if you're wise, you swift amends will make
By owning humbly your ill-timed mistake;
For otherwise you shortly may deplore
That Highbury holds my residence no more.
You may, too late, find out to your despair,
I and my orchids have removed elsewhere,
And that I've shaken, in disgust complete,
The dust of Birmingham from off my feet.

[Movement in the Council Chamber.

Ah, that, I see, affects you. Very good!
Then let it be distinctly understood
That if I still consent with you to stay,
'Tis on condition that I get my way.
You have a vacant seat; you must permit
A Tory member in that seat to sit.
That is my pleasure, understand again,
And further argument is wholly vain.

Several delegates make a half-hearted effort to protest further.

Joseph: No, not a word. My mind is quite made up;
Bitter or not, you'll have to drain the cup.

They proceed to drain it by meekly voting in favour of their Tyrant's ultimatum.

Joseph: 'Tis well! My slaves still answer to the whip.
Jesse (rapturously): Great master! you defy all rivalship.
Joseph: My hat, good Jesse. See, it is not late,
And I may catch the up express at eight.
So, after all, I may escape rebuke
By taking lunch to-morrow with the Duke.

With a parting glance of mingled patronage and disdain at his "items," the Brummagem Tyrant turns haughtily on his heel. As he passes out by the door C, the Ghost of John Bright rises L. Joseph sees the illustrious Shade, and, dropping his eyeglass, rushes off with a loud exclamation of alarm. The Shade of John Bright, advancing to the front of the platform, gazes with mingled sorrow and indignation on the assembled delegates. Then it addresses them thus:—

Can this be Birmingham? Can you be they
Who used such independence to display?
Radical stalwarts once you used to be,
Now, you're the cringing slaves of Joseph C.!
Oh! shame upon you that you thus should drag
Through mire and dirt our erstwhile spotless flag!
Shame on you that, your sacred trust betrayed,
Once-honoured Birmingham you thus degrade!
Shame on you that to such base lengths you go;
No rotten borough ever stooped so low.
Let Gatton's voters now receive their due,
They were immaculate compared with you!
Compared with you in your disgrace condign,
Old Sarum's "freemen" positively shine!
No noble owner of a pocket borough
Looked on his serfs with a contempt so thorough
As Joseph looks on you; nor ever cared
To show the cynicism he has dared.
Yet you endure him. Oh, how long, how long
Will you be weak, you that were once so strong?
How long will you, that he may brag and boast,
Yield the convictions you should treasure most?
How long will you besmirch what you should prize,
And basely stoop that he may higher rise?
These are grave questions that you can't ignore
If you'd fair fame to Birmingham restore.
These are grave questions that you can't repel,
So let them, I implore, be pondered well!

Having thus spoken, the Shade of John Bright disappears as suddenly as it had come into sight, leaving the delegates in an extremely agitated condition.

SCRUTATOR.

OFFICE-HOLDERS AND EX-OFFICE-HOLDERS.

THAT the Government is not so popular as it may have been at the General Election would be admitted by its most ardent admirers. If there were a Dissolution to-morrow, probably it would secure a majority, but a considerably reduced one. It has made a good many mistakes in its foreign policy; it has in too barefaced a manner subsidised the classes at the cost of the masses; whilst, by attempting to find favour both with Tories and Liberal Unionists, it has shaken the confidence of both. It may be that, if it continues to blunder abroad, and to endeavour to prove at home that it is alike Liberal and Tory, it will be defeated at the next General Election. I fail, however, to see whether such a victory would in any way benefit the Radical cause. A Liberal Government would assume office. Such a Government would only be negatively good. It would be unable, even if it wished, to inaugurate a drastic Radical policy; whilst, were it to pursue the same course as it did when last in office, it would only carry on for a brief period a hand-to-mouth existence until once again the country, sick of the Liberal King Log, would fall back on the Tory King Stork. But I greatly doubt whether, whatever may be the shortcomings of the present Government, the Liberals will be able to secure a majority in the country on the "swing of the pendulum" tactics; for Radicals are not likely to take off their coats, and enter heartily into a contest, unless they have some clear security that, if successful, Liberal Officialdom will be prepared to give effect to Radical aims. With all respect for our official Leaders, they should realise that they made a thorough mess of matters, by their want of grip and determination, when last entrusted with a Parliamentary majority, and that Radicals naturally hesitate to entrust them with a blank cheque, merely because they insist that collectively they are an exceptionally gifted body of statesmen, and that those who have replaced them are not.

The primary error of Liberal Officialdom was to go over, bag and baggage, to Jingoism. Whenever the Conservative element in a country finds itself confronted with a Democratic wave, it seeks to divert attention from home reforms by a spirited foreign policy. These tactics are as old as the hills. The doctrine that the main aim of an Englishman should be to extend the area of the British Empire ought to have been strenuously resisted by Radicals. The aim of an English Radical should be to to level the ground the fortress of class and privilege at home, resting satisfied with being the citizen of the vastest Empire that the world has ever seen, and spending only such an amount in armaments as will suffice for the defence of that Empire. The Tories of a past generation staved off Democratic progress for years by dragging us into a twenty years' war with France. But the Liberals of that day had the good sense to decline to join in this plan of campaign. Had the Liberals of to-day boldly challenged the policy of annexations and armaments, the Liberal Party would not have found itself to-day in its present unfortunate position. A second error of Liberal Officialdom has been to ignore the aspirations of the working classes. These classes are minded that the State might do much collectively to better their position, without invading the legitimate province of individualism. In this they are right. But whilst both the Conservative and the Liberal Party have been profuse in vague generalities as to social legislation, very little has come of these professions. The consequence is that the working classes hold aloof from both Parties, some voting with one, some with the other, and some not voting at all.

I would, therefore, have Radicals resist Jingoism in all its forms, and seek to heal the breach between the Liberal Party and the working classes. But as Democratic legislation is only possible when the legislative machine is Democratic, it is essential that all those desirous of such legislation should unite in a specific and drastic scheme to effect this end. On this issue the next General Election should be fought. In every way possible the Radicals outside Parliament have urged this. But Liberal Officialdom only plays with the issue. One eminent Liberal ex-office-holder cautiously declares himself in favour of some legislative reform; the next day another whittles down what his colleague has said. Collectively their only opinion seems to be that it is well to have no opinion. In the meanwhile any one who ventures to suggest that the Radicals are right to make their support contingent on the issue at the next General Election being in accordance with what they believe essential to the progress of Radicalism, are denounced as though they were guilty of high treason. High treason to whom, I would venture to ask? I recognise no more right in ex-office-holders to impose their will on a Party than I do in any other dozen or two members of that Party. There are amongst these ex-officeholders some men strongly Democratic; others are little better than Whigs. Their views in regard to legislative reform are not, therefore, identical. The advanced section has to yield to the retrograde section, in order to prevent a split. This is much what happened at the last General Election. We know what was the result; and unless the Radicals are resolute and active, the same thing will happen at the next General Election. For many of the gentlemen on the Front Opposition Bench I have the greatest admiration. For them collectively, I have none. Their unity is only a unity in inaction. Each man seems to be afraid of his neighbour's shadow. Fidelity to Party means in their eyes fidelity to themselves. They hold that the one sole duty of every Radical and of every Liberal in the country is to labour to put them back into office, without knowing what they would do when they are there. I am for measures, not men. All that I want to know in regard to the latter is that they are prepared to bring forward, and to stand or fall by, the measures which must be passed, unless a Liberal Administration, backed by a Radical majority in the House of Commons, is, as heretofore, to be stalemated. If they are, let them clearly say so; if they are not, why should Radicals move one finger in order to place them in office?

THE ANGLO-INDIAN CAPUA.

The most significant item of news that has come to hand from India during the past week is the announcement that Sir William Lockhart—after having got as far as Calcutta on his homeward journey — has changed his mind, and decided to return to the Frontier to take charge of the operations against the Afridis as soon as they can be renewed. Considering that Sir William was coming home on three months' leave, this change of intention is highly remarkable. We are carefully informed by the oracles of the Press that the alterations in his plans originated with Sir William alone, and that the Indian Government were not parties to it before the fact. Whether this statement is true or not—and probably it is not—the significance of the change of plan remains unaffected. It means clearly that Sir William Lockhart, or those in authority over him, have suddenly awoke to the fact that the ignominious failure of the late operations is regarded both in India and at home with indignation and disgust, that something must be done to appease the growing wrath of the public, and that it is not a time for the Indian Commander-in-Chief elect to be taking a holiday. I am sorry for Sir William Lockhart personally, for he is in bad health—not probably improved by the events of the last three months—and he is, in the opinion of many who are qualified to judge, but little to blame for the lamentable fiasco with which he has been associated. But, if it was he who decided that his duty, or his reputation, requires that he should stick to work at the present juncture, whatever the cost, he is to be congratulated on the soundness of his judgment.

The correspondence that I have received during the past week confirms in every line the views already expressed in TRUTH on the Frontier Fiasco, and though officers both of the English and the Indian Army have communicated their opinions to me with unwonted freedom, I find not a man who attempts to extenuate the gravity of the failure, or to defend those who stand responsible for it. The only point on which I find any difference of opinion is as to the real cause of the failure. As a matter of course, every man who has a strong preconceived opinion as to this or that defect in our military system finds in the Frontier Campaign the conclusive proof that his opinion is the correct one. I find one retired General, for instance, who is confident that all our troubles arise from the abolition of purchase. Another believes that there is something radically wrong in the training of officers at Sandhurst and Woolwich. A third attributes every reverse to short service and the territorial system. A medical officer, for whose opinion I have great respect, writes me a long letter to prove that the "fons et origo mali" (his own expression) is the abandonment of the C.D. Acts. Now if there is one point in the record of the last four months' muddling and blundering on which it seems certain that we may congratulate ourselves legitimately, it is that the rank and file have acquitted themselves admirably throughout the campaign. There may have been isolated cases of unsteadiness, but, looking at the circumstances of the campaign, they are not to be wondered at. No one can read the detailed accounts of the fighting without feeling that the British soldier of 1897 has shown himself of the same stuff as his predecessors for the last five centuries. There was a graphic letter in the Times last week, from the pen of an officer of the Oxfordshire Regiment, describing the affair at Lundi Kotal on December 30. The concluding passage is well worth noting at a time when so many Jeremiahs are lamenting the decay of the British Army :—

That is all I have time to write now, though there is one thing that I have forgotten to mention. A large proportion of the men who had this bit of fighting came out with the last draft, and had not been a month in India. They were as steady and as plucky as if they had been war-worn veterans of a dozen campaigns, and, personally (in spite of what the people at home appear to think about the stamp of men we get for the Army nowadays), I never wish to fight by the side of anything better than these Oxfordshire recruits.

Following on this, let me take the opportunity of removing one of the few imputations that, so far as I know, have been cast upon the behaviour of British troops during the campaign. In a letter published in Truth a fortnight ago reference was made to an alleged panic on the part of a detachment of the West Kent Regiment. I remarked at the time that isolated incidents of this kind might occur in any army fighting a losing battle. The following letter, however, from an officer of the regiment present, on what was evidently the occasion referred to, shows that the occurrence has been entirely misrepresented, and I am very glad to have an opportunity of publishing it :—

The Barracks, Maidstone,
February 4, 1898.

Sir,—Having just had brought to my notice the statement made in Truth on January 27 as to the conduct of the Royal West Kent Regiment in action on the North-West Frontier of India, I write to request that, in common justice to the regiment, you will insert my letter in your next issue, or a paragraph which will refute the very serious charge, viz., "running away and leaving their officer to be cut up and horribly mutilated," which has appeared in your columns. Having been present throughout and an eye-witness of what took place on the only occasion to which your paragraph can possibly refer, viz., the attack on the villages of Agrah and Gat on September 30, I feel I am qualified to say what I can to refute the statement of the person by whom the extract in your paper was written, as he does not appear to have been anywhere near the scene of the operations.

After the first stage of the attack, in which the Guides' Infantry and the Royal West Kent Regiment acted together, the latter were ordered to make a turning movement to the right, in order to dislodge the enemy, who held a very strong position on some broken ground, in front of the village of Gat. The 31st P.I. had proceeded direct against this village, and were now being held in check by overwhelming numbers. In carrying out their orders the three leading companies of the Royal West Kent Regiment became exceedingly hotly engaged. The Captain of the leading company, of which the officer mentioned in your extract was the subaltern, decided to hold a small, low walled sangar, while the other two companies, being unable to get cover where they were, retired to a terrace, not more than sixty yards distant, already held by the supports. The company in the sangar now found that they were drawing on themselves the whole of the enemy's attention, and, in addition, by being where they were, were masking the fire of the companies in the rear. Their Captain, accordingly, very rightly decided to retire his men by degrees. The enemy, seeing this, became bolder and bolder, and advanced within a very short distance of the sangar. Several men were wounded, and had to be carried back, and eventually the Captain was left with his subaltern and only three men. Just as they were about to retire the subaltern was shot through the chest and fell dead. They tried to carry the body in, but by this time the enemy were so close upon them that the Captain, seeing what certain and useless loss of life it would entail to remain, ordered the body to be put down and the men to retire On reaching the supports the Captain immediately informed the Major commanding the firing line of what had occurred, and the latter at once detailed a party which charged forward, retook the sangar in gallant fashion, and then retired, bringing the body back with them and sustaining the loss of two men killed, two officers and three men wounded. The body had only been very slightly mutilated, and I would further point out that this fact had been carefully concealed from the officer's relations until given publicity to in your columns. Should you decide to publish my letter, I leave it for your readers to judge whether the foregoing true account lays "The Royal West Kent Regiment" open to the charge of "running away and leaving their officer to be cut up and horribly mutilated."

There is not a shadow of truth in this accusation, as the men retired in obedience to the direct orders of the Captain commanding the company.—I am, Sir, yours truly, Hubert Isacke, Lt., the R. W. Kent Regt.

As we are dealing for the moment with the matter of "Tommy's" behaviour in the face of the enemy, perhaps I may be allowed to follow the above with an interesting letter from a soldier in the 1st Northamptonshire Regiment, dealing with an affair which has already been much discussed :—

Sir,—With regard to the Tirah Expedition I venture to write you a few lines, hoping that you will, if you think it worth it, publish what you think fit, as I know you always take a great interest in your county regiment, the 1st Battalion Northampton.

A good deal has been written about what taken place on November 9 at the Saran Sar, which was a hill about four miles from camp. On the above date a reconnaissance taken place, and the 4th Brigade was ordered to advance on it at 5.30 a.m. The hill, which was a very steep one, was taken without opposition, or, at least, next to none, one man only being wounded. The retirement was ordered to commence at 12.30, but was delayed on account of some of the headquarter staff being late. Consequently, it did not commence until about 2.30 p.m. I was one of those who taken part in it. The Northamptons were ordered to cover the retreat of the brigade, and all went well until we got about half way down, when the enemy opened fire from the rear and both sides. "G" company was the rear company, under Captain A. Parkin, and he was with the rear section, about eighteen strong, and in a minute or so six of his men were wounded. This is when the difficulty commenced, every wounded man taking at least two men to carry him off the field. This company had nine men of this section wounded before getting off the field. The Captain and N.C.O.s called out for assistance, as they were very hardly pressed. The companies which preceded them in the retirement were in this order—"D," "R," "A," and "F," at about 100 yards' interval; "D," commanded by Captain Norgate; "R," Major Compton and Lieutenant Waddell; "A," Captain Brereton; "F," Captain Bacon and Lieut. Trent. A section of "D" and "R" arrived to reinforce "G," but no officer came with them. "F" company, which had a great deal further than any of the others to come, arrived under Lieut. Trent (who was shortly afterwards wounded) with three sections. Colour-Sergeant Luck, Corporal Roddy, and thirteen men were one of these sections, and, I regret to say, were never again seen alive. Second Lieut. Macintire joined this section somehow, though he did not belong to "F" company, but his dead body was found with them the next morning.

They say it cannot be found out how Colour-Sergeant Luck and his section got astray; but a great many of their comrades are of opinion that they were sent to protect a point and never ordered to retire. In any case, poor fellows, they lost their lives from some one's mistake in not giving them proper orders. The colour-sergeant was a married man and leaves a young wife and child behind him. About half-past four o'clock there was the greatest confusion. No orders were being given, and the men did not know what to do. Every one that could get out of fire did so. The wounded were being got off the hill as best they could by those left, for three companies had made their way into camp as soon as they could. Lord Methuen knows this. He saw one of the companies and spoke to the officer near camp at about 5.30. Colour-Sergeant Luck and his men were not missed until after arrival in camp at about eight o'clock.

We lost that day two officers and twenty killed, including Mr. Macintire, Colour-Sergeant Luck, and his section; one officer, Lieutenant Trent, and thirty wounded The regiment went out the next morning and found Mr. Macintire and the other fourteen close together. Poor fellows! what a death they must have had. They were all stripped naked and rifles gone—that was a catch for the enemy, the rifles and ammunition. They all say that so many would not have been killed and wounded only the Commanding Officer ordered the retirement by a nullah; that was when the enemy fired into us from the heights. You would not believe how hard it was to get up reinforcements—no order. In many cases the men were shouting for help. I heard Colour-Sergeant Underdown, who was wounded, say to the Commanding Officer, "For God's sake, send up help; the men up there are being killed." He replied, "I can do nothing."

I believe there was a court of inquiry on the cause of the number killed and wounded in the Northamptons that day. We should like to see it published. None of the N.C.O.s and men were asked to give evidence. If they had, some very funny things would have come out. A great many would like you to see into the court of inquiry, for we men are of opinion that if proper orders had been given such a disaster as to lose one whole section wouldn't have happened. Just fancy three companies in camp by six o'clock. The men of these companies say they never got any orders, and the officers said, "Let us go home." I only wish I could write a better letter on this matter; but it wants inquiring into, who is responsible for those fourteen poor fellows' lives, for all their comrades believe that they were sent to take up a point and forgotten, and they would not leave until it was too late. . . .

Those who will take the trouble to piece it out for themselves will, I think, find this a very instructive narrative. It seems clear enough, even to a civilian, that the men were desperately badly handled; that, owing to this, utter confusion reigned for some time; that a section of fourteen men were lost and massacred en masse through some stupid blunder, and that while all this was going on at the rear, several companies were marching back to camp without any attempt to detain or recall them. The suggestion of the writer that Colour-Sergeant Luck and his section were sent to occupy a point and forgotten until they had all been killed has no improbability about it, for if it occurred it would not be the only occurrence of the same kind during the campaign. Many of my readers will doubtless remember the graphic narrative of Colour-Sergeant Walker, who, after being a prisoner for some time in the hands of the Afridis, was released a few weeks back. In this case, also, a party was sent to hold a certain point and utterly forgotten, and the sergeant, who held his post till he had got all his men away, was wounded and taken prisoner in endeavouring to follow them. I have scanned subsequent news and despatches to see if any one was to be called to account for this incident. In the Northamptons' affair there has certainly been a court of inquiry, or some sort of investigation, and, after the above narrative, many of us will wait with considerable curiosity to know what the result of it was.

But through all the accounts of the actual fighting there is not a word that reflects on the behaviour of the soldiers themselves; nor, with the possible exception of the Saran Sar affair, upon any regimental officer. It is impossible, in the face of such evidence, to attribute the failure of the campaign to any shortcomings of the actual fighting line. The cause must be sought higher up in the scale, in blundering at headquarters, in a mistaken plan of campaign, an incompetent staff, and defective organisation. If the "fons et origo mali" is to be found in any one spot, that spot is Simla. Let me select from a dozen letters of the same tenor one which deals specially with this point:—

I read with the greatest satisfaction your plain-spoken words on the Frontier Fiasco. Every syllable of your comment will be endorsed by those who, like myself, have served in India, and have kept an open eye and an open mind. . . . . I served in India over a quarter of a century. How different was the condition of affairs at headquarters when I entered the service and when I left it! At the beginning of my time it was not yet considered necessary for the Government and the Army headquarters to migrate en masse to the hills every year for many consecutive months. Work was carried on from Calcutta, and carried on satisfactorily. The now famous "Mutual Adulation Society"—a canker at the heart of Government—only existed in the bud, in a harmless form. "Capua," as Simla has been happily termed, brought into full and virulent activity every form of jobbery and favouritism in high places. You may see the consequences in the gross blundering and mismanagement that have marked the present campaign. . . . .

What is wanted in India more than anything else—it is not my opinion alone, but that of every man who knows the change that has come over the Government of India in the last twenty or thirty years—is a peremptory decree from the India Council, requiring every future Viceroy and Commander-in-Chief to take office on the condition that (sickness alone excepted) the headquarters of the Government and the Army shall carry on work permanently in Calcutta or its vicinity—as did their predecessors before Simla was thought of. By these means constant touch would be established with independent, non-official Anglo-Indian public opinion. Abuses which now sap the vigour and efficiency of Government would be detected, and, before they took root, exposed in the Press, which is by no means entirely of the "reptile" variety in Calcutta. Last, but not least, the Sybaritic luxury of "hill-life" would vanish under the influence of a healthier social atmosphere and a more critical public opinion. . . . .

It so happens that long before the disastrous Frontier War was thought of, public opinion in India had expressed itself strongly on the question of "Simla." Last spring, when the Famine and the Plague were at their height, protests rose from all quarters against the migration of the Viceroy and the Government at such a period to the comfortable retirement of "the hills." A good deal was said on the subject in TRUTH, and I hope that my readers have not forgotten some of the figures which were given respecting the cost of the annual change of quarters. From first to last this operation entails upon the Indian taxpayer a charge of some £200,000 per annum—an item which might well have been saved at a moment when British charity was contributing hundreds of thousands of pounds to relieve the needs of the starving and plague-stricken population of India. But the cost of the migration is only a subordinate count in the indictment of "Simla." From all sides comes the complaint that the life of the place is demoralising, that administrative work becomes slack there, that both military and civil affairs are ruled by cliques or "gangs," that jobbery and favouritism are rampant and unchecked, and the whole atmosphere corrupt. Such influences are reflected only too plainly in the military fiasco we have just witnessed, in the incapacity of those at the head of affairs, in the composition of the staff, in the breakdown of the transport and the medical departments described in last week's TRUTH. "You say," writes a Staff Corps officer at present in England, "that the efficiency of the Indian Army has been taken for granted. So far as the Native Army is concerned, the sooner you drag the public out of such a fool's paradise the better for England and India. The officers and men of the Indian Army have indeed proved their quality, but more than this is required to make an army 'efficient.' At present everything else is lacking, and it is the actors and buffoons of Simla who are responsible for the deficiency and the inefficiency. They have allowed almost the entire control of the Departments of the Army to pass from their hands into that of the Baboo or Native Writer." Then follows a page or two describing the operations of red-tape, and the multiplication of useless correspondence in Indian military administration, and the consequences of these things in paralysing the real work of soldiering. One hears at almost every turn some phrase as contemptuous and eloquent as the above reference to "the actors and buffoons of Simla." "Government by garden-party" is the term which another critic applies to the present system of administration; and I could cite a dozen significant references to the potency of feminine influence in the councils of the Viceroy and the Commander-in-Chief. To have an aunt or a cousin at headquarters, said an officer, whose remarks I quoted a few weeks back, is now a surer qualification for a staff appointment than a P.S.C., and the remark was unintentionally capped by an officer at the front, in a private letter which found its way into TRUTH, who talked of certain Generals owing their posts to the "amusing parlour tricks" of their wives. Such expressions, repeated a hundred times, show the opinion held in military circles of the entourage of Indian Government in "the hills." Even were the opinion erroneous, the fact of the Army holding such views about its staff and headquarters would be a matter for concern; but, as it is, the whole situation in India at the present moment justifies the prevailing contempt. If Simla serves any purpose at all, it should be to dissipate the enervating influences of the plains, and render the Government purer and more vigorous. All that it does, apparently, is to give India a Government effeminate, indolent, incapable, and corrupt. One of the greatest needs of the country is a strong and determined ruler, who will make short work of this Anglo-Indian "Capua."

CABBY AND HIS SHELTER.

A good deal has appeared in the Press lately respecting the Cabmen's Shelters in the form of letters and editorial comments. This has led me to look into the matter, and in order to do so I have obtained from the Cabmen's Shelter Fund its last annual report and balance-sheet. There are, it would seem, forty-one shelters. Of these, five have been put up by the Fund, and the others have been given by various gentlemen. A Shelter costs to bring into existence about £200. It is divided into two compartments, one for the attendant or cook, the other for seating thirteen cabmen; some of the older shelters, however, do not afford even this accommodation. The system adopted is to let the shelters to the attendants. The rent averages about £10 per annum per shelter; the attendant has to provide food for the cabmen according to a printed tariff, and to cook their food at a fixed charge. He recoups himself for the value of his time, his rent, and the gas that he consumes, out of profit. The Fund has £1,100 invested. In annual subscriptions and donations it receives £476 (I suppress shillings), and the rent from the attendants, together with the charge for gas, brings in £427 per annum. Its total income, including interest on its invested funds, is £966. Its expenditure consists of £215 for central office, printing, advertising, &c. New furniture, stoves, &c., at shelters, repairs to furniture, painting, and repairs of shelters, £505; gas, £94; water, £12. The president of the fund is the Duke of Portland, and there is a committee composed of gentlemen of good position.

A dispute has recently arisen owing to differences between the privileged cabmen (those who are allowed to enter railway stations) and the non-privileged cabmen. The former complain that the attendants decline to serve them; the attendants reply that if they do serve them, the non-privileged cabmen will boycott the shelters. Without entering into the merits of this dispute, it is obvious that, if shelters are provided by the public for cabmen, all cabmen should enjoy an equal right to use them. On the other hand, it is clear that if the non-privileged do not use them, the attendants will not be able to gain their living.

Accepting facts as they are, it seems to me that the Committee would do well to pay the attendants a weekly wage, and to cater directly for the cabmen. I have had some conversation with divers cabmen in regard to the matter. They complain that the charges are slightly higher than at the Lockhart establishments; and that a man, if he comes in to warm himself, is expected to consume something. These would, I think, be the necessary consequences of the attendant being dependent upon profit on consumption. I doubt, however, whether it is essential that chops, steaks, &c., should be provided. It would probably be better to limit the supply to tea, coffee, bread, butter, cheese, and possibly pies, or something of that sort, which need only be kept warmed, each cabman however, being allowed to have steaks or chops that he provides himself cooked for him. If it be said that the Fund has not the means to adopt this plan, this might, I should think, be met by local subscriptions in the neighbourhood of the shelter, the Fund finding one half, on condition that the other half be locally subscribed. The primary idea of a shelter is that a cabman at a stand shall have some place where he can warm himself, and for this purpose the shelters do not seem to me to be large enough. The fault of the present system is that for the idea of a shelter the idea of a cook-shop has been substituted. Moreover, the Committee takes credit to itself for the shelters presenting "a very ornamental appearance." Ornamental buildings cost more to keep up than those that are simply useful, and I do not suppose that a cabman, cold and wet, cares particularly whether the place into which he enters to obtain warmth and some little refreshment, is externally beautiful, or the reverse, so long as it is comfortable inside.

NOTES FROM PARIS.

ARE EXHIBITIONS PEACE-PROMOTERS?

THE list of members of the Royal Commission to the 1900 Exhibition was drawn up by the Prince of Wales. A different list had been sent by a member of the Government to Marlborough House. The Prince read it through. Instead of writing on it "Approved, A. E.," he cast it impatiently from him, and said, though not in terms, that it was too cliquey. As the matter was related to me in French, I cannot say what the exact expression was. H.R.H. further said that if they wanted him to be President of the Royal Commission, they must accept from him the list of members. Of course in writing out his own list, he culled names from the other. His object, they say here, was to make the Commission less Tory-Unionist. Those who were responsible for the original list stood aghast when they found it was not accepted, but gave way.

The Prince of Wales greatly contributed to make the Exhibition held here in 1878 a great success. He was brought up to see in Exhibitions a short cut to the Millennium. His rank prevents him suffering from their grave drawbacks. He knows nothing of how they raise prices and naturalise exotic diseases and vices. Nor can he understand how they work against the Prince Consort's object of welding conflicting nations into one big brotherhood.

In 1878 the Prince was young enough to entertain the generous illusions in which he was brought up about Universal Exhibitions. He did not understand that the more nations know each other, the more they feel in each other's way. The principle of love is a very small factor in international affairs compared with the principle of jealousy and hatred. I was a good deal behind the scenes in the offices of the Royal Commission in 1878. This enabled me to judge of the ferocious rivalry of exhibitors for "rewards" and advertisement; of the international spite and rivalry; and of the efforts of the Prince. He really showed great energy in trying to make the British section, with its Colonial offshoots, what it was. A Tory Government was in office. If there was a sprinkling of Liberals—Lord Granville, Mr. Mundella, and Sir Lyon Playfair—it was due to the Prince's intervention. Disraeli's Imperialism was dans l'air, and was favoured by the Queen. The Prince took it up. He was fond of the French, and they, at that time, of him. This made him very desirous to do them a good turn by helping on their Exhibition—the first held after their defeats of 1870-71. It must be said that he behaved handsomely towards them. But his charming conduct was not trumpeted enough: only a small set knew of it. In this time of feverish advertisement a blare of trumpets should accompany every good action.

To help forward the Exhibition of 1878, the Prince's leal and trusty friend, Sir Philip Cunliffe Owen, stimulated Colonial agents in London to activity. The Colonies answered splendidly to the whip. H.R.H. sent his priceless Indian collection. He refused to put the Exhibition authorities to the heavy expense of insuring, and trusted it to the safe-keeping of the French people.

All this ought to have told in softening the relations of the two countries. It did tell at Exhibition Fêtes, where the Prince came out; but it chiefly excited a spirit of jealous animosity and laid the germs of all the ennuis the French have since inflicted on England. Ferry used to go primed and loaded from the British section, and, indeed, most of the politicians since known as Colonials. They were thrown into the state of mind of which Prince Bismarck took advantage. He was at last able to turn France from the roads to Strasburg and Metz by dangling grand Colonial conquests in Africa and Asia before her eyes. The enemy was not Germany, but John Bull. Ferry and the Colonials, and even Gambetta, were thrown into a state of greedy frenzy by the exhibits of the British Colonies. The specimens of metallic ores, of Australian coal, of silky merino sheepskins, of rich wheats, stirred their bile. Four years later, Ferry was full of the notion of seizing, with Bismarck's diplomatic help, on "unappropriated" West Australia. He said that by right India and Canada should belong to France, and did all he could to give trouble in Newfoundland and elsewhere.

It is always dangerous to display wealth unless the force is also shown wherewith to defend it. Hezekiah made this mistake in showing his treasures to the envoys of the King of Babylon. They at once felt greedy, and so did Nebuchadnezzar when they went back with their report. Nobody envies the skill or talent of a nation—only its material riches. The jealousy fostered by the British show at the Champ de Mars, and the bluster of Lord Beaconsfield's Imperial Policy, is still at work. It gave France driving power in Tonquin, Tunis, Siam, the Soudan, Madagascar; and Drumont goes on from victory to victory. The Jews claim him as a lost sheep of the House of Israel. He has certainly the fanaticism, intensity, narrowness, and exclusiveness of the Jewish prophets of old. Much more is he the seer than the philosopher. I don't know whether he is as ferocious as he claims to be, but his instinct, like that of Joshua, seems to be to slay and slay and slay. Some Jews say the name of Drumont was originally Dreimonde, or the three moons—the sign of "my uncle." Now that I think of it, most Drummonds I have met look Jewish.

The Jews in former times were wise to hide their wealth, and live in houses externally mean-looking. Nobody envies us when we have the Kingdom of Heaven in ourselves, but directly we try to control the flesh-pots every one is our foe. A tacit conspiracy goes on round every wealthy man to plunder him and poison his enjoyment. Poor Mrs. Ayer used to complain of being treated as a sheep born to be perpetually shorn. In private life and history one sees the same causes produce similar effects. Why was Louis Philippe knocked over in 1848? Because, in addition to being a King Stork, he had managed to be a Gold King. He, and a Chamber of Deputies named by 200,000 electors, thought to keep all the railway patronage and jobbery in their hands. There was a universal conspiracy—tacit at first—against them of all the struggling middle class. They wanted to share the railway spoils. They could not throw up barricades themselves; but they egged on the unemployed, who had been thrown out of work by the completion of the fortifications of Paris.

The fierce Judenhetz that has burst forth in France is due to the small number of Jews—about 100,000—and the vastness of their wealth. They control all the railways, the Bank of France, the Stock Exchange, and Parliament, and are able to raise and depress at will the prices of every kind of merchandise. The fall in the value of real estate around Paris after the siege has led to a zone of Jews being formed all round it. They own most of the fine old châteaux in the suburbs. The finest private houses in Paris belong to Jews. The society journals live by celebrating Jewish dinners, balls, soirées, and what not. Romantic seamstresses in England would enjoy reading how the wives of Jewish Barons blaze in diamonds at Drawing-rooms. Here the accounts of their social triumphs only cause resentment. The Comte de Paris was seriously blamed for publishing his books at Calmann Lévy's. The whole Orleans family lost ground by allowing Baron Hirsch to pay a heavy gambling debt of one of their younger members. Drumont responds to the feeling of anger at Jewish opulence. Hence his success. The Jews really are not worse than Christians would be in their place. Perhaps they are better. But neither Jew nor Christian is good enough for the impunity which colossal wealth secures to the former. I will even admit that in their home lives wealthy Jewish are better than wealthy Christian Frenchmen.

The Saxe-Coburg family (Austrian branch) reigns on the Riviera. The King of the Belgians has a southern Osborne with a private port for his yacht at Villa Franca.

It promises to be a much finer place than the Queen's marine residence, which is too much in the Cubitt style for magnificence. The Princess Philip of Saxe-Coburg, his daughter, has also a fine residence on a hill above Nice —Il Paradiso. She has bought it, and added to it extensive stables and coach-houses. This Princess inherits the taste of the Queen of the Belgians for horses. They say at Spa, where her Majesty stays too often, that were she not a Queen, she would like to be a thorough-bred horse. The Princess Philip is fond of showy equipages, and often travels in a coach and four, with postilions, couriers on horseback, and outriders. She has a large independent fortune. Her husband has the best part of the Kohary estates.

I wonder the Burg metallo-therapeutic treatment is not resorted to by Mr. Gladstone's doctors. It is not much good—what treatment is?—when the vital forces are low. But when there is vitality, it is most efficacious in removing local pain. I can speak from a recent experience. I sprained my knee. The sprain was angered by a touch of rheumatism. Torturing nights were the consequence. I one night remembered to have seen Charcot's experiment with metals on neuralgic heads and rheumatic joints. The only available metals I had were sous—for silver is no good—I bound a number round my knee, had a painless night, and steadily improved. Subsequent applications of St. Amand mud reduced the sprain. There were also dreadful aches in the hands, which the sou treatment cured in a few hours. Some are more easily influenced by gold, some by iron, some by zinc. Each should be tried in turn, until the affinity is ascertained. Relief is given to Mr. Gladstone by opiates. They reduce vitality. Still, it may not be too late to try metallo-therapeutics.

Stones are used for various purposes, sometimes for building, sometimes for throwing at others. It is now proposed to use the same stones at one and the same time to accomplish both objects. Last week Dean Farrar attended a meeting in Canterbury which was held to promote the movement to erect a monument in memory of the "forty-one Protestant martyrs who in the reign of Queen Mary were burnt at the stake" in that city. Dean Farrar is reported to have said at the meeting that "since the Reformation was firmly established in England no person had been burnt for purely religious opinions." That was a surprisingly misleading statement. After the Reformation an even more cruel process was adopted for those who suffered death for their religion—and very many did; they were first hanged, then cut down whilst still living, disembowelled, and their entrails burnt before their dying eyes. It may be well, moreover, to remind the Dean of the words attributed to Julius Cæsar—to wit, that "monuments are made for victories over strangers; domestic troubles should be covered with the veil of sadness."

The "Memoirs of Thomas Earl of Ailesbury," were printed for the Roxburgh Club in 1840. At page 31, vol. i., there occurs a story which is obviously applicable to the Dreyfus case, and the view which the French authorities take of la chose jugée:—

"The mayor of the town was master of the inn I went to (1680), and very naturally I asked him, 'What news'? He, with a grave countenance, told me there was sad news. I cried out, 'Lord, is the King dead?' He made slight of that in comparison to what he told me, that the Lord Castlemaine and Sir George Wachman were acquitted. I replied, 'No doubt they were not guilty.' 'Oh, my Lord!' replied he. 'If they had not been guilty, they never would have had their trial!' I told him I was sorry the King had not a wiser magistrate to represent him. This serves to let you know the same credulous humour ran through the whole nation."

The same "credulous humour" seems now to be prevalent in France.

Telephonic communication having been established with the Houses of Lords and Commons, it would greatly benefit members were the electrophone also introduced at Westminster. Were the electrophone established in the libraries, smoking-rooms, and wherever it might be needed, members might learn how the debates were progressing without having to inconvenience themselves as they have now. Moreover, as many members of both Houses have the electrophone at home this would further assist them. Were this suggestion adopted, the electrophone would be even more used by the clubs than it is now, for many members of London and provincial clubs would eagerly seize the opportunity to listen to the debates.—Believe me to be, very truly yours, MARMADUKE.

SPORTING NOTES.

THERE are many owners who would do a great deal better with their racing studs if they would only try their horses in a rational way. In the first place horses ought always to be tried over all distances, and then we should not find animals puddling about in T.Y.C. races which can perfectly well stay two miles, having good stamina but being deficient in speed. Then when a horse is "going for" a mile race, the owner and trainer ought not to be so grossly fatuous as to content themselves with a trial over six furlongs, being so stupid and slovenly as to be satisfied, if the animal does well over that distance, that it will certainly stay the longer course, which assumption proves to be incorrect in three cases out of every four. This idiotic blunder is committed every week of the season. Whatever may be the distance of the race, let the horse be tried over that distance, and no less. Another fathead's trick is to try two-year-olds over four furlongs, although there is no race of a less distance than five furlongs. Every one knows that an animal which apparently walks in at half a mile often stops to nothing when another hundred yards have been traversed. Every spring we hear of two-year-olds being heavily backed on the strength of trials of this delusive and misleading character, and after the beast has been well beaten for lack of stamina, there is a vituperating howl from its friends, who, however, again commit the same insane mistake before another month has passed. Every rational owner ought to satisfy himself that a horse can certainly get the desired course before any money is invested on it. The usual method of trying horses is only worthy of a herd of Bedlamites, and we see its ruinous results nearly every day of the season. There is also something at once ludicrous, melancholy, and instructive in the mulish pertinacity with which some owners will persist in running horses out of their proper courses. How often do we see an animal which has palpably lost a mile race through lack of stamina started over and over again for events of that distance, instead of being kept for five or six furlong contests, the result being that the asinine owner is largely out of pocket by successive defeats, instead of winning the big stake which would have been brought off if the horse had been judiciously managed.

I hear that the Duke of Portland is likely to have a good candidate for the Brocklesby Stakes at Lincoln in Arrowroot, by Morion out of Semolina, and an animal thus bred certainly ought to be able to race if there is anything in "running" blood.

I am glad to hear that the absurd project of a racecourse in the neighbourhood of Newbury, on the estate of Mr. Baxendale, has collapsed. There is no room for any more fixtures whatever. I should vastly like to know how the addleheads who have put money into the so-called Folkestone speculation (the course being really several miles distant from that place) can ever expect any return with one meeting in the year? Instead of the Stewards of the Jockey Club being so foolish as to license new meetings the present list of fixtures ought to be greatly curtailed.

Cortegar was generally thought to be fairly well handicapped for the City and Suburban, but she has paid forfeit, and the stable is represented in the Epsom race by Melfitana, who certainly cannot stay the course. I suspect we shall find Cortegar reserved for the Royal Hunt Cup, but she will be dangerous in any race for which she may go, as she has greatly improved, and has grown into a beautiful mare. Melfitana is the sort of animal to win the Stewards' Cup at Goodwood.

I see that Hermiston has been backed for the Lincolnshire Handicap, but, although Mr. Low's colt has accepted for that race, he certainly will not be fit to run so early in the season. Hermiston will come very near winning either the City and Suburban or the Kempton Park Jubilee Handicap, and he is a certain starter for either the one race or the other, most probably for the latter event. Of course it is eminently desirable to win a handicap if possible with this horse before he runs for the Newmarket Stakes at the Second Spring Meeting, but I shall be vastly surprised if he proves capable of beating Cyllene at even weights. I am told that Mr. Rose will probably start Cyllene for the Column Stakes in the Craven week, which race would be a certainty for him, and his 10 lb. penalty is reduced to 5 lb. by a breeding allowance. Cyllene would be receiving 2 lb. from Dieudonné, but if Mr. Rose's colt runs for this race the Duke of Devonshire will, no doubt, reserve his own steed for the Two Thousand.

The Baker has accepted for both the Metropolitan and the Chester Cup, but he is not likely to be really fit before the end of May. If, however, Sir John Kelk's colt "comes on" more rapidly than is expected, he will have a very good chance of winning the Chester Cup if he starts for that race. The Baker is a really good stayer, and he certainly represents the best class in the race except Chelandry, and Lord Rosebery's mare will have 2 lb. the best of the weights on the weight-for-age scale. I fancy that Chelandry will "go for" the City and Suburban, and she ought to win that handicap if she is all right. The Baker will probably in the end be reserved for Ascot, and I daresay Sir John Kelk will try to win both the Vase and the Gold Cup with his colt.

Mr. Rose's The Convict will be found an uncommonly smart colt over from six furlongs to a mile, and he must not be forgotten whenever he is started for a handicap over this course. Mr. Oswald's St. Evox, who finished fourth in the Middle Park Plate, has been much cracked up as a promising Derby outsider by people who are, presumably, unaware of the fact that the colt is touched in the wind. I do not believe that St. Evox has the most remote prospect of winning any of his "classic" engagements, and he can have been left in for the £10,000 stakes only on the off-chance of there being a complete collapse in the field for these races.

King Hampton is very leniently weighted for the Lincolnshire Handicap, and I expect he will prove one of the best of the Newmarket horses for that race, as he is well forward in condition, and he is believed to be now in excellent form; but, of course, no sane person will back any animal whatever for this race until it has been well tried, for every season there are candidates whose appearance and style of galloping throw all beholders into paroxysms of enthusiasm, but when it comes to racing in earnest they are beaten a hundred yards. The Lincoln backers of Diakka must have a dismally distinct recollection of his wretched running there, when, if he had been in his proper form, he would have won in a trot. After Lincoln I pointed out that Diakka was so preposterously backward in condition that it would be imprudent to take any notice of his running there, and subsequent events speedily proved my view of the case to be perfectly correct. Half the horses which eager mooncalves are gulled into backing for the Lincoln race come to the post utterly untrained, and it is simple fatuity to think of meddling with this race for the next five weeks at least.

Mr. Hooley has become the tenant of Sefton Lodge, the Duchess of Montrose's well-known residence at Newmarket, in the place of Mr. Rucker. The "Calendar" contains the official announcement of a partnership in Northallerton between Mr. Hooley, Mr. Teddy, and Mrs. Macrae. Northallerton has been left in for both the Metropolitan and the City and Suburban. I believe this horse to be a really good stayer of the old-fashioned sort, and he ought to have a very successful career as a four-year-old if only he is judiciously placed.

Kilcock is recommended as a likely horse to win the City and Suburban, but he has no pretensions to stay the course, and would have a better chance for the Kempton Park race so far as the distance is concerned, but he seems decidedly overweighted. He has been a very unlucky horse, and it may be hoped that he will win a good race before he retires from the turf, but this is not likely to be achieved if he is run out of his distance. Ravensdale, who is also in the Beckhampton stable, has likewise accepted for the City and Suburban, but this horse is more likely to be dangerous at Lincoln if he gets through a preparation, which is exceedingly doubtful. Shaddock has been left in for the Chester Cup, and on his best three-year-old form he could win that race easily enough. He was weeded out of the Kingsclere stable at Newmarket last December, when Darling gave 700 gs. for him. I fancy that Porter would not have advised the Duke of Westminster to get rid of this horse if there had been a good race in him. Wild Fowler appears to be much fancied for the Two Thousand and Derby, but I expect he will be found to lack stamina, and in the Middle Park Plate he certainly ran like a non-stayer. Sugar Loaf, the half sister to Galtee Moor, by Gallinule, was not properly fit last season, and she will win some good races as a three-year-old if all goes well with her.

My prediction that Regret would be a good horse to follow this winter has been abundantly verified. At Gatwick last week he cantered away from a large field in the Maiden Hurdle Race, winning at his ease by eight or ten lengths. If only he had been kept to T.Y.C. races as a three-year-old he would have made a great name for himself, but he was ruined for the time by being senselessly trained and raced over distances which were utterly beyond his capacity.

Manifesto was unexpectedly started for the Holmwood Steeplechase at Gatwick, but, although the horse looked very well, backers appeared to be afraid to support him, and, after opening favourite at 5 to 2, he drifted out to 4 to 1, which was offered all over the place, whilst Ballymoney and Siberian became all the rage. The race (two miles) was run at an unusually fast pace for an event of this description, in order, presumably, that Manifesto might feel his weight, as he was giving 37 lb. to one favourite and 32 lb. to the other, but, instead of Mr. Dyas's steed being worn down, as was expected, he won cleverly, and it was an excellent performance, considering that he was obviously a long way from being at his best. Manifesto has incurred no penalty for the Grand National, and he will be much fitter when he appears at Aintree, but he had better not be backed until his number is up, as his owner often moves in mysterious ways.

There are twenty entries for the Goodwood Cup, but why a winner of so paltry an event as the Jockey Club Cup should be made to carry the same penalty as the winner of the Ascot Cup or the Derby it is utterly impossible to understand, and the arrangement is a most fantastical puerility. Quite as extraordinary is the omission of the Goodwood Cup itself from the races for winning which special penalties are incurred. Why in the name of common-sense should the winner of the Doncaster Cup or Ascot Vase carry 14 lb. extra, while the Goodwood Cup, which is a more valuable stake than either of these events, is unmentioned, and a previous winner incurs a penalty of only 3 lb.? These crack-brained anomalies are the more astounding when one remembers that Lord March supervises the management of the Goodwood Meeting. Galtee More has been entered, and so have Love Wisely, Limasol, St. Cloud II., and The Baker; but the name of Cyllene does not appear in the list, and I understand that after Mr. Rose's colt has run for the Ascot Cup he will be reserved for the Jockey Club Stakes of £10,000 at the Newmarket First October Meeting. Count Schomberg has, of course, been entered, but his chance will be as forlorn if Galtee More starts as it would have been last year if Persimmon had been included in the field. Mr. Bottomley's horse has a penalty of 21 lb. for walking over for the Jockey Club Cup. Some wiseacre in an evening paper has informed his unfortunate readers that Count Schomberg will have to be reckoned with at Ascot "as the winner of the two Goodwood Cups." People who have a particle of practical knowledge of racing affairs are aware that in considering a horse's prospects for any race it is desirable to consider, not what events he has won, but rather what he has beaten, from which alone some idea of his form can be obtained. Count Schomberg won the Goodwood Cup of 1896 by the easy process of a walk over, while in last year's race he had to beat only Labrador, who is not even in the second class, and who ran wretchedly all the season. The Count would have a pretty sort of chance at Ascot with 4 lb. the worst of the weights with Galtee More, and having to give 25 lb. to a good three-year-old like Cyllene.

There could not have been a better day for an International match than last Saturday at Richmond when England and Ireland met. The sun shone brightly, there was hardly any wind, and the ground was dry. But the play was disappointing. The game was loose and scrambling. There was an absence of combination on both sides. The Irish forwards played with any amount of dash, but there was not that cohesion one saw a few years ago at Blackheath. Their footwork was not good, and their passing weak. They did not come rolling down the ground like an irresistible wave of green. Three men at most came together. In the scrimmage, even when one short, they more than held their own, and they worked like Trojans to the finish. The halves were superior to their opponents. They tackled well, but they did not consider it necessary to pass. So Bulger had no chance of using his pace. The three-quarters never combined; Lee kicked well until he was smashed, and then Lindsay, who came out of the scrimmage, did fairly well. The full-back seemed nervous. At all events he often mulled his kicks, and even when he got in a good one he suffered by comparison with Byrne, whose kicking was simply superb. He got himself out of difficulties, and then found touch with long, lofty punts. He also tackled well, and he had no chance of stopping Magee, who was badly missed by Myers. It was at half that the chief weakness of the English team lay. Myers was no good at all. He badly mulled every pass he made, sending the ball along the ground. Jacobs was nearly as bad. One does not often see such a weak set of halves in a first-class match. On neither side did they feed their three-quarters. The English made some pretence of so doing, but the three-quarter line was literally starved. On nearly every occasion that he could do so, Bunting made an opening for Robinson, who got in some brilliant runs. But he and Fookes had practically nothing to do. Mackie preferred to charge into the midst of the forwards and struggle violently, instead of feeding his wing men. However, it must be remembered that he saved several very nasty rushes in brilliant style. As to the English forwards they started well but did not last. There was practically no dribbling, and it looked as though there was at least one "passenger" in the scrimmage. The game was fast and exciting enough in all conscience. Fortune was very fair in smashing one man on each side for about the same period of time. As Ireland got the winning score when they were one short they deserve credit for their victory.

In one very material respect the game was not an example unto righteousness. There must be in any match some good hard play; but in this match there was a great deal of unnecessary roughness. Both sides were equally to blame. One often saw a man pass the ball just as his opponent was coming up to collar him. But the collarer proceeded with his collar all the same. So, too, when a man had his arms round his opponent who passed; he was slung on to the ground all the same. Such things may be done accidentally; but during this match such occurrences were far too frequent. One does not expect the match to be played as though the men were afraid to touch one another. But it is imperative to protest strongly against unnecessary exhibitions of brute force. It is no excuse to urge that in the excitement of an International match players so far forget themselves as to adopt tactics which they would not indulge in if the game were an ordinary club one. The International Board will have to keep careful watch on this new phase of the game. One has a pretty shrewd suspicion that such collaring is done, not in the heat of the moment, but with a deliberate intention of stopping an opponent from active play until he can pick himself up again. Such illegitimate methods, of course, prevent an open and passing game being properly played.

Before the match was played the International Board agreed that Wales should be once more received into the fold. This very satisfactory arrangement was brought about by the Welshmen agreeing that Gould should not play in any of the representative matches. At the time when he accepted his testimonial it was generally understood that he intended to retire from active football, although he declined to enter into any agreement not to play again. The Welshmen were, therefore, able to make the concession without any loss to themselves, and, having made peace with the Board, they will be in a stronger position to deal with those cases of poaching of which certain English clubs are guilty.

When he is old and in his grey hairs, Dr. E. B. Turner may have put amateur cycle racing on a satisfactory basis. He has waged, in the face of great opposition, a relentless warfare against the makers' amateur. At the recent meeting of the National Cyclists Union he did good work in materially altering the rules as to pace-making. He pointed out that racing for the amateur should be a recreation. A genuine amateur could have no chance against men who had the advantages of being pace-makers, paid and maintained by bicycle manufacturers. The Birmingham section ingenuously suggested that if the pace-making were done away with the championship meetings of that town would no longer be a source of profit. But Dr. Turner was, nevertheless, able to get some very important alterations passed in spite of the opposition of that trade stronghold.

How are the mighty fallen! Three out of the first four clubs in the first division of the League were beaten in the first round of the Cup tie. The fourth, West Bromwich, only just headed New Brighton Tower. Of course, the surprise packet was Burslem, whose team is only second in the Midland League. Their draw against the League champions was no fluke. For in the return game extra time had to be played, and they were successful, chiefly owing to the vagaries of the Sheffield tactics. The goalkeeper got mixed up with the forwards. So the crack teams did no better than the poor despised South. Only one South team was successful, and only one of the four crack teams was victorious. Between cricket and football there is not much to choose in the way of surprises.

The sooner the English cricketers pack up and come home the better it will be for their cricket. The majority of the test games have been lost, like the toss. When our men started off winning, every one said it was the finest team that had been sent out to Australia, and I verily believe it would be difficult to put an eleven into the field that could much improve on it. The fact remains they have been badly beaten. Whether pleasure and cricket have been injudiciously combined is not for me to say. Some think so. No doubt the extraordinary heat has affected them. But the singular fact is that the victory of Australia is due to the new blood, Howell, Noble, and MacLeod. The Colonial bowlers are certainly strong. The wicket is not responsible for such continued success. There is no doubt that if the Australians were to visit this country this summer the excitement would be intense. After a twelvemonth the interest in the new players will have had time to cool down a bit.

There was quite a busy time for cross-country runners last week. The cross-country championships for junior clubs were held, and in the North of the Thames race Silsby, of Hampstead, just got home first from Walker, of the Tee-To-Tum A.C., whose club were very easy winners, and ought to show up well in the Southern Counties Junior Championship. Four yards separated the two after a six miles race. A similar event for clubs south of the Thames was held at Bromley, when the Wandle team just headed Reading. In this event are included several country clubs whose members have great advantages in the way of training over Londoners. The Metropolitan streets are not at this time of the year the best training grounds. They are in the pink of condition in August and September, when there are plenty of obstacles about. But that is too early in the year for the cross-country season. It is very satisfactory to find this form of sport in such a flourishing condition amongst this class of clubs. It means that a lot of young fellows who cannot afford the luxury of football grounds are determined to get sport at any cost. They train hard in the streets after a long day's work, and they thoroughly deserve success. Some of the leading cross-country clubs were engaged in bringing off events for different challenge trophies. Of the Ranelagh men, Kirkcaldy, the limit man, had a very easy win, while, with the Blackheath Harriers, Pyrke, a back marker, was first, after a good race; while the crack club that really started this form of sport, the Thames Hare and Hounds, had a two miles' handicap. Lloyd, Whitelaw, and Rye had a very fine race, and the veteran, J. E. Dixon, came in fourth.

With reference to the note in this column last week respecting the Sunday football prosecution, the Vicar of South Stoke writes to say that I have been "very grossly misinformed both as regards his father, the late vicar, and himself," and that he hopes I shall see my way to "contradict statements so devoid of truth." If the vicar had told me which statements were erroneous I would have corrected them, but as it is I am somewhat in the dark. The comments I published upon the case were my own, but for the facts I relied upon the reports in the London daily papers. Does the vicar object to the statement that his late father encouraged the young men of his parish to play football on Sundays? If it was wrong I am, of course, sorry that it was made —though to my mind it was nothing but creditable to the late vicar. Does the vicar also take exception to the statement that it was at his instigation the recent prosecution was instituted? In the Daily Telegraph the action of the Parish Council in putting in motion the obsolete Act of Charles I. is directly attributed to the efforts of the vicar, who is a member of the Council, and whose "party" is said to be in a clear majority; and the same suggestion has since been made by the counsel for the defence in a letter to the Standard. If it is untrue that the vicar brought about the prosecution, I am heartily glad to hear it, for it would show that he is, after all, more broad-minded than had been supposed.

MAMMON.

FROM MOSES MOSS TO BENJAMIN BOSS.

Sunday.

MY DEAR BEN,—Considerable irregularity has been apparent in the Stock Markets during the past week, but the course of events has been very much as I have foreshadowed. We have had dulness in gilt-edged investments, but great activity in American Railway stocks. Canadian Rails experienced a distinct slump, while the Mining departments are giving indications of renewed animation. Apart from the Home Railway department, which has been depressed by disappointing dividend announcements, there appears now to be

A LARGE BUSINESS IN SIGHT.

Of the transactions which I thus foresee, a large share will doubtless fall to the Yankee department. The recent pronouncement of President McKinley, in favour of currency reform, and the fact that the Teller silver resolution has been thrown out by the House of Representatives with a considerable majority, have cleared the air, and the strength recently shown by this market is at last attracting the public on this side. The latter had been largely engaged in Canadian Pacifics and Grand Trunks, and the somewhat top-heavy position of both these groups is causing a transfer of attention to Yankee Rails. In favour of the latter it may be said that traffics are improving in a satisfactory manner, that a revival in trade is still going on, and that a great many big deals are still on the tapis, in view of which the leading Wall-street financiers are bound to support quotations. The events of the past week have shown how sensitive Canadian Railway stocks are now to any unfavourable development, and my caution to leave these alone for a while has been fully justified. Home Rails have suffered from the disappointment in the dividends of the Great Western and Midland Companies, but when, in the course of the next few days, the North-Western announcement has been made, it is probable that this market will pull itself together again, although the rumour that the Chinese loan had been definitely concluded by the British Government has not, so far, been confirmed. A satisfactory issue should have a bearing upon the whole of the Stock Markets, and would, no doubt, be favourable to all speculative stocks; while, on the other hand, Consols and certain other gilt-edged securities would probably be adversely affected, as the new loan bearing the British guarantee would compete with them. What effect it would have upon the Money Market remains to be seen, but it may be assumed that the issue would be made with every care not to disturb the same. Although we have had a slight setback in rates of discount, this state of things is not likely to continue, and higher values will doubtless prevail in the near future. South American stocks have been steady, with the exception of Argentine Rails, which have reacted, and it is as well that the advance in this class of securities should not go ahead too fast. There has been a distinct rally in the Kaffir Circus, which promises greater activity, and strong support has also been given to several leading groups in the West Australian section. In the Industrial department the "Bull" movement has received a check in several directions. Thus the exaggerated rise in Hudson Bay shares has been followed by a relapse, while fish-oil and petroleum shares have dropped heavily, and Coats have given way. This is precisely what I have been expecting, and my readers should be extremely careful as to what industrial undertakings they select for investment. Some of the shares which are most active just now will doubtless experience a heavy fall when the insiders have succeeded in unloading their holdings upon the public.

HOME RAILS—MORE DISAPPOINTMENTS.

Although estimates had, after the unfavourable results published by the North-Eastern and Great Northern Companies, been considerably reduced, the Midland and Great Western announcements brought fresh disappointment. The distributions will be gathered from my comparative list, which now requires only the North Western dividend to become complete as far as the English lines are concerned:—

An increase in working expenses, and interest on capital, have absorbed the £205,000 of additional earnings of the Great Western, which merely maintains the previous distribution. The Midland dividend of 6½ per cent. on the former undivided stock works out to 2½ per cent. on the Preferred, and 4 per cent. on the Deferred, and the dividend is therefore ½ per cent. less than last year. This means that more than the £105,000 of additional earnings have been required in view of larger working expenses. Midlands did not decline on the announcement, however, and Great Western stock is but little lower, as the view is being taken that under the influence of threatened strikes the leading railway Companies have thought fit to make conservative distributions only so as not to furnish any excuse to agitators for asking still higher wages. The Midland and Great Northern, moreover, have to prepare for the coming Great Central competition. I have received several communications with reference to my remarks as to the desirability of splitting or duplicating North Western stock, and it is really to be hoped that the shareholders will take the matter in hand, as the division into Preferred and Deferred would be a very convenient one, while it would certainly ensure a considerable increase in capital value. By the way, the Railway News, in publishing a table of working expenses, draws attention to the fact that the Brighton, Chatham, and District Companies are exceptional in their results, the ratio of expenses for the year 1897 of the District being only 48·7 per cent, while out of an increase of £5,880 in gross for the past half-year, the sum of £3,100 is secured as net, or about 54 per cent. The case of the Chatham is similar, while the other Companies, with the exception of the three named, have saved much less, the total net increase amounting to only about 13 per cent. for the past half-year. The result obtained by the District must be considered very satisfactory, and there is every promise of the full Preference dividend being paid in the near future. The increase of traffic has been chiefly obtained from the Western Extension lines, and this circumstance is of great promise when it is considered that the lines which are now being constructed will furnish in a similar way additional traffic. This applies, as I have repeatedly stated, to the Ealing and Harrow, Harrow and Uxbridge, and Whitechapel-Bow lines. At the Chatham and Dover meeting Mr. Forbes was in first-rate form, which is saying a good deal. He drew special attention to the fact that the profits had been earned at a cost of 50·64 per cent., and to the continued progress in distributable earnings. The expenditure of £110,000 on rolling stock will doubtless prove satisfactory, and the money was not spent before it was wanted. Upon the whole the statements made at the meeting were very satisfactory, and seem to bear out the favourable view taken by Stock Exchange operators, who have put up the Ordinary and Second Prefs., a dividend on the latter being now in sight. Great Centrals have moved irregularly, but the 1894 Ordinary is rallying again at 42 xd., and I maintain that this is one of the most promising lock-ups. Brighton "A" receded to 177¾ xd., recovering to 178⅛, while Dover "A" are quoted 116. From the latter figure the dividend has still to be deducted, and the price ex dividend will look very cheap. I do not for a moment think that the City and Waterloo Railway will make much difference to the South Eastern, as the "Bears" of Dover "A" would have us believe. A moderate decline has taken place in the Scotch section, but the return of the engineers to work has brought much business to the Caledonian, and the strong revival in shipbuilding on the Clyde should prove of the greatest benefit to this line. Coras (Caledonian Deferred), therefore, are well worth buying at their present level of 58⅓. By the way, the return of the men to work has been effected in a very satisfactory and quiet manner, and I trust that the relations between the masters and men will henceforth be of a pleasant character, notwithstanding the prolonged fight. Some attention is being directed to the stocks of the Central London Railway, and according to the statements made by the Chairman at Wednesday's meeting of shareholders the excellent progress which is being made in the construction of the line fully justifies the interest which is beginning to be taken in the stocks from the investment point of view. Three-fourths of the main line tunnel have been completed, also one-half of the station tunnels, while almost the whole of the lift and staircase shafts have been constructed. In about fifteen months' time this line, six and a half miles long, will handle a large number of passengers on a route which may well be considered the most important in the Metropolis, as it traverses the centre of London, which has not hitherto been served by any railway, while also connecting the City with the West. The most improved machinery has been acquired for the purposes of electric traction, and the first shipment of the electric locomotives which have been ordered in the States will be made at the commencement of April. About the success of the line there cannot be the slightest doubt, both from the point of view of its capacity to carry large numbers of passengers rapidly, and of the prospect of the working being carried out at considerable profit. Under these circumstances, the ordinary stock fully paid at 10⅛, and partly paid at 6⅛, as well as the Preferred and Deferred at 1⅝ and 4⅝ respectively, deserve every attention.

The Yankee Market—Increased Animation.

Some remarks in the New York Journal of Finance on the great change which has come over the Wall-street market are so much to the point that I cannot refrain from reproducing the same. They bear specially on the important Vanderbilt deals which have recently imparted so much animation to the Yankee department. My contemporary states that it is years since the Vanderbilt and Gould people have worked the market for higher prices openly or at the same time, and they now seem to have separate interests, but to have consummated their plans for the future at one and the same time. In this the market is on a different plan from any occupied for years. Neither interest is striving to overcome the other, but to be occupying positions that promise well for the future prosperity of their individual properties. Wall-street can congratulate itself on this, and can more readily take a chance on the long side of the Gould properties, there being small chance of the Gould people getting astraddle of the market, as was the case upon too many occasions when Mr. Jay Gould was his own leader. The occasional scoop must be expected, but the results that would result to the small speculator under the old methods, when Mr. Gould was amassing his fortune, are not likely to occur in this present market. The strength of the Vanderbilts is too great to be questioned by Mr. George Gould, and it is just as well to pull together for higher prices, leaving the material profits to depend upon the popularity of the scheme each has to propose for public support. My New York contemporary adds that Mr. Keene is the acknowledged leader in speculative circles, yet he has his solid investments as well to take care of, and, being unhampered by the vast property cares of the Vanderbilts or Goulds, he can give his immediate attention to the manipulation which is necessary at all times, whether the market be "Bull" or "Bear." So long as the corporate interests of the Vanderbilts and Goulds are well looked after, it is safe to expect the speculator will do the actual labour of keeping prices at the Exchange moving to the front, other conditions being equal. Thus, the New York Journal of Finance. This practically means that it is for the present to the interests of the great Wall-street capitalists to support the market, and that the old Gould methods have fallen into disrepute. Of course, eventually a set-back must come again, especially if prices are pushed up too far, but at present there still seem to be ample opportunities for profitable dealing, especially if stocks are well selected, and care is taken to buy on reactions. As I have already explained, the fact that the Teller resolution has been disposed of by the House of Representatives, and that President McKinley has openly pledged himself to sound money, is in favour of the plans of the big financiers, who have many important deals to engineer, and in this they will be helped by the remarkable growth in traffics, and by the improvement in business generally in the United States. The most interesting feature still remains the alliance between the New York Central and Lake Shore, and the combination which draws the Union Pacific into close connection with the Vanderbilt roads. After a further rise New York Central and Lake Shore stocks have reacted somewhat, which is not surprising considering the enormous recent advance. Union Pacifics at one time moved up in New York to a parity of 37⅜, while the new Preferred stock touched 65. From these points there has been a reaction to 35 and 63½ respectively, but the only disturbing feature is the Kansas Pacific sale, with regard to which various rumours are current. There is but little doubt, however, that the Union Pacific Committee will secure this branch on their own terms, and on any further decline, therefore, Union Pacifics are an excellent purchase. It is generally anticipated in well-informed quarters that Union Pacific New Prefs. will stand at 70 before the settlement takes place. Great attention has been devoted during the last few days to Eries, notably the Ordinary and Prefs., which have gone ahead to 16⅛ and 42⅜ respectively. The improvement occurred on the announcement that the Erie Company had obtained control of the Susquehanna and Western, which runs from the Wyoming Valley goldfields to New York, where its terminals are of considerable value. This secures an alternative inlet to New York and a considerable improvement of the Erie's position amongst the coal roads. Messrs. Morgan have been busy for some considerable time in mopping up the stock, as will be gathered from the following paragraph which appeared in the Wall-street Journal of a fortnight ago:—

> Susquehanna and Western Preferred has had quite a fair rally from the lowest shortly after the transfer of control became known. We understand that quite a little of the stock which was thrown on the market has been acquired for the account of J. P. Morgan & Co. in connection with the Erie deal. It is understood that when the time comes for the Erie Company to make an offer for the minority holdings in Susquehanna, Erie First Preferred stock may be used for the purpose. The terms, of course, upon which this stock may be offered to Susquehanna stockholders are not known and probably are not yet fixed.

Under all the circumstances, a further advance in Eries, and especially in the Preferred, may be anticipated, the more so as it is stated in influential quarters that a dividend on the Preferred will be paid very shortly. There is no doubt that the so-called Klondike group will advance further. Amongst these are, as I have already stated, Northern Pacific Prefs. and Common, Union Pacifics, and Central Pacifics. The Klondike boom is expected to commence towards the end of this month, when an enormous number of people will take rail to that destination, and one can have but little doubt that our Yankee cousins will take advantage of this circumstance to engineer a boom. The Norfolk and Western have declared a dividend of 1 per cent. on the Adjustment Prefs., an announcement which has caused a rise of $6 to 55⅜, thus fully justifying the favourable opinion which I have for some time expressed. It shows also that the view that the Preference stocks of the reorganised roads are worthy of attention is well based. Chesapeake and Ohio have met with some attention at about 25¼. It is currently reported that this road will also shortly be taken into alliance with the Vanderbilt group, and the stock is likely to move more actively in the near future. The Milwaukee has had another good traffic return, which has put up the price to 99¼, and the Louisville is also doing well, the quotation being firmly supported at 61½. The refunding scheme of this line has yet to make its appearance. The words of warning which I have been uttering for some time concerning the over-speculation in Canadian Rails have been illustrated during the past week by a heavy slump. Canadian Pacifics dropped at one time to 88⅜, while Grand Trunk First Prefs. and Guaranteed fell to 64¼ and 74½ respectively, on the report that a war of rates had broken out between the Grand Trunk and Canadian Pacific. If these were Yankee Companies, one might have concluded that, coming at this particular moment, when a large "Bull" campaign is in progress, the fight had been specially engineered by insiders so as to get hold of some cheap stock; but I should say that the Directors and officials of these two Canadian lines are above suspicion. At the same time it is much to be regretted that, at a time of growing prosperity, the prospects of these Companies should be spoiled by any serious dispute. I suppose that some agreement will be arrived at shortly. At all events, there has been a rally in Canadian Pacifics to 90¼, in Grand Trunk First Prefs. to 67, and in the Guaranteed to 76; but it remains to be seen whether renewed weakness will not develop again in view of the very large "Bull" account which has been piled up.

Mortlock's (Oxford-st.), Estd. A.D. 1746.—The collection of China and Glass now on view in their Galleries fully maintains the high reputation and pre-eminence enjoyed by "Mortlock's" for the last century and a half, and well repays a visit of inspection.

AMERICAN RAILROAD BONDS.

On December 30 I published two lists of selected gilt-edged and good second-class American Railroad bonds, from which many of my readers have apparently made investments. Those who have done so may be congratulated, as a rise has now taken place of from 1 to 3 in the gilt-edged list, and from 2 to 6 in the list of good second-class bonds. The fact is that very large purchases have been made by American investors, which is not surprising as, in view of the revival in the States and the better business done by the railroads, these bonds are improved in security, while upon the whole still giving a good yield. As I have received a number of further inquiries, I herewith give two new lists, practically of the same bonds, with present prices and yields:—

GILT-EDGED AMERICAN RAILROAD BONDS.

Description.	Interest.	Date of Redemption.	Price.	Actual Yield, allowing for Accrued Interest and Redemption at par.
Lake Shore Bonds	3½	1997	108½	3 6 9

The above are all high-class bonds, the yield varying from £3 6s. 9d. to £4 0s. 4d. per cent., while the following list gives a much higher return, and if not so well secured, the safety of the investment can be increased by spreading the same over half a dozen different bonds:—

Amongst the above issues Reading Four per Cent. General Mortgage bonds have of late come into strong demand, and are still very cheap at anything below 90. The holders of these bonds are in a very strong position, as the road is doing remarkably well, since it has passed through the reorganisation. For the half-year ending December 31, 1897, the net earnings amounted to $6,562,167, against $6,064,395 in the corresponding six months of 1896. What, however, is of greater importance as regards these bonds is that after allowing for all taxes and fixed charges for the half-year, there is a surplus of $2,092,167 in net receipts. The General Mortgage bonds, moreover, have behind them $28,000,000 First Prefs., $42,000,000 Second Prefs., and $70,000,000 Ordinary, and I shall not be surprised, therefore, to see new Reading Fours, now quoted about 89¾, rise to a much higher level.

FOREIGNERS AND SOUTH AMERICANS.

The Continental Bourses have assumed a more favourable aspect, and there seems every prospect of greater animation, especially if the Chinese question were solved in a favourable sense. The trouble as regards Cuba is, moreover, disappearing from the political horizon, and Spanish have hardened again. Turks are still somewhat shaky, owing to the extraordinary persistency with which the Czar is backing up the candidature of Prince George of Greece as Governor of Crete. The South American section has at times shown strength, but realisations have finally put quotations back a little, and Argentine Government bonds, partly on a rebound in the gold premium, are easier, the 1886 Loan at 92½, the Funding Loan at 90¾, Buenos Ayres Water and Drainage bonds at 75½, Argentine Railway Guarantee Rescission bonds at 62½. Cedulas have reacted for the same reason, but on any further setback both the Government issues and Cedulas would be a good purchase. The course of Argentine Rails has been very much the same, and Buenos Ayres Great Southern have maintained themselves at 157, while Buenos Ayres and Rosario are easier at 77, Central Argentine at 85. The downward movement in the latter stock is not at all surprising, as I have already explained. Cordoba Central First Prefs. are higher at 93, and the Second Prefs. have risen to 53. Cordoba Central (Central Northern Section) Income Debenture stock has receded to 58½, another large traffic decrease having been reported. Until the earnings of this line improve it is not advisable to buy this stock. Mexican Sixes have been strong at 99, but Mexican Railway First Prefs. have dropped to 81¾, which is not surprising, as from the point of view of dividends this stock stands far too high. Mexican Central Four per Cent. Gold bonds have remained at 70, while the quotations of the "A" and "B" Debenture stocks of the Inter-Oceanic of Mexico remain firm at 65 and 33 respectively. Uruguay bonds have eased off slightly, although the February coupon has been promptly paid. The only question with regard to Uruguay is the course of politics. If acting-President Cuestas is elected President we shall have a big boom in the Uruguay bonds. Brazilians and Chilians have been neglected, while Peruvian Corporation stocks are steady.

The Kaffir Circus—A Rally.

A somewhat unexpected rally took place in the Kaffir Circus during the last few days, chiefly caused by Paris purchases. It was suggested in some quarters that the buying orders really originated in London, and that some of the leading firms, as they often do, were operating via Paris. At all events, the result was a moderate advance under the lead of Rand Mines, which recovered to 33⅜, while Consolidated Goldfields improved to 5, and East Rands to 5⅜. The question of splitting Rand Mines has again been mooted, and, as it would undoubtedly be satisfactory to the market and enable a wider circle of operators to deal in the shares, it is probable that it will come to this, and then we may anticipate a sharp rise, especially as the various holdings of this Company in Deep Level shares are still appreciating in value. One of the Company's interests, that in the Ferreira Deep, which it owns jointly with the Barnato Consols, appears to be particularly promising. Deep Level shares have been steady all round, being quoted as follows:—Goldfields Deep 10⅜, Crown Deep 13¾, Nourse Deep 6⅝, Rose Deep 7⅛, Durban-Roodepoort Deep 4⅜, Jumpers Deep 6, Knight's Deep 2⅛. Ferreira have also that a favourable reconstruction of the Board is on the tapis, experienced an important advance to 26½, and this improvement has also influenced the rest of the high-class Witwatersrand shares. Chartered have been favourably affected by reports that Mr. Cecil Rhodes will shortly arrive here in order to attend the meeting of the Company, also that a favourable reconstruction of the Board is on the tapis; but these appear to be, so far, only rumours. A firmer tone has been shown in Randfontein, which have hardened to 2, and Barnato Consols have strengthened to 2⅜. So far, the amount of business has not assumed large proportions, but if the improvement should continue it is probable that the public will enter the market again. New Primrose have been firm at 4¼, and Glencairn are steady at 2 5/16. The issue now made by the Directors of the Glencairn of £140,000 Six per Cent. debentures at par, convertible at any time within two years from the date of issue into Ordinary shares of the Company at 70s. per share, should be readily absorbed. The Mine is earning large monthly profits, and this debenture issue by providing for the floating debt will enable the Company to at once pay dividends. Another debenture issue is that made by the New Kleinfontein of £100,000 Six per Cent. debentures, convertible into shares at 60s. per share within two years. It is also expected that the New Comet and New Crœsus Companies will place themselves into a stronger financial position by debenture issues, and the Witwatersrand Deep, too, is on the warpath with an issue of £100,000 Five and a Half per Cent. debentures at par. Advices concerning the Presidential election in the Transvaal are somewhat contradictory, but I cannot help thinking that President Kruger will be re-elected, if not tant mieux. But there seems every prospect of even Oom Paul being a good boy when re-elected, as he will not otherwise obtain the much-coveted loan. Diamond shares have been firm, De Beers being quoted 30 3/16, New Jagersfontein 8 5/16.

Golden West Australia.

The latest information with regard to West Australian finances and the gold output are calculated to cause one to exclaim, Advance, West Australia! For January the revenue amounted to £226,947, against £202,580 in the corresponding month of 1897, while the gold export in January reached 93,395 oz., against 72,317 oz. in December. At this rate of progress the export of gold from the colony in 1898 will greatly exceed 1,000,000 oz., but it may be anticipated that the progress will be even more rapid as a number of new batteries are going up in all directions, partly for new mines, but also in connection with the substantial mines already crushing. The following list of crushings which came to hand during the past week gives an idea of the substantial results which are now being obtained:—

In this list the splendid output of the Associated Gold Mines calls for special notice. The Consolidated Murchison has also done well, and the Queensland Menzies looks promising. There is some rumour that this property is to be refloated as an English Company. Hannan's Brownhill have been a strong market, rising to 8⅛ xd. It is expected that this mine will eventually be found in the front rank with the Lake View Consols and Ivanhoe. Consolidated Murchison should receive more attention than they do, being quoted 6s., and East Murchison United of the same group at 1 1/16 look cheap. Sons of Gwalia shares are firm at 2⅛, and the news from the property continues satisfactory. The parent Company, the London and Western Australian Exploration Company, has, according to a circular just issued, secured an option on the Gwalia' No. 1 South, a 15-acre lease adjoining the southern boundary of the original Sons of Gwalia lease, and lying directly in line to secure the two main lodes of the latter. Work is being carried on in two shafts, and water was struck at a depth of 57 ft. A 24-acre lease has also been pegged for the Company adjoining the Sons of Gwalia East and the Sons of Gwalia North. The new lease has been named the Edward Hooper, and the Company's representative reports that it contains "a strong vein carrying gold," upon which an incline shaft is being sunk; also "I have found and exposed for a distance of several hundred feet two other parallel and strong reefs lying about 20 ft. apart." According to telegraphic advice several further leases in the same neighbourhood have also been secured, but particulars of these are not yet to hand. The London and Western Australian Investment Company, Limited, has a half interest in the above business. In view of the progress made by the Company it is surprising that the shares do not stand above 1. London and Globe Finance shares are hardening again at $2\frac{1}{16}$ xd., and Lake View Consols have risen to $10\frac{3}{4}$, while a better demand has been experienced for Ivanhoes at $6\frac{1}{4}$. It is expected that the special settlement, which has been applied for by the Ivanhoe Company, will shortly be granted. Particulars of the proposed amalgamation of the London and Globe sub-Companies have now been published. According to the circulars issued, this Corporation is forming an Exploration Company, with a capital of £1,500,000, in shares of £1 each (limited liability). The Directors of this Exploration Company will be nominated by, and three of them will be Directors of, the London and Globe; £1,000,000 of the capital will be appropriated to the purchase (in fully-paid shares) of various mining properties, and the remaining £500,000 will be set apart for working capital, one-half of which will be guaranteed by the London and Globe, but the whole working capital will be offered for subscription, priority of allotment to be conceded to the proprietors of the properties acquired. Overtures are being made to take over the following properties, viz.:—Golden Crown, Mainland Consols, Wealth of Nations, Paddington Consols, Wealth of Nations Extended, Hannan's Golden Group, Hannan's Golden Treasure, Duke Gold Mines, Hannan's Golden Dream, Thames Hauraki Goldfields, Paddington South, Mahara Royal, Karaka Gold Mines, and Austin Friars Syndicate. Such of these as the proprietors agree to transfer for the considerations offered will constitute the nucleus of the Exploration Company. In addition, however, it is proposed that the Company shall acquire a large interest in, and work in harmony with, the British America Corporation, Limited, and also the London and Globe. Through such co-operation the Exploration Company is expected to prove to be a successful undertaking. The Boards of the various Companies concerned have also issued circulars to their shareholders in which they state their cordial approval of the proposal submitted by the London and Globe, and advise its acceptance. The scheme will have the effect of an allotment of one fully-paid share in the new Exploration Company for each two fully-paid shares in the various Companies now held. It also confers the right to subscribe to the working capital of the new undertaking at par, and it is expected that shareholders will by this means be able to reduce the cost of their holdings, especially as the enterprise under the same able guidance may obtain profits as important as those made by the London and Globe Finance Corporation. There is no mincing matters that these companies have been extremely disappointing to investors, which was apparently in part due to an insufficient water supply, and also to the working capitals being inadequate. The reports originally made on the same, partly by Mr. Charles Kaufman, were of a highly satisfactory character, and testified to the existence of rich ore bodies. By joining the new exploration Company shareholders enter a kind of trust, through which, in case one or the other property should finally prove disappointing, they will have the chance of participating in the success of others. Of course, it will be necessary to furnish the fullest information with regard to the mines which are being taken into the amalgamation, and concerning which nothing is yet known in the market. These are the Dyke Gold Mines, Hannan's Golden Dream, Paddington South, Mahara Royal, Karaka Gold Mines, &c. The chief feature in the market has been the further important advance in Lady Shentons, which touched $3\frac{3}{4}$. They have since reacted to $3\frac{1}{2}$, but there seems to be every prospect of their reaching a higher level. Various rumours are current with regard to the reason for this sharp upward movement, and it is reported that one of the leading groups in the Westralian department has taken the mine up. However this may be, latest advices from the property are of an exceedingly favourable character. The manager reports that the mine looks splendid in the lowest level, and that the very fine specimens obtained will be forwarded to London by mail on February 13. There are those in the market who are talking up the shares to double the present price, and at all events I have to congratulate the many readers of TRUTH who bought them, when they were decried by other financial writers, in the neighbourhood of 2, upon the handsome profit at which they are now standing. That some of the "Bears" have been severely caught is also an undoubted fact. The Market Trust group has been very strong, the return of Mr. Horatio Bottomley from Monte Carlo having been heralded by a general advance, more especially in Northern Territories which are up at 2. Associated Southern are also better at $1\frac{1}{16}$, Lake View South at $1\frac{5}{16}$. The West Australian Gold Fields group has been quite stagnant, and quotations show little change, the shares of the parent Company standing at $2\frac{1}{4}$, while Hampton Plains are quoted $1\frac{1}{8}$. Hannan's Crœsus are lower at 9s., and the low-priced shares generally have been out of favour. I see that an amalgamation is on the board between the Cue One and the Lady Mary and Light of Asia Mines, a new Company being formed under the title of the Cue Consolidated Gold Mines, with a capital of £125,000 in 250,000 shares of 10s. each, with 7s. 6d. credited as paid up. I do not, however, see the raison d'être of this new arrangement, as neither of these Companies have so far distinguished themselves by any good results. Kalgurli have been firmer at $6\frac{7}{16}$, and a good demand has been experienced for Brownhill Centrals at $1\frac{3}{8}$. Golden Horseshoes have been pretty steady at $8\frac{3}{4}$. The new Great Boulder shares, on the other hand, have not been in favour, and are quoted 24s. 3d. Hannan's Proprietary have been distinctly firm at 16s., on the favourable advices received from the various properties of this Company. By the way, the Perth (West Australian) Land Corporation does not appear to have gone to allotment, the public not having subscribed to any extent. The prospectus certainly did not make a good showing.

INDIAN, AUSTRALASIAN, AND BRITISH COLUMBIAN MINES.

In the Indian section the feature has been a further decline in Nundydroog, on the flooding of the mine; while Ooregums, Mysore West and Wynaad, Mysore and Champion Reefs are also lower, the only improvements occurring in Mysore Reefs and Nine Reefs. In Australian mines, other than West Australian, an advance has been established in Mount Lyell to $14\frac{1}{2}$, and there has also been a rise in Gibraltar to $\frac{7}{8}$, but Mount Lyell North have receded to $3\frac{3}{4}$. Mount Morgan are steady at $4\frac{1}{2}$. In Charters Towers shares Day Dawn Block and Day Dawn P.C. are firmer. In the New Zealand section losses have again preponderated. Consolidated Goldfields of New Zealand, London and New Zealand Exploration, Achilles, and Kathleen Crown are all lower; but Waihi and Waitekauri Extended have improved. In the general foreign section very little change has to be reported, but De Lamar and Bassett are lower. British Columbians have upon the whole been firmer. New Goldfields of B.C. and B.C. Trust have improved, and a considerable business has been transacted in the shares of the Waverley Mine, of which I gave some particulars in last week's issue. The £1 shares have improved to $1\frac{5}{8}$, and look like going higher. British America Corporation shares have been dealt in to a considerable extent at from 3s. to 3s. 3d. premium. It is reported that the ledge on the Josie (one of the British America Corporation's properties), which was broken by a granite dyke, has been recovered in the east drift at the 300-ft. level, and that ore from the new strike assays $32 in gold and 6 per cent. in copper, while some of the ore ran as high as 18 per cent. in copper. Latest information concerning the Campana Consolidated Gold Mines in the Mexican section is of a more favourable character, and although so far there is a battery of ten stamps only at work, the property has been proved by crushings. It is understood that the water problem is now about to be solved, and as soon as a satisfactory supply has been obtained, fifty more stamps will be added to the present 10 stamp mill. The shares are now quoted 18s.-19s. A good deal of business has been transacted in Grand Central at $1\frac{13}{16}$, while Consolidated Goldfields of Mexico have risen to $1\frac{3}{8}$ on the issue of a very interesting report by the general manager, Mr. Frank Nicholson, who has recently paid a visit to this country. From this report it is evident that the Company owns most valuable properties, which cover an area of 25,000 acres, of which 15,000 are mineral and 10,000 wood and agricultural lands. There are a number of mines amongst these properties, and Mr. Nicholson states that it is not unusual for the daily assays to average 2 oz. of gold and 45 oz. of silver. Although the Company has not been able to maintain this average, there are at present blocked out in the east mine 84,000 tons of ore, which contains a gross value of £241,554. Mr. Nicholson states positively that the Santa Elena Mines are unquestionably of "good value," and that recent development work shows him that the ore bodies continue in depth with quantity and value better than are shown in the upper workings. There have been, according to Mr. Nicholson's report, unavoidable delays in getting the machinery—which consists of 60 stamps and a cyanide plant designed to treat 3,000 tons per month—into full operation; but that has now been accomplished, and the Company has entered the profit-earning stage. I suppose that we shall next have a Chinese mining section on the London Stock Exchange. There is but little doubt that the present negotiations will eventually lead to the opening up of the Celestial Empire, and to judge from the statements made by Mr. Algernon C. Moreing, the eminent mining engineer, there will be great scope for mining operations in China. It appears that, taking time by the forelock, Mr. Moreing's firm have obtained a most valuable series of reports on the mineral resources of Manchuria and the Northern Provinces, where, at the invitation of the Viceroy, Li Hung Chang, a mining engineer of great repute was deputed by them to make an exhaustive examination of such mining districts as might be indicated to him by the Chinese Government. These reports are now in Mr. Moreing's possession, and go to show the still undeveloped condition of the rich mineral resources of those provinces.

New Enterprises and Issues.

The prospectuses of the following new enterprises and issues have been placed before the public during the week:—

United Ordnance and Engineering Company, Limited.—This Company is formed for the purpose of manufacturing and selling guns, gun carriages, ammunition, and war material, and to carry on business as electrical, hydraulic, mining, and general engineers, to acquire a licence to manufacture and sell the Schneider-Canet Artillery and to acquire and take over as a going concern the business of Easton, Anderson, & Goolden, engineers, of Erith and London. The share capital is fixed at £550,000 divided into Five and a Half per Cent. Cumulative Preference and Ordinary shares of £1 each, and there is in addition a First Mortgage Four and a Half per Cent. Debenture stock issue of £250,000.

The future of this Company appears to be very promising as the business they undertake is in very few hands, while the profits are large. The business of Easton, Anderson, & Goolden has been long established, and the Schneider-Canet artillery, which the Company will manufacture, is of world-wide repute, while important alliances have been concluded with the Fairfield Shipbuilding and Engineering Company and Messrs. Thos. Firth & Sons, Limited.

Glencairn Main Reef Gold Mining Company, Limited.—This is an issue of £140,000 Six per Cent. First Mortgage Debentures in bonds of £50 each, to be secured by first mortgage of all the landed property, buildings, &c., of the Company. The Glencairn Company was formed in the year 1889 with a capital of £175,000, which was increased to £225,000 for the purpose of acquiring and working further property. In 1896 the capital was increased to £550,000, of which £50,000 is held in reserve, while the balance was issued to the shareholders of the Glenluce Company, whose mine was taken over by the Glencairn.

The property owned by this Company is extensive, and it is being systematically developed. The monthly profits are stated to amount to over £10,000, so that these Debentures seem to be well secured. They are, moreover, convertible at their nominal value into Ordinary shares at the rate of £3 10s. per share.

Venesta, Limited, has been formed to purchase and further develop the business carried on by the Venesta Syndicate, of 23, St. Mary's-axe and Venesta Wharf, Limehouse, E. The capital is fixed at £100,000, in shares of £1 each.

The syndicate was formed in 1896 to prove the value of Venesta boards for making all kinds of boxes, packing-cases, &c. These boards are manufactured by cementing together with a patent waterproof composition, two or more thicknesses of veneer. The capitalisation is obviously excessive for an invention which by no means monopolises the trade and may easily be superseded.

Army and Navy Properties, Limited.—With an authorised capital of £100,000, divided into 10,000 Cumulative Preference shares of £5 each and 50,000 Ordinary shares of £1 each, this Company is formed to purchase properties in St. Martin's-lane and Victoria-street, S.W.

There are such a large number of these mansions and flats round about this neighbourhood that it is somewhat doubtful if the returns will be up to the amount stated in the prospectus. I think investors can find better ventures of this kind in which to place their money.

Ballard & Co., Limited.—This Company is formed with a share capital of £80,000 and a Debenture stock of a like amount for the purpose of acquiring the business of brewers and malsters carried on by Mr. H. J. Beeman under the style of Ballard & Co., at Lewes, Sussex.

The conversion of such small country breweries is not to be advocated, and there is nothing enticing in this venture as the capital appears excessive.

My Letter Box.

The following are replies to inquiries from various correspondents:—

Government, &c., Bonds.

N. F.—Argentine 1886 bonds should be held for an improvement. P. L. R.—1. Uruguay Three and a Half per Cent. bonds are a good speculation at the present price. If the political problem is solved there would be an important advance. 2. Yes, hold Mexican Sixes.

Banks, Trusts, and Financial.

E. A. McM.—An outside concern, about which I am unable to obtain sufficient information but I have always warned my readers to do business only through members of the Stock Exchange. Sammot.—A new life office established in 1896. I should not recommend you to take out a policy with it. No. 2 Inquirer.—You had better spread the money over some sound Industrial and Brewery debentures, such as Millwall Docks Perpetual Five per Cent. Debenture stock at $152\frac{1}{2}$; Gordon Hotels Four and a Half per Cent. Debenture stock at $137\frac{1}{2}$; Savoy Hotel Four per Cent. Debenture stock at $112\frac{1}{2}$; Courage & Co. Four per Cent. Debenture stock at 130; Guinness Five per Cent. Debenture stock at 123, and Parker's Burslem Four per Cent. First Mortgage Debenture stock at 113. Hon. E. P. and Ireland.—What you require has been forwarded in your respective envelopes. Fifer, Glasgow.—1. An outside concern, which you had better leave alone. Deal only with members of the Stock Exchange. 2. My advice also applies to this firm, who are outside dealers.

Home Rails.

Nouvel An.—The new extension of the Great Central to London should benefit that line very materially, and if you can afford to lock up your stock for twelve months you will doubtless see a very considerable rise. S. N. S.—This Ordinary stock is a fair Railway investment. A. S.—Yes, I think that if you were to exchange from Great Northern into Great Central 1894 Ordinary there would be a fair chance of getting your money back in time. W. F.—Yes, Central London Railway Ordinary stock is a good investment, and very promising.

American and Foreign Rails.

Avenue.—1. I do not think there is any fear of a sharp decline in this Argentine railway stock, and, unless you have thoroughly reliable information, it should be kept. 2. There has already been a considerable advance in Inter-Oceanic of Mexico stocks, and it might be advisable to wait now. 3. A fair investment, but no catch. 4. Yes, I think that Great Central 1894 Ordinary stock has great possibilities. Empress.—Union Pacific Prefs. have already advanced to 64, and it is a pity that you did not buy when you received the advice in question. Even now they are good for a rise, as they are expected to go to 70. Cecil.—I am glad to see that you have such good profits in American Rails. You might as well take these and buy again Union Pacific Ordinary and Prefs. and Northern Pacific Prefs., which are more than likely to go ahead sharply in the near future. Hilltop.—Yes, you might as well average the Baltimore and Ohio South-Western bonds referred to. R. W. S.—Canadian Rails generally are on the up grade, and there also seems to be a fair prospect for the bonds mentioned by you. Boh.—Hold your Baltimore and Ohio bonds. The reorganisation is in progress, and interest will doubtless be resumed at an early date.

MINING SHARES.

Heinrich.—I do not advise you to deal with such outside concerns, but only through members of the Stock Exchange. I cannot, however, recommend you brokers who make advances. A. G.—1. Consolidated Murchison shares are 10s. paid, and at the present price of 6s. are very cheap. 2. Hit or Miss are a fair mining risk, but prospects at present are not over bright. 3, Very speculative. Shamrock.—A fair mining risk, although very little is known about the actual out-turn of diamonds. Borneo.—Why did you not buy Lady Shenton when they were much lower and when I so strongly recommended them. See remarks under "Golden West Australia." Tricky.—1 and 2. You must have seen the report of the meeting of the Mining Company (b) which is in course of reconstruction. The shareholders of the Armdale (a) ought to inquire into the position. The mine (c) has been disappointing, but the South African shares (d) should recover again, and the news from (e) is much better, as you will have gathered from recent remarks. I am glad you did well in London and Globe Finance shares on my advice. Seester.—If you are a shareholder, the secretary of the Murchison Diamond and Gold Company should certainly reply to your letters. I do not advise purchase of the other shares mentioned. X. Y. Z.—These shares have reacted with the rest of the South African market, and should recover eventually. Rugby.—No reason to sell London and Globe now. Amongst promising shares are Associated Gold Mines, Hannan's Brownhill and British America Corporation. H.—I should not advise purchase of the shares in the Sulphides Reduction (New Process), Limited, so obligingly offered at 18s. 6d. to the shareholders of the London and General Exploration Company by Mr. Arthur F. Burrowes, of 7, Castellain-road, Maida Hill. Viator.—1. No reason to increase your interest. There is still a chance of the other shares recovering. A. M., Leeds.—Surely there has been enough delay with the amalgamation scheme of the London and Globe sub-Companies. You cannot wish for the matter to be further postponed. J. McJ.—No; Kalgurli are quite high enough; I should prefer Lady Shenton. 2. Impossible to tell. The settlement has been applied for, but has not yet been fixed. G. C. Y.—A temporary reaction, which will doubtless be recovered. Lex.—1. The secretary will doubtless give you the information. 2. No reason to sell any of the five shares mentioned by you. Joseph.—1. No; I should advise you to keep the shares. 2. Yes. See remarks in last week's issue under "The Kaffir Circus" as regards Waterfall Estates. Equity.—I am afraid by acting on your suggestion I should only help to wreck the Company. There seems to be no option but to join the reconstruction. Colonist.—1. No. 2. A fair purchase. 3. London and Globe. 4. Yes. 5. No. 6. Hold Randfontein. 7. No. Money.—Yes, you should hold, and you might average. T. S. E. M.—Not at all, the Company is very promising. Glencairn.—1. Quite a different concern. 2. British America Corporation shares are quoted at 3s. to 3s. 3d. premium. I do not understand your question. Park Lane.—These various shares will no doubt recover with the rest of the market. Bones.—You might as well sell the shares under the circumstances, but instead of averaging the shares Nos. 1-6 you should hold merely for an improvement, and invest in some other shares of a more progressive character.

INDUSTRIAL SHARES.

Devon.—No, I do not recommend investment in Webb & Ellen. Anxious Kitty.—Stretton's Derby Brewery shares have advanced considerably, and I think that in your case, as absolute safety is necessary, you should rather invest in debentures such as Courage & Co.'s Four per Cent. Debenture stock at 130, Guinness's Five per Cent. Debenture stock at 123, and Parker's Burslem Four per Cent. First Mortgage Debenture stock at 113. B. G.—I have not a favourable opinion of this concern, although the debentures may be all right. Holywell.—In your position I really cannot advise you to run the risks connected with speculation in stocks and shares. 1. This is a fair investment of the kind, and you cannot look for more than 4 per cent. with safety. 2. Certainly, sell your English Cotton shares as soon as you see a little profit. J. E. A.—You ought never to have invested in the Army and Navy Co-operative Breweries; I warned my readers against this concern from the outset. I cannot reply by letter. Tea.—You had better sell these Melbourne shares. Holme, Bingham.—1. There is no market yet for these shares and little prospect of one for the present. No. 2 is the best of your holdings. There may be a rally with the commencement of the season, when you might as well realise a portion. J. J., Biggleswade.—No particular reason for selling Nos. 1, 3, or 4; while No. 2 is a fair industrial investment. Wellsbach Incandescent (5) should be held. W. S. G.—Bass's Four and a Half per Cent. Debenture stock stands at 125-7, which should guide you as regards the value of the new Three and a Half per Cent. Debenture stock.

LOOK TO YOUR DRAINS.—Have the Drainage and Water Supply of your residences Examined and Certificated by CARTER BROS., 65, Victoria-st., S.W. Consulting Sanitary Engineers Hotel Cecil, &c.

MIXED INVESTMENTS.

Africander.—It would be advisable to hold Nos. 1 to 3 as these industrial shares may improve again. In any case you should not sell the South Africans Nos. 4 to 6, which are already advancing. Kop.—I should say that in your circumstances you had better invest in English Brewery Debentures yielding about 4 per cent. Hifa.—I have nothing against the Trust Prefs. No. 2 and 3, but I do not like No. 1 so much. The Cycle shares are no particular catch. An Old Reader.—The present is not a favourable opportunity for your friend to sell his South African Mining shares No. 1-17. Most of these are well selected and should be held for a rise. I do not think much of No. 2. There is no objection to the proposed investments A—E. Rand Mines (D), will doubtless advance further. Scrutator.—a. This Trust Company is a fair investment of the kind, although speculative and second-class. b. Very speculative, the mine not being proved yet. c. Leave this British Columbian syndicate alone, unless you can satisfy yourself absolutely concerning the bona fides of the men connected with it. Personally, I should prefer the British America Corporation. Photographer.—The Midland is doing badly, and it might be as well to clear out. For your purposes the new West Australian loan should be suitable. Ricker.—Newspaper shares such as No. 1-3 must always be speculative, although at present doing well. No reason to sell Cons. Goldfields Prefs. T.—1. As your Louisville leave you a large profit you might as well take it, although this stock will eventually go considerably higher. 2. Hold Erie Prefs. for a further important advance. 3. I do not advise the purchase of these Indian Mining shares. 4. Yes, you might as well realise, and buy American Railroad bonds instead. 5. No special reason to sell. Timothy.—1. Canadian Pacifics have had an important rise, and it will be advisable to await further developments of the war of rates. 2. No catch. 3. I do not advise purchases of Brazilians at present. No. 4 and 5 are a fair purchase. It will be sufficient for you to write to the Secretary of the London Stock Exchange. Cymro.—1. No, I do not recommend Lisbon Berlyn as a purchase. 2. Yes. 3. Certainly hold Erie Second Prefs. 4. The position is unsatisfactory. 5. Prospects very doubtful. Mona.—1. Why not make your selections from the lists of American Railroad bonds in this issue. 2. Sell at very small profit. 3. Hold. 4. Hold; the news from the mine is getting better. Tere.—Yes, you had better hold the South African shares Nos. 1 and 2. The reason of the fall of these American Brewery shares (3) is the war of rates amongst the breweries in Chicago. No. 4 should be held. Certainly hold Erie Prefs. (5) for an important rise, and see remarks under "The Yankee Market." No option but to hold No. 6. Lex.—I am afraid that the West Australian shares No. 1 are doubtful. No. 2 may come round, also No. 3. The Restaurant, No. 5, is doing well. I do not like No. 5, but No. 6 is a fair industrial investment. Hear.—1. Certainly this issue should be authorised by the shareholders. 2. Very doubtful, in view of the unfavourable legal position. Borneo.—1. Lake View Consols will no doubt eventually rise to a higher level, but I cannot tell you when. 2. Speculative investment. 3. Yes, fairly safe. Grocer.—1. No option but to hold, they should recover again. 2. The Tyre shares may improve again, but the prospects of the French concern are doubtful. Silentio.—1. The prospects of the Simmer and Jack are very good, and you should hold for a rise. 2. Yes, hold. I cannot reply by letter. R. B.—1. No option but to await a recovery. 2. Shortly, no doubt. Belmont.—1. Yes, but Brazilians do not look promising just now. 2. St. Paul, Min., and Manitoba Four per Cent. bonds (Pacific extension) now quoted at 97-99 are sterling bonds, secured on the above-named extension. 3. A good second-class American bond. 4. Effingham Wilson, Publisher, Royal Exchange, London, can supply you with all kinds of Stock Exchange books. Wilts.—There is no reason why you should not spread the money over Nos. 1-3, and you might add London and West Australian Exploration shares, Hannan's Brownhill, and Lady Shenton.

VARIOUS INVESTMENTS.

The Money Market has eased off again with the turn of the month, and three months' bank bills are being taken at $2\frac{5}{8}$ per cent. As some important new issues are on the board—notably, the Chinese loan—it is not at all likely that the rates will react; but, on the contrary, we shall doubtless see a fresh rise in the value of money. Consols, after improving, have eased off again to $112\frac{1}{2}$ for the account; and British Corporation stocks have been dull on the non-success of the Leicester Corporation issue, of which but a small amount has been placed at 95. Following upon the fiasco of the Liverpool issue, this should teach Corporations the lesson to grant better terms to investors, if they wish to place their loans. Silver has fluctuated within narrow limits, but is slightly firmer at $26\frac{1}{8}$d. Rupee paper has reacted to $63\frac{5}{8}$, as it is being realised that the introduction of a gold standard in India is as yet far off. The Chinese loans at one time gave way a point all round on various adverse rumours concerning the loan negotiations in Pekin. The various new Colonial loans remain at substantial premiums. Thus, the new West Australian Loan is quoted $1\frac{3}{4}$ premium, the new New South Wales Loan $1\frac{1}{8}$ premium, the new Cape of Good Hope Loan $2\frac{7}{8}$ premium. Japanese bonds are quoted $101\frac{1}{2}$. In the cycle section business has been restricted. Dunlop Deferred have declined to 13s. 6d., and French Dunlops are also lower at 4s. 6d.; Humber Ordinary are easier at 14s. 9d., the Extensions receding to 10s. Cycle Components are lower at $2\frac{3}{8}$, Swifts being unaltered at $\frac{3}{4}$, Singers at 14s., and Amalgamated Tyres have eased off to 6s. 6d. The feature in the industrial department has been the sharp set-back in Hudson Bays, which, after touching $27\frac{1}{8}$ on reported discoveries of gold in the Company's territory, have fallen to 25. A collapse also came about in oil shares, and the favourite of Dublin, Fish Oils, dropped at one time to $24\frac{1}{2}$, from which there has been a slight recovery only. Welsbach Incandescent Gas Ordinary have eased off to 103, the Preferred being quoted 103, the Deferred 21s. Schweppe shares have been steady, and Bovril Deferred have improved to $\frac{13}{16}$. The English Sewing Cotton allotment has been finally completed, the result being that Threads are quoted $\frac{7}{8}$ premium, while Coats are lower at $61\frac{1}{2}$. At the meeting of shareholders of the Baron Cigarette Company very favourable statements were made. Not only has this Company earned a total of £19,488 from machines and accessories sold, but the sale of the South American and Cuban rights has realised £19,022, a portion of the purchase-money having been paid in fully-paid shares in the Prudencio Rabell Cigarette Machine Company. The Chairman also stated that during the current year the total income from machines let out on hire will be £15,000, the arrangement with the firms taking these machines being for a fixed period of five years. The net profit balance was £29,673, out of which a dividend of $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. is paid, while £1,026 is written off for depreciation, and £10,000 off of patents, the substantial sum of £11,673 being carried forward. With its numerous patents and patent rights for foreign countries the Baron Cigarette Machine Company, which owns undoubtedly the very best machine of the kind, should achieve further success, and it is not surprising to find the £1 shares quoted at 25s. to 30s. A reader of Truth in Mauritius writes to me stating that the Mauritius Government is in a fair way to become the largest sugar estate proprietor in the world. After the hurricane of 1892, planters obtained a loan of £600,000. "Much wants more;" and now a needy few are asking for a further loan of £400,000. Participators in the loan, if granted, will have a tall innings for a time—then, when the shoe begins to pinch again, they will apply for yet another loan, and if this be refused retire gracefully from the field, leaving their estates a white elephant for the Government. Although repeatedly contradicted, I think there is solid foundation for the recent rumours that have been put about with regard to T. J. Lipton being converted into a limited liability company. I hear that the prospectus will be issued early in March. With reference to the South London Electric Supply Corporation, and the dissatisfaction aroused amongst the shareholders by the now famous option which was given by the directors to the promoter of the Company, I learn that it has been decided to hold a private meeting in London at the Cannon-street Hotel, at which it is proposed to lay before the shareholders counsel's opinion, all the correspondence, and the whole facts of the matter. A reader of Truth, who has been answering some advertisements for partnerships in the Daily Telegraph, has been favoured in one case by a reply from the London Co-operative Cab Company, to which I devoted some attention in Truth of January 27 under this heading. I then expressed the view that this is not a desirable investment, although the Secretary of the Cab Company lays special stress upon the fact that the capital sent to them is always withdrawable on demand, and that they guarantee to pay dividends punctually, either weekly or monthly, thus arguing that there is no risk or liability to investors. What, however, would happen if a number of persons, who may have entrusted money to this concern, were to withdraw their capital at the same time? The other reply which my correspondent received came from Alexander Baring & Company, 11, Bridge-street, Bath, who are carrying on "the co-operative system of Stock Exchange dealings," in other words, blind pools. Reference has already been made in various issues of Truth to the doings of these people under "Entre Nous." Alexander Baring & Co. profess to transact a business in which they promise investors a permanent income of £5 per week on each £100 entrusted to them. It is hardly necessary to again state that this kind of business must always end in the total loss of the money of any foolish persons who may swallow the bait. £5 per week on £100 means 260 per cent., and if Alexander Baring & Co. were really able to make such large profits, they would undoubtedly realise them for their own account only, and thus retire as millionaires in a very short time.—Your affectionate uncle, MOSES.

QUEER STORY.

THE DOUBLE GREEN OF GENEVA.

THREE men sat at dessert in a notably comfortable dining-room in Harley-street. They had been close friends at college, and, though they were all nearing forty, the friendship was cordial still. Hubert Denison, the successful artist, had made an awful matrimonial mistake that had resulted in a cause celèbre and freedom. Stanley Hesseltine, the rising barrister, had been badly jilted in early youth, and had very reasonably concluded that he had had enough of women for the rest of his days. As to Frank Sebastian, first of living surgeons, according to his many friends, who proclaimed the fact loudly, and his few enemies, who allowed it with reservations, he was a bachelor. He told meddling outsiders he was not a marrying man, but he had admitted to this special conclave that the true reason was that he had never succeeded in falling in love. He was handsome—tall, active, with keen blue eyes, and a trim beard just touched with grey; but he was much quieter than usual on this foggy fourteenth of February.

"What's the matter, Frank?" asked Denison, filling his glass, with the satisfactory certainty that the port was thoroughly good. "Are we to drink the health of 'Valentine,' as on so many anniversaries made memorable by this divine '58?"

"No," said Frank Sebastian, shortly; "for 'Valentine is dead."

Denison put down his full glass with an amazed exclamation.

"Plumbed the mystery after fourteen years! Impossible!" said Hesseltine, whose legal mind disliked mysteries, and who had always been especially anxious to get to the bottom of the case.

"I expect you both remember Valentine's Day fourteen years ago," began Sebastian, with a certain hesitation. "Hesseltine was briefless then, and was sitting to you, Denison, for Alcibiades."

"Before he grew fat," parenthesised the artist, with a laugh.

"How I tore into the studio with bank notes for four hundred pounds crackling in my pockets—money sent anonymously, money that let me go to Germany and make my fortune by three years' study under old Von Gleich—'From Valentine, so that you may work and attain.'"

"And, by Jove, you've done both, old man," said the friends, simultaneously.

"Yes, I have found out a few things, helped a few unfortunates. But for 'Valentine' I must have drudged away in some out-of-the-way hole in the country. I was no good till I had leisure to work and think without bothering about the bread and cheese."

"Cherchez la femme was always my advice, only you never took it," said Denison.

"You were right, for it was a woman; and now she is dead, and I can never even thank her for letting me rise to the very height of my ambition."

"They say only women do those Quixotic things. But to hold her tongue for fourteen years—that's the bit of the story I can't credit."

"First story I've heard with a woman in it who didn't want a quid pro quo."

"You two are misogynists. You've also got a right to be. So perhaps I won't read you this, as, somehow, I half intended."

Denison had loved his wife well, despite her utter heartlessness, and he rejoined,

"Read it. Let us have something sentimental, something prettily tender and ideal, just to put away the flavour of London. I'm not a sham cynic to-night. It looks like a very human document."

Sebastian moved his chair out of the radius of the red-shaded candles, and with a deepening shadow on his grave face, began to read :—

The Vicarage, Cherrington-on-Tarn.

Dear Sir,—By request of my deceased sister I send you the enclosed. She had been for many years companion to Lady Ida Fitzroy, and died at her house from the effects of influenza.—Yours faithfully, Henry Bradenham.

The enclosure was in a delicate neat writing, upon several yellowed sheets of paper, and Sebastian's firm hand shook a little as he held up the first of them. It had no formal introduction, and Sebastian began to read abruptly, thus :—

"'This will not reach you till I am dead. Perhaps never, if you should die first. So I may say that I love you with my whole soul, and have followed every footstep in your career—the career of which I have been so proud, because I helped to make it. I dare say you will be disappointed to hear that "Valentine" was no one interesting. Just a plain, homely girl, to whom you have forgotten you were kind once.

"'Do you remember, fourteen years ago, a certain Mary Bradenham at the hotel at Newquay, companion to a harsh old aunt, who was handsome and clever, and hard on her niece because she was neither? She was middle-aged, and yet all the men liked to talk to Miss Sinclair, because she had seen everything and been everywhere. She was the last woman in the world to have been accredited with a romance, but we all have one—even I. Hers had ended very badly. Her lover had gone abroad, married someone else, and corresponded with her, even borrowed money of her, all the time. Till she found out. After that she lost all faith in men.

"'She chose me to be her companion—the family hoped her heiress. She even promised to provide for me "if I never made a fool of myself by falling in love." I thought I was quite safe. I was so very ordinary that no one ever seemed to know even that I was present. And not clever—not a bit. Nothing.

"'I did not mind so much till the day in August I first saw you. You were playing bowls and laughing with a lot of ladies. There was a girl in white, with a blue band. I can remember even that. I watched. Afterwards you came and talked to my aunt, and you always spoke to me. Once you joined me when I was walking out to the Headland. I have only to shut my eyes and see the great curling, green breakers. I heard them booming on the rocks, and I was happy.

"'You never guessed all the mischief you did because you pitied the dull companion who looked on when they danced in the hall, and stayed behind when the picnic parties drove merrily away. I loved you, and with love came the bitter, dreadful longing to be as these others. Once you were smoking in the verandah and talking to a friend. I listened, and I heard you say how poor you were, and how "just a few hundreds, and you could do something."

"'I thought I had kept my dear secret all my own—my only treasure. I used sometimes to let myself think of you; and the thought of the wild water, the wet sea breeze, the blue Cornish sky, would bring tears to my eyes that were not unhappy. I loved. I was a woman indeed now, and even the utter hopelessness did not take all the glamour, all the glory away. My aunt found out. She had eyes like a hawk, and a tongue that could hurt cruelly. "You in love; you harbouring stupid dreams!" she said, with a scornful laugh. "I was an heiress, a beauty, a wit; yet I could not hold a man to his allegiance. What can you use to win a man's heart, much less to keep it?"

"'My aunt's fearful temper made life with her purgatory. I had not much longer to bear it, for within a year of our meeting she died. There was no mention of me in the will, but in the codicil it said, "And to my niece, Mary Bradenham, I give and bequeath the Japanese box, and all it contains, she having disobeyed my injunction, and forfeited all other claim." There were no jewels in the shabby box; nothing but an immense bundle of dingy old letters; and my brother and sisters, who had all married into the Church unprosperously, were angry with me for playing my cards so badly. I had to get another situation. But I utterly refused to tell why my aunt had broken her promise. I had been companion long enough to have learnt to be silent.

"'I had glanced at the letters, the false, lying letters written from Geneva to my aunt by her lover, in 1843, when she had been staying at some village near. I did not burn them, though I scarcely knew why. Then I went to Paris with Lady Ida, and one day, when I was idly looking in at a shop window, I saw two small foreign stamps put up for sale—"Double vert de Genève, très rare, mille francs." Something made me look again, and as I did so my heart beat hard. For I was sure that this queer stamp, like two joined together, was on those many letters that lay unregarded, faintly scented with Japanese camphor wood. I was right. I took no one into my confidence, and there was such a rage for collecting that I sold twenty for four hundred pounds.

"'You see, I had always meant to send some money to you, if aunt ever left me any. Only it would have been difficult, because the family would have wanted me to account for every penny. But to get it all like this was so much more enchanting. All my own; actually willed to me! Providence was very kind to frustrate her cruel device, and to make me rich enough, after all, to have my bright minute of romance, to make sunshine for all my grey life.

"'It was only by chance that I remembered it to be February 13, when I was in London, and had, after, oh! such trouble, found out your address. I sat in my little dull room, the happiest woman in England when I wrote, "From Valentine, so that you may work and attain." I kissed the letter before I posted it. How lucky it would be, taken into your hands, meeting your eyes!

"'I only once saw you. You passed me in the street. But I heard of you, and always, as I knew I should, heard of your growing fame and brilliant ability. And when it got into the papers first that an English surgeon had been summoned to an illustrious imperial patient, then there had been a wonderful operation performed with the utmost success, I guessed first that it was Frank Sebastian, and I was glad to think I had helped the man whose discoveries have saved so many precious lives.

"'Forgive me for telling you. When you marry—for surely you will—give her this to read. She will understand it better than you do, because only women know what love really is. You had other things, but, believe me, love is still the best of all.'"

Sebastian's voice faltered slightly. He was full of an immense compassion, a baffling sense of wonder as to what was this strong motor that influenced hearts to be so brave and so selfless.

Back to Denison came the haunting memory of the faithless wife, and he was silent.

Hesseltine hated sentiment, or, rather, hated showing that there was such a thing in his organisation. "Women are not all Violet Trehernes," he said to himself; but aloud he only remarked, "As a very enthusiastic stamp-collector, perhaps you will forgive my writing to the reverend brother at Cherrington to see if by any sort of chance his poor sister had kept just one double vert de Genève, 1843. I am ready with my thousand francs if she did."

ART NOTES.

My first impression after walking through the Forty-third Exhibition of the Society of Lady Artists at the Suffolk-street Gallery was that its members can bind books better than they can paint pictures. The exhibitors shine more in the Handicrafts than in the Art section of the Show. The samples of bookbinding, of course, suffer when compared with the rich specimens of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries craftsmanship now to be seen at the Society of Arts' rooms in the Adelphi; but there are several in the cases in the South-east Room at the Society of British Artists which are well deserving of praise. There are some tooled leather bindings exhibited by the Chiswick Art Workers' Guild which are extremely good. So are some of the needlework covers; but what, I wonder, can be the meaning of item No. 567 in the catalogue, "Book bound in vellum; exhibitor, Matthew Arnold"? The Editor of the temporarily-defunct Borderland has told us much about the facility with which disembodied spirits produce psychical drawings and ghostly photographs; but this is the first time it has ever been suggested that bookbinding is one of the recreations of dwellers in the Elysian Fields. In needlework, as might have been expected, the Lady Artists shine, and there are some excellent samples of work in gesso duro and hammered brass. Several admirable exhibits call attention to the fact that there is an organisation of workers known as "The Red Spider Association." Whatever can have induced these industrious ladies to choose such an ill-omened title as that for their Guild? As every one who has a garden knows, the name "red spider" is synonymous with blight and destruction.

Amongst the hundreds of oil-paintings and water-colours there are not many, unfortunately, which call for laudatory mention. There is a great deal, as some one has already observed, of "the average flower in the average jar." There is much, in fact too much, of the average pet dog painted in conjunction with the inevitable small child. Of the fluffy pet kitten there is positively a redundancy; but there are few signs of especial originality or even of executive ability which is more than mediocre. In the midst of much feeble and amateurish work, the drawings and pictures of such trained artists as Mrs. Jopling and Miss Kemp Welch, Miss Rose Barton and Miss Mildred Butler show to great advantage. Mrs. Clare Atwood's "Veiled Lady" is an ambitious picture, but it is not convincing. There is some excellent if rather prosaic work in Miss Hollam's careful study of a horse's head, which is catalogued as "A Servant of the Queen." The two pictures which seemed to me most striking, however, in the whole exhibition were Miss Janet Fisher's "Driving Home the Geese" and Miss M. Lancaster Lucas's "Zither Player." Let visitors to the Suffolk-street Gallery, therefore, look out specially for numbers 366 and 454.

Miss Ella Du Cane is surely a most fortunate young lady. Not only is she already able to aspire to the dignity of filling an entire room at Messrs. Graves's Galleries in Pall Mall East with her own work, but she is happily in a position to affix to many of the frames of her pictures, even before the general public have been admitted to view, that significant red star which shines only too infrequently in the art firmament in these days. I find, too, that she numbers amongst her patrons the Queen herself as well as the Princess of Wales; both of these royal ladies having lent, for inclusion in the present exhibition, water-colours painted for them by Miss Ella Du Cane. The fifty-seven water-colours she exhibits prove the possession of a very eclectic taste by the fair artist. She has found inspiration alike at Osborne and at Venice, at Windsor and at Florence, at Bruges and at Bellagio. They prove, too, that Miss Du Cane has a strong feeling for bright and beautiful colours. Her colour sense is evidently well developed, and, what is more, her drawings have atmosphere. In draughtsmanship she has still something to learn, but there is so much distinct promise in her work that she is well-nigh certain to obtain the desiderated firmness of touch if she perseveres. If I might venture to advise so facile an artist I would remind her of the well-known Latin saying, "Festina lente!" She has already achieved such success that she can well afford to "make haste slowly."

Visitors to Messrs. Graves's Galleries should also have a look at the water-colours of Australasian scenery exhibited in another of the rooms. This exhibition, which may be regarded, in one sense, as a sort of aftermath to the Jubilee, comprises some fifty drawings by Mr. W. J. Wadham and Mr. A. Sinclair, two artists whose art training, I believe, was obtained in England, and who have already attained considerable success at the Antipodes. Most of their work deals with the scenery of New Zealand, and there is in all of it a suggestion of the truthful interpretation of nature. There are scenes, too, in Queensland and New South Wales, so that we do not fail to see much of the inevitable, though not specially picturesque, gum tree. An antipodean critic has assured us that Messrs. Wadham and Sinclair "do not give us sketches that seem to have been painted with the washings of a mustard-pot." This is quite true. Their skies are blue and their trees are green, and, more important still, their drawings are full of that sympathetic quality without which good work can never be achieved.

MUSIC.

ORGAN SALARIES AND CHRISTIAN SOCIALISM.

I HAVE received from the Rev. W. Carlile a letter in regard to recent remarks which I and others have made concerning the post, offered by the Church Army, of organist at St. Mary-at-Hill. Mr. Carlile's letter is as follows:—

> For the life of me I cannot see why I should be accused of "organist sweating." For six hours on Sundays, and three and a half hours on week days, making nine and a half hours in all, I have offered £52 per annum, and the equivalent of as much again by a home in my rectory, and other advantages. We have no anthems, require no elaborate music, and prefer a young beginner who will learn the knack of making all sing rather than have their worship done for them by a choir, however excellent. As I have laboured in the Church Army incessantly myself for sixteen years without salary, to reclaim, on lines of scientific charity the outcast and destitute, I venture to believe that I can find a kind-hearted musician who in his spare time would assist me on the same terms, and I have had numerous and kindly responses. It is refreshing to be able to report that in this Mammon-loving City of London the Church Army has numbers of devoted men and women toiling indefatigably, both day and night, to relieve the miseries of those verging on crime and suicide, and their only remuneration is a poor pittance just sufficient to keep body and soul respectably together. Many have gladly given up from £1 to £5 a week to come in closest touch with the sunken and degraded. If these are "sweating," then the Great Socialist of Nazareth, whose example has moved them, may well be accused of the same.

It is a common expedient of the clergy, in mere matters mundane, to drag in the name of the great Founder of their religion, forgetful of the fact that He in the most solemn terms declared that "the labourer is worthy of his hire." This, however, is a point upon which I do not for a moment desire to dwell. The whole question is whether the Church Army are offering to a professional man a salary which would cheerfully be accepted by nobody but a religious maniac, or an outcast musician "verging on crime and suicide." To bring the charity element into the question was, I fear, an afterthought. There was no suggestion whatever, either in his advertisement or type-written conditions of service, that Mr. Carlile's offer of the berth was anything but a business one. I have previously given particulars of the questions asked of the applicants and of the multifarious duties which they were informed the successful candidate would have to fulfil for the extravagant salary of £1 a week. As to the salary, Mr. Carlile, it will be noticed, is under the impression that he offers an "equivalent of as much again by a home in my rectory, and other advantages." What Mr. Carlile really offered was this :—

The Greatest of all Pianofortes.—The Steinway Pianofortes. New York and London.

Residence and board in rectory, next to church, very simple, sharing bedroom with an Evangelist, an earnest Churchman. Salary £52 ; lodging free ; board by arrangement.

If Mr. Carlile really believes that half a bedroom "shared with an Evangelist," however earnest a Churchman he may be, without board is worth an extra £1 a week, I do not think he will find many persons to agree with him. Nor can I quite reconcile Mr Carlile's present statement that the whole work is nine and a half hours in a week with the conditions of service which are now before me. Indeed, he distinctly states that only three hours a day are "free for giving lessons, rest, or recreation," and that the luckless organist's other time is to be filled up in the Samaritan Office, or in the rectory. Moreover, in a recent letter to Musical News, Mr. Carlile, stung by the taunt of somebody that his organist's pay was threepence-halfpenny an hour, pleads that his working hours are twenty-eight a week, and the pay 8½d. per hour. When Mr. Carlile falls back upon the charity plea there is, perhaps, not much to be said. But £1 a week, with the privilege of sharing bedroom with Evangelist and paying your own board, a life in which the deleterious joys of wine and cigars (on a pound a week) are replaced by the more sober delights of sacred concerts, brass bands, organ recitals, lantern choral evensong, and finding work for the destitute, is not the pay for a professional man, and it would, I think, be laughed at by the ordinary artisan. It may not be "organist sweating," and, in fact, I never said it was. It may, of course, be mere Christian Socialism. But to recommend, on such starvation terms, to parents and guardians a profession which demands high personal and artistic attainments, together with a long and expensive education, would be arrant folly.

The Philharmonic directors have issued a capital prospectus for the current season, which will start on the 10th prox., Herr Moritz Rosenthal then making his first appearance in London since his long illness. The Society have induced Dr. Saint-Saëns to return, and for the first time for many years to appear in public as an organist, playing one of his own organ concertos. Also they have a promise from Herr Moritz Moszkowski to appear for the first time in England as a pianist, playing his new pianoforte concerto, and likewise conducting a selection from his ballet "Laurin." Mr. Eugene D'Albert, hitherto chiefly known as a pianist, will now appear as a conductor, directing the first performance in England of his Symphony in F. Dr. Dvorak will come expressly to England to conduct some of his newest orchestral works. Mr. Corder will introduce his new dramatic scena, "Pippa Passes," and Mr. Hamish McCunn has rewritten the ballet music from his opera "Diarmid," and will conduct it in person. Also various other eminent performers will appear, amongst them the distinguished Austro-American pianist, Madame Fannie Bloomfield-Zeisler, who holds so high a position as an executant on the other side of the Atlantic.

The story told by Mr. Newland Smith concerning his engagement at the Imperial Institute would be a good joke were it not for the amazement we must all feel that the money of an institution endowed by British munificence is to be distributed almost exclusively among foreigners. The engagement for next season of a wholly unknown band from Milan has already been commented upon. Mr. Newland Smith now declares he wrote to the Imperial Institute, offering the services of himself and his British band, and was refused. He then temporarily changed his name to "Sigvard Eriksen," and again applied, receiving a favourable answer by return of post. Now, this assertion is either true or false. If the latter, the Institute authorities should have no difficulty in exposing Mr. Newland Smith; but, if true, it discloses so disgraceful a state of affairs as to call for the intervention of the Prince of Wales and Lord Herschell, as chiefs of the Institute. It was perfectly impossible for the Institute authorities to know anything about "Sigvard Eriksen," because, as in the case of the historic Mrs. Harris, "there ain't no sich person." Yet, being a foreigner, this mythical individual was accepted, while a well-known British musician was refused. If the doctrine, "No Englishman need apply," is to be adopted, it would only be an act of decency to drop the word "Imperial" from the Institute title.

In the prospectus of Mr. Schulz-Curtius' concerts is the following cryptic reference :—

Mr. Schulz-Curtius avails himself of this opportunity to acknowledge the kind support accorded to his undertakings by the Press, which has almost unanimously declared these concerts to be of the very best that can be heard anywhere in the world. There are, of course, a few exceptions; some critics, for reasons best known to themselves, have repeatedly met the undertaking with that lack of sympathy which minimises every merit and enlarges on any little shortcomings. This treatment has often called forth the indignant protest of subscribers, who, after having derived the greatest pleasure from a concert, are surprised to see these reports, which give so wrong an impression to the outside public. Happily, however, the audiences which attend these concerts are quite capable of forming their own judgment, and, regarding new works, would rather be guided by the eminent artists who co-operate with Mr. Schulz-Curtius than by paragraphs of that description.

All this is, of course, very dreadful, and it would be interesting to know the identity of the offending writers, in order that they may be sacrificed on the high altar of Wagnerism. Of course, when Mr. Schulz-Curtius declares that his concerts are "the very best that can be heard anywhere in the world," there is no need to argue further with him, although it may modestly be suggested that the order is rather a large one. It is also interesting to be told that the public prefer to be guided in the choice of novelties by "eminent artists." Perhaps, when Mr. Curtius has enjoyed a little more experience of concert-giving, he may discover the fact that "eminent artists" have a happy knack of not considering the value of a work as a whole at all, their interest in the composition being mainly limited to their own parts, which, if showy enough, are pronounced masterpieces. It is possible that some of the offending critics may not have taken the view they should have taken of the commanding qualifications as conductors of Herr Siegfried Wagner and Herr Richard Strauss. To avoid trouble in the future, it might indeed be advisable to ask managers to supply their own criticisms.

An amusing lapsus is noted in one of the best edited of musical newspapers. Towards the end of a report of the meeting of the Incorporated Society of Musicians it is stated that the conference closed with a toy symphony, "In the execution of which fifteen Doctors of Music and twenty-nine musicians took part." The theory that a Doctor of Music is not necessarily a musician is distinctly refreshing. As somebody has suggested, it recalls the delightfully quaint prayer-book expression, "In quires and places where they sing." The framers of the Book of Common Prayer prophetically imagined certain modern church choirs where they do not sing.

Immense amusement seems to have been caused in Germany by the controversy between Mr. Eugene D'Albert and Dr. Lassen, the distinguished musician of Weimar. These two excellent artists indulged in an exchange of hard words which eventually, it seems, landed them in the Law Courts. According to the papers, at a meeting of the General Musicians Association at Leipsic, Dr. Lassen is alleged to have concluded a speech by calling Mr. D'Albert a "fibber and a calumniator." For this he had to pay 50 marks, or £2 10s., and costs. There was once a blood-thirsty Irishman who, resolving to avenge some real or fancied insult, went to the Court-house and deposited in advance 40s. for the prospective assault fine. Dr. Lassen seems to have got off at an equally inexpensive rate. However, it is alleged that he afterwards wrote to the principal of a music publishing firm, whereupon the Court was appealed to again, and the musician was cast in 200 marks, or £10, damages. This for the privilege of saying your mind in no measured language may be considered fairly moderate. In fact they certainly appear to do this sort of thing much better in Germany than in England.

The bandsmen in the London theatres are not as a body overpaid, and a good deal of sympathy will accordingly be expressed in their present efforts to secure proper remuneration for rehearsals. It seems that the custom at present is this: All rehearsals in the day time for pantomime or comic opera are supposed to be free, although a certain amount is paid for night rehearsals. The Gazette of the "Orchestral Association," which is practically the trades-union of the orchestral players, gives some interesting details of what the unfortunate bandsmen have to put up with. For example, in one instance there were eleven full-day rehearsals for the production of a comic opera which ran eight weeks. In another instance eleven rehearsals were held, in another eight, and another fourteen, none of which are paid for. The Gazette seems to hint that these rehearsals were unnecessary, at any rate to perfect the orchestra, and that they were held to a certain extent because some of the artists were incompetent to learn the music without it being drilled into them. Considering the average musical intelligence shown by chorus ladies, and, indeed, by some of the principals, in comic opera, this may very possibly be the fact. The tendency now, however, is to demand some sort of pay for all rehearsals, and it is difficult to understand any reason except parsimony why such rehearsals should not be paid for.

The same periodical, by the way, draws attention to the following amusing advertisement:—

Musicians wanted for orchestra, no pay, apply, &c.

The full name and address of the advertiser are given, but I do not see any reason to print them. A man who supposes that an orchestra plays merely for fun must be a strange person indeed.

The question of Sunday pay of orchestras has also arisen in Liverpool. It has more than once been asserted that when the London Sunday concerts were started at Queen's Hall, the bandsmen accepted half-pay, a step which is likely ultimately to have far reaching results upon the salaries of orchestral players generally. In Liverpool at the Sunday lectures, according to an official statement put forward, it is said that the band received £280 for the winter season and that they now demand an increase of from 25 per cent. to 30 per cent. £280 for an orchestra for a whole season certainly does not appear to be an extravagant rate of remuneration. In London such a sum would be swallowed up by a couple of concerts. The religious objection to Sunday concerts is now, except by a few doubtless sincere bigots, generally scouted. But it is an altogether different thing to suppose that performers should necessarily accept lower pay on Sundays than on week-days. To do so would certainly injure the week-day concerts. Were the performers ordinary working men they would probably demand double pay for Sunday labour.

The revival of Handel's "Athaliah" by the Handel Society was the chief concert event of the week. The oratorio, which was written for a sort of Hanoverian festival in the then Jacobite stronghold of Oxford University, in 1733, is quite unknown to the present generation, and one of the most enthusiastic of its hearers on Saturday was Mr. Arthur Balfour. The airs, of course, are now out of date, and the choruses, one or two of which have been heard at the Handel Festivals, are not so well developed as in some of the later oratorios. But, although "Athaliah" stands no chance of ranking in popular estimation with the "Messiah," "Judas," or "Israel in Egypt," its revival was of interest, if only as a matter of curiosity. A pianoforte concerto, by Mr. Boughton, of Aylesbury, with a new pianist and a conductor imported from Germany, was tried at St. James's Hall last week, but the performance was so bad that to venture to express an opinion of the concerto would be an absurdity. The London and Westminster Bank Orchestral Society has given a successful concert. Mr. W. Vincent Thomas has an excellent command over his little band of forty, and, for an amateur effort, the performance of Mozart's G Minor symphony and two of Moszkowski's Spanish Dances was very creditable. Miss Frances Macquoid, a clever and versatile young lady, has also given a successful dramatic and musical recital. At the Popular Concerts Miss Adela Verne has returned, and on Saturday gave a capital rendering of Bach's "Italian" concerto. Miss Leonora Jackson, an American pupil of Joachim, has also made a successful début at Queen's Hall in the violin concerto in D Minor of Vieuxtemps. Herr Liebling resumed his pianoforte recitals on Monday; and, indeed, concerts are now coming on thick and fast.

LETTERS ON BOOKS.

My dear Mr. Wyndham,—Mr. Justin McCarthy's "Story of Gladstone's Life" (1) is a mere sketch of the journalistic kind—light, slight, skimming, and impressionist—but it is as interesting as it is opportune. It gives, perhaps, the best answer that has yet been given to the charge of interested inconsistency, which in one form or another is for ever being pressed against the "hope of the stern, unbending Tories" of 1832. The Christian form of the charge is that which was epigrammatically expressed by Archdeacon Denison years since at a Tory dinner. During one of those sudden and sultry silences which sometimes at a dinner-table precede and presage a storm of babble, he launched this thunderbolt, "Gladstone is the most conscientious man in Europe." Before his Tory friends could make up their minds as to whether wine or Satan had entered into the Archdeacon, he added, quietly, "But he changes his conscience every week." While the Arab proverb, "The greatest impostor is the unconscious impostor," fairly expresses this view of Mr. Gladstone, the other—the Vicar of Bray—conception of him is the more popular, as being the more intelligible to the average Tory mind. Mr. McCarthy is more fortunate than I in his Tory friends if, as he informs you, he has never in the whole course of his life met either detractor.

> I have mixed with most of Mr. Gladstone's contemporaries, his political opponents as well as his political followers, and I have never heard a hint of any serious defect in his nature and his character, or of any unworthy motive influencing his public or private career.

All that Mr. McCarthy has ever heard alleged by his bitterest political opponents against Mr. Gladstone is that he was not always conciliatory, diplomatic, and polite, and that "he was not good at remembering faces and names." As, however, such sweet reasonableness is to be met with only in the "ampler ether and diviner air" of the House of Commons, Mr. McCarthy has "builded better than he knew" in supplying this adequate and admirable answer to the sordid detraction of the base world without its walls. His book is written on the text that no statesman can be consistent with the consistency of a moralist, a philosopher, or of a pedant, prig, faddist, or fanatic.

> Gladstone may be charged with inconsistency—a charge which has naturally to be made against any great statesman, for the essence of statesmanship consists in the recognition of imminent tendencies and actual facts. Nobody can possibly be called a statesman who starts in life with a pack of political nostrums which he proposes to apply inveterately to the cure of every constitutional malady in the State. A mind like that of Mr. Gladstone is inexorably compelled to go on studying the changing conditions of things, and is absolutely prohibited from applying remorselessly the remedies of the day before yesterday to the troubles of to-day. Many years ago John Bright said to me that Gladstone was "always struggling towards the light." Such might indeed be the statement of Gladstone's whole career.

This Mr. McCarthy has, I think, demonstrated as far as it is demonstrable in a sketch so slight. "Lord Rosebery," says Mr. Hogan in his interesting history of "The Gladstone Colony" (2), "told Mr. Gladstone on one occasion that, when the time came to write his life in full, the work would have to be undertaken by and distributed amongst a limited liability company." Such a company, however numerous or varied its constituents, would find portraits many enough and diverse enough in Mr. McCarthy's book to illustrate their encyclopædic biography. Mr. Hogan's work is really rather a history, and a very interesting history, of a colonising experiment than a comprehensive survey of Mr. Gladstone's political connection with the Colonies. Here is a characteristic incident of that connection in the days before Mr. Gladstone had found salvation. Zephaniah Williams, a Chartist leader who had been transported for life to Van Diemen's land, having distinguished himself by rushing into a burning lunatic asylum and rescuing thence a number of the inmates at the imminent risk of his life, was recommended by the Governor to Mr. Gladstone, the then Colonial Secretary, for a mitigation of his monstrous sentence in recognition of his gallantry.

But Mr. Gladstone declined to endorse this reasonable recommendation. He was at that time still a Conservative, and possibly did not foresee that in the years to come he would be eloquently advocating and energetically passing into law those identical Radical principles for the propagation of which Williams struggled, laboured, agitated, and endured long years of bitter exile and imprisonment.

In truth there is no crime which is more certain of exemplary punishment than that of being in advance of your time. Whether this is the crime of the Anarchist is discussed with singular acumen, and still more singular calm, in Herr Zenker's "Criticism and History of the Anarchist Theory" (3), which has just been translated from the German. Herr Zenker, while considering the Anarchist idea hopelessly unrealisable, demands for the doctrine, as long as it does not lead to crime, the right of tolerance due to every opinion without regard to its being more probable, practicable, or dangerous than any other opinion—claiming this tolerance not on mere academic grounds, but in the interests of the community. After so stiff and grim a book you should try, as an alterative, the Hon. Emily Lawless's "Traits and Confidences" (4), a set of singularly clever short stories worthy of the author of "Hurrish." Perhaps the best is "What the Bag Contained," but one and all are almost perfect specimens of the art of telling a story as distinguished from the gift of invention—of having a story to tell.—Believe me, dear Mr. Wyndham, ever yours very sincerely,

GIRLS' GOSSIP.

DEAREST AMY,—When you are in Paris you will notice the horrid cruelty with which most of the cochers and omnibus drivers treat their horses. And yet it was in Paris that I have often seen a cabman talk to his horse in the most endearing terms—pet it, coax it, caress it, and even kiss it. This is such a strange world of contrasts! I see by my Figaro that a wealthy woman, lately dead, has left a large fortune to the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. The details of the bequest include a direction to spend forty pounds a year in posting on the walls of the city copies of the Grammont Bill, which deals with cruelty to animals. Funds are also left for providing twelve new inspectors, the Society having been till now notoriously undermanned. And another clause in the will directs that an auto-car shall be established for the prompt removal of injured and suffering horses from the streets, where they have been known to lie in agonies for hours.

We have nothing to boast about ourselves in this respect. Charlie saw a crowd round a fallen horse one day on his way to the City at 10 in the morning, and found the dying animal still there on his return at 2 p.m. He inquired about it, and was told by the policeman that it could not be shot without the permission of the owner, and that he had gone out of town for the day and could not be communicated with. I do not think that London has a street ambulance for horses, though I remember hearing some years ago that one was to be started.

Perhaps the Jubilee killed it as it has done so many other minor charities, and winter parties as well. Hannah's children were lunching here the other day, and when we asked them if they had been to many parties this winter, they replied in doleful voices: "Only two!" Their usual experience is a plethora of parties all through the Christmas holidays and Hannah had prepared their pretty little frocks with a view to the ordinary state of things. "They'll all be outgrown next winter," she sighed, whereupon we administered a judicious blend of sympathy and rebuke, for it is ridiculous to be so very previous in so uncertain a world.

Her children looked such perfect ducks in their Dutch bonnets with the sides turned back in revers, so to speak, and covered with imitation Venice point. They have lovely hair, and it is so beautifully kept that it would look well even if the colour were not so fine. The way it is worn now, too, is so much prettier than the childish style of some few years back, when the hair was crimped in long plaits at night, emerging in the morning with ripples down the whole length. Now the ends are masses in great, round curls, and the straight fringe is a thing of the past, except with the youngsters of our Royal family, whose members are so excessively conservative in dress and toilet matters. The bright scarlet coats and caps that children have been wearing this winter are also picturesque. Hannah's children had their red Dutch bonnets matching the coats, and turned back from the face with lace, as I have described. The boy looked delicious in his little jockey cap. And then they have the charm of being well-behaved and well-brought up. So many children are spoiled nowadays that it is quite a treat to see the agreeable exceptions. Their manners at table contrasted pleasantly with those of some other children we met at a friend's a short time ago, who made their mother do exactly as they wished. They asked her in whispers for everything they wanted, and she got it for them, however unsuitable it may have been. Conversation was impossible, with the incessant whispered demands of these ill-bred children, and when they had had all they wished for, they got up from table and began noisily racing up and down the room, to the horror and dismay of the sweet, high-bred, and well-behaved little girls of the hostess. When the naughty ones had gone she said to her own youngsters: "Remember, darlings, those children are never to be asked here again, nor are you to go to Mrs. ——'s house." Spoiling children is dreadful selfishness, storing up misery for the youngsters themselves, as well as making a sharp rod for one's own back. When people talk of "indulgent parents" I always amend the phrase in my own mind to "self-indulgent."

Lilla had such a sweet gown made for herself for a big county ball—white silk covered with a tulle overdress embroidered with jet and silver. Getting into her carriage on her way to the ball, her footman shut a bit of her gown into the door. Arrived, she was getting out at the other door with the consequence that a great piece of the gown was torn away, and she found herself in rags instead of being one of the best-dressed women there, as she had fully intended. She discharged the footman on the spot, as you may imagine who know her so well. It was annoying, of course, but that is the worst of those very flimsy materials. The slightest mishap is apt to ruin them, and it always seems as if these accidents happen at the most critical moments.

Lilla gave a dinner party herself last week entirely in honour, as we chaffingly told her, of a new mahogany dinner table. One forgets, on ordinary occasions, how much real beauty there is in this wood. Servants grime it over with dingy dusters until there is no beauty left in it, and it is only when we come across a perfectly new one that we see the exquisite depth and variety of tone and tint. There was no cloth on the table, and the floral decorations were confined to wallflowers and daffodils in white and gold vases placed down the centre, each standing on a gold and black embroidered Persian mat. Down the sides of the table were damask slips embroidered in a new way, which leaves the outline of the plate quite plain, while surrounding it with curved sprays of flowers. A design in drawn-thread work formed an edging. When these slips were removed for dessert the maids removed with them a new sort of quilted and yet perfectly smooth and flat underlay, the best thing of the kind I have ever seen. It would be impossible to injure the table through this thickness, and the damask looked its very best over its white softness. I noticed, too, that there were ample d'oyleys provided for our dessert plates in addition to the smaller ones for the finger glasses. Such tender care did Lilla display for her new table. The maids carefully laid the d'oyleys on the mahogany before setting down the plates. They were sweet things, made of the finest cambric, lined with yellow satin and beribboned with yellow, a spray of mimosa, laburnum, marsh-mallow, or other yellow flower being embroidered lightly in the centre of each. She gives perfect little dinners. There is never too much. There are never any waits. Everything that should be hot is hot, and everything that should be cold is cold. Whenever we dine there she gives us our favourite wine, sparkling Burgundy, and I take it, one of the most agreeable traits of genuine hospitality is that which takes note of a guest's particular fancies in order to indulge them on future occasions.

So Margaret wants advice as to the best style of calling costume to get for the spring. She asks if coats and skirts are still worn, and if so, how they are made. They are still worn, and are likely to enjoy long popularity. The coats are almost without exception open-fronted, with all kinds of decorative appliances in the shape of waistcoats, fronts, and chemisettes, with lace cravats in long ends. There is a greater tendency to tightness of fit than has been noticeable for a long time, and the blowsiness of blouses has quite disappeared. Everything will be trim and neat. I should advise for a smart spring calling costume for a young wife of twenty-two, as she is, a rather light-tinted satin cloth or cashmere, with a very prettily-made bodice, and a cape that would easily slip off when in a friend's crowded drawing-room. There is nothing so becoming to a slight figure as a well-made bodice. Suppose she should select tan colour, the bodice might have cross-way bands of black or dark-brown velvet on each side, and rather in a diagonal line, as these are so much more becoming than straight lines. Military braiding is going to be very much worn this season. If she has a coat, it should be braided in front on the shoulders, and again on the sleeves, and perhaps on the collar as well. I saw a delicious coat in the Park on Sunday. It was in some thick, woolly stuff, probably a variety of camel's-hair, the colour being putty, or pale mushroom, just as Margaret chooses to call it. This was braided in a darker tone high on the shoulders, on the tops of the sleeves, and again on the fronts, which were three or four inches apart, the space between being filled in with folds of cardinal-red, wave-pleated chiffon. Many ruches of the chiffon filled the space between the rather wide but not very high collar and the neck. This might serve as an idea for Margaret to build up some conception upon of the gown of her eventual choice. The skirt, to be strictly up-to-date, should have some rows of braid upon it. There is a great fancy for wide, military braid just now. It describes squares, outlines the form of an apron on the front breadth, or is otherwise irrationally disposed, adding weight, and not in the least improving the appearance, except that it imparts a certain smartness.

You might tell your friend, who writes under the nom-de-guerre of "Practical Cook" that the best marmalade we ever tasted had the oranges all boiled together, with the single exception of the pips.

We have seen "Julius Cæsar" since I last wrote to you and our reverent admiration for Shakespeare is greater than ever. What a wonderful speech is that he puts into the mouth of Mark Antony on Cæsar's death! Schoolgirls and schoolboys are taught to recite it when they are far too young to appreciate its marvellous art, which seems a pity, for it often spoils their appreciation of it afterwards. It was with quite a wrench that we came back to the present when the curtain fell each time and ancient Rome gave place with a jerk to modern London. The curly wigs of the senators were very becoming to the actors. Did all men's hair curl in Italy of old? Miss Lily Hanbury's draperies of soft grey blue were lovely, and the black veil she added when her husband was dead seemed more graphically to express mourning than our suits of sable. Almost every feminine head in the stalls had its black feather and these little waving plumes are occasionally rather obstructive to the vision. To be out of the common one has only to dispense with a tall black aigrette. Sounds easy, does it not? But then one may be out of the common and yet completely insignificant. And that is not exactly what a woman's heart yearns after, is it? The music was most barbarically impressive, dating from the time before semitones had entered into the thoughts of men.

Such a pretty girl was skating at Niagara on Saturday. She had quantities of fair hair, large dark eyes, either blue or grey, and very delicate tinting, except the lips, which were bright coral. She was dressed all in white, and a toque and tie matched exactly to the coral of her lips. Need I say that she had no lack of squires on the ice? Another tall girl in grey, with a graceful figure and long lines of dark fur giving value to her height, was well supplied with convoys round the rink. Lady Randolph Churchill showed us some fine skating. Her gown was as simple as effective. It was black, with collar and revers to the waist of tapestry blue velvet, folds of soft white filling in the interval. She talked for a time to the Duc d'Orléans, but chiefly skated with her sister, Mrs. Jack Leslie, and once or twice helped a pretty little niece round—a courageous child who was determined to succeed. There was some one there in a mauve dress and a very wide pink sash with deeply fringed ends, who excited our wrath, so loudly did the shades of mauve and pink swear at each other.

By the way, Frances mentions that the managers of the Brighton Ice Rink have secured a great attraction this week, M. Maurice being engaged to give an exhibition of bicycle riding on the ice each afternoon. He is known as "the champion trick rider of France."

Christabel writes from Paris:—

This week I send you particulars of the dresses worn by the actresses in the new piece that every one goes to see, and, as the costumes are in the style of to-day, with a little of to-morrow, they may be useful in the way of ideas.

At the Theatre Français the piece is "Catherine," and Mdlle. Lara takes the part of the heroine. One of the gowns she wears is of cream-coloured spotted net with stripes of insertion introduced horizontally, a large collar of embroidered batiste which comes down the front and crosses at the waist, and above this a small collar of guipure insertion. The waistband is blue taffetas, with paste buckle, and in front of the bodice are pinned some yellow roses in a blue taffetas bow. The second costume is dove-grey velvet embroidered all over with chenille the same shade and a shade darker. The blouse bodice consists of transparent embroidery lined with green and fastening at the side. It has a neck-band of green silk folded in pleats.

Mlle. Brandès wore first a visiting dress. The skirt was cloth of the colour called here "pain brûlé" (a brownish shade), the tablier, surrounded by fine spangled embroidery, the design widening towards the foot; over a chemisette of red China crêpe was a large bolero of bronze-brown velvet embroidered with jet, and having revers of chinchilla, with a black net cravat. A small black velvet hat and chinchilla muff lined with red completed the costume. She next wore a very handsome princess robe of cloth in a lovely pale-green shade. On the bodice were vandykes of pink velvet mixed with lace and paste buttons to fasten it. The cloth sleeves were half long with a fall of lace, and at the top they had a frilling of pink velvet.

Mme. Pierson looked the dowager-duchess to perfection in a gown of mauve crêpon with wide satin stripes. All down the front was very handsome guipure embroidered with mother-o'-pearl and a cascade of mauve silk muslin.

Mlle. Muller wore white spotted net over rose-coloured silk and a waist-belt of white satin.

Clare sends me the following from Dublin :—

DEAREST MADGE,—The Castle season began early last week in Dublin, the third under the auspices of Lord and Lady Cadogan. Lord Cadogan, according to his own utterances, has taken very kindly to being a king and finds his crown light and easy wear. He is very practised in playing his part, or rather parts—now, the only difficulty must be with regard to getting them mixed. That, however, is not very threatening, on the occasions of a Levee and Drawing Room, when he stands under the canopy in the Throne Room of Dublin Castle, with the Sword of State displayed beside him and surrounded by a numerous and brilliantly arrayed Household, who number in their ranks four peers and some belted knights. At the Drawing Room, in especial, the Lord Lieutenant's sense of the consecrated viceregal person—though very far from having the "mailed fist" as an adjunct—must be very strong, when exercising the Royal prerogative of kissing all the ladies presented to him for various reasons, and the débutantes. Until the Duke of Marlborough's time, each Viceroy had the more than Royal privilege of kissing every woman at his first Drawing Room, sometimes nearly 700 kisses in one night—a surfeit of sweets, truly. No viceroy surrendered the privilege, but the Duchess of Marlborough receives the credit of having abolished it.

The Drawing Room on Wednesday night had no special features of interest, but was, as usual, a very pretty sight—the entrance and inner halls, with the guard of honour drawn up, the great staircase and corridors brilliantly lighted, the rows of powdered lacqueys and tropical plants, the long suites of rooms full of women in Court dress, train, feathers, and lappets, and of men in an infinite variety of uniforms, civil and military. How like a fancy ball a Court ceremonial of this kind must seem to the men! They must feel like going masquerading, and no doubt the dressy ones enjoy the outbreak from the usual sombre monotony of black and white. The Court sword is an example of a very unfit survival; one's lace and chiffon often furnish melancholy examples of what deadly effect this weapon can have in a crowd.

Lady Cadogan wore a handsome costume, made in Dublin, a harmony in blue and violet velvet. The blue dress was embroidered in lilac and the violet train lined with blue. Her diamonds were magnificent enough to suit the highest Court ceremonial. She looked a thoroughly regal figure walking in the procession through St. Patrick's Hall, her train carried by two pages-in-waiting. Lord and Lady Waterford made their first appearance at the Irish Court, where Lady Waterford's grandfather once reigned with a splendour never since surpassed. It was curious to see Lord Londonderry not seated on the Throne, but no doubt critically studying his successor on it. Another ex-Viceroy—though not of Ireland—Lord Dufferin, was present, too One feels that these occasions must be trying to abdicated or deposed vice-kings, they must feel a bit "out of it" when not filling the leading rôle. And as they are human, can they help feeling that there are some little things at least, about the present man's way of doing the part which are—well, no improvement on their ways of reading it? Ladies Annesley, Fingall, Eva and Margaret Forbes were a few amongst many pretty matrons and maidens. There was a goodly number of débutantes. Ladies Headfort, Ashbourne, Holmpatrick, and Clonbrock each presented a daughter. Amongst those who were accompanied by two daughters each were Ladies Mowbray and Stourton, Morris, Roberts, and Granard. Others had more than two daughters, but one passes them over in sympathetic silence. What a gift of girls so many families seem to have. The surplus woman must be increasing with the declining century. We shall soon have the very big battalions on the woman's side, and then—what next?

Lady Dufferin wore a handsome train, and looked charming and distinguished with her Orders. She had no daughter with her. Violet in every shade, from dark to light, and blue to red and primrose colours were much worn, no doubt because of the mild, spring-like weather. White and cream tints prevailed amongst the younger people. In many cases dark dresses were worn, with light trains. Lace and embroideries were in great favour. The number of bouquets—almost a necessary adjunct to Court dress, even at Dublin Castle—made the atmosphere quite fragrant, and brought sweet suggestions of gardens and conservatories.

Dublin is not now honoured by having a regiment of Guards included in its garrison, which is a great loss on ceremonial occasions, and partakes of the nature of an Irish grievance So long as Lord Wolseley was in Ireland he always had a battalion in the barracks nearest to the Royal Hospital. From the year of the Fenian rising when the Coldstream Guards went into action on outside cars, a Guard regiment, except for one short interval, was always stationed in Dublin. Their absence was quite remarkable on Wednesday night, one quite wanted to see the Guards uniform, the eye missing the accustomed brilliant colouring, as one might miss an effective flower from a garden.

On Thursday there was a big dinner in St. Patrick's Hall, followed by a dance in the Throne Room. Everything was beautifully done. The number of pretty dresses was co-equal with that of the guests of our sex, for every one had on a new frock. The dinner on Friday was smaller, and the dance larger, a very pretty one, too. Lord Cadogan allows his young people to do the dancing for him, and only occasionally goes through a duty quadrille. Lady Cadogan is an admirable vice-queen, and shows an example of agreeability and activity in entertaining her guests that many a less high placed hostess might usefully copy. In these days how often noblesse oblige, apparently means that the obligation is to be rude and ill bred.—Yours ever,

CLARE.

And now for a little cookery. You will find that fillets of eels dressed in this way make a superior dish :—

Remove the fillets from a fine eel, trim and cut them into pieces about three inches long, lay them in a buttered sauté pan with the ends slightly curved, season them with salt, pepper, lemon-juice, a little chopped shalot and chopped parsley; cover them with a buttered paper, after having added a glass of red wine and a little stock. Cook the fish in a moderate oven for about half an hour, then arrange the fillets in a circle on a thin border of mashed potato, to prevent them slipping. Put the ragoût in the centre and pour the sauce over all. To prepare the ragoût:—Blanch the soft roes of three nice fresh herrings by boiling them in salted water and lemon juice for ten minutes. Blanch, strain, and beard a dozen oysters, add them, with a few scallops of truffle, to a little stock, and keep them warm without allowing them to boil.

To make the sauce :—The bones of the fish should be chopped and put on to stew for about two hours in water with a little root vegetable, herbs, and spices, strained and reduced by boiling with the oyster liquor until about a teacupful remains, then mix it with a gill of good brown sauce and a glass of claret, and boil it again until it is a nice consistency. Finish the sauce by working in a small piece of anchovy butter, the juice of half a lemon, and a teaspoonful of chopped parsley. Add the ragoût to the sauce at the moment of serving.

Pilau of haddock is a pleasant change of food. It is advisable to use the fillets from a large fish, as they cut into thicker pieces :—

Trim the fillets, cut them into six or eight pieces, and fry them very slightly in a little salad oil. Rub the contents of a tin of tomatoes through a hair sieve, make it hot, and dissolve 1 oz. of glaze or a little Liebig in it. Make the quantity of liquid to about a pint with stock or water, then shower in 4 oz of Carolina rice. Put in the pieces of fish, season with salt, pepper, and a little lemon juice Cover all with a buttered paper and allow it to simmer for an hour, when the rice and fish should be quite done and have absorbed all the liquor. Arrange the rice in the centre of a hot dish, put the pieces of fish round, and pour a little brown sauce, which may be made from the bones of the fish, over all.

Dry curry made from the remains of turbot or soles makes a nice second-course dish :—

Take the fish from the bones whilst still warm, and, when cold, cut it into fine, dice-shaped pieces. Cut a large Spanish onion into dice, and put it into a stew-pan with 2 oz. of butter; cover it with the lid, and stand the stew-pan on a warm part of the stove until the onion is quite cooked and slightly browned. Then add 2 apples, which must be pared, cored, and cut in a similar manner, and about 1½ oz. of grated cocoanut; replace the lid, and cook all until the apple is done. Now mix in a dessertspoonful of curry paste, and a similar quantity of chutney and tomato sauce; add the milk of the cocoanut if possible. Failing this, add a little cream; add also the juice of half a small lemon, stir together, and simmer for half an hour. Now mix in the minced fish, and when quite hot arrange it in a silver dish, garnish it with fried croûtons, and serve with it nicely-boiled rice in a separate dish.

Cardoons make an excellent second course dish when dressed in this way:—

Having blanched one, stew it in some good brown sauce, for three-quarters of an hour, adding a pinch of sugar and two table spoonfuls of sherry, then boil it rapidly until the sauce will adhere to a spoon. Now stir in a dessertspoonful of chopped and blanched parsley and a squeeze of lemon juice. Arrange the vegetable nicely on a hot dish and garnish it with a border of heart-shaped pieces of fried bread, on each of which is placed a nice piece of beef marrow, previously blanched and seasoned with pepper, salt, lemon juice, and chopped and blanched parsley.

To make the lemon icing that you inquired about:—

Put 10 oz. of sifted icing sugar into a basin, add the strained juice of a lemon, and work it with a wooden spoon until it is thick enough to adhere to the cake.

I think you will like this way of dressing salt fish. It is nicer than when plainly boiled:—

Remove the fish in nice flakes, when it comes from table, and put the bones and skin on to stew in water for two hours. Dissolve 2 oz. of butter in a stewpan, mix in a heaped tablespoonful of flour and the strained fish broth, stir until boiling. Now make a border of mashed parsnips on the dish the fish is to be served in. Pour a little of the sauce in the dish, put a layer of the fish, sprinkle with hard-boiled yolk of egg passed through a wire sieve, season with pepper, and repeat the layers of fish and egg, making sauce the last layer. Cover the top with 1 oz. of grated Parmesan cheese, and place the dish in the oven for ten minutes. Glaze the top with the hot salamander.

Ever, dear, your loving cousin, MADGE.

THE LIFE OF NAPOLEON III.

By Archibald Forbes. With Photogravure Frontispiece and 36 Full-page Illustrations.

The Baron de Book-Worms says in Punch: "'Etiez-vous à Sedan'? These were the last words of Napoleon III., addressed to his old friend and faithful companion, Dr. Conneau. The adventurous life which practically ended in the death-trap of Sedan, is related by Mr. Archibald Forbes. His 'Life of Napoleon III.' adds to the accuracy of a historical annal the charm of romance. . . . He has compiled a stirring narrative, more especially forceful in the earlier chapters. With the first blast of the trumpet of war the pluckiest, most resourceful, and most successful war correspondent of the century is at his best again. The story of the campaign which began at Saarbruck and ended at Sedan is, my Baronite testifies, a brilliant piece of writing. It carries the reader breathless to the closing scene at Chislehurst, and the infinite pathos of the dying Emperor's faintly-murmured last words."

We will not divulge the details of the plot, which is sufficiently interesting to be spoilt by recital. . . . The story is wholesome and interesting; and it deserves recognition as a work of honest literary effort and unquestionable attraction."—Athenæum.

By David Christie Murray. With Frontispiece by Arthur Hopkins.

"Amongst the few novelists of a really high order we to-day possess, Mr. Christie Murray holds a foremost place. His right to that place he puts more and more beyond dispute in every work that comes from his hand, as in the present volume. It is a collection of short stories and poems, the former full of life and action and of most artistic finish, the latter strong and deep, appealing at once to the imagination and the emotions. . . . The other pieces are of similar high quality, the volume exhibiting not only the writer's undisputed genius, but his extraordinary versatility."—Lloyd's News.

The following is an indication of some of the persons and matters described or referred to:—

Charles Waterton, the "Wanderer"—Dr. Kitchiner—Samuel Wilberforce—Cardinal Wiseman—Cardinal Manning—Archbishop Whately—Dean Stanley—Monk, Bishop of Gloucester—Bishop Bloomfield—"Old" South—Kemble—Maturin — Rowland Hill — R. Montgomery — Father Mathew—Lacordaire—de Ravignan—Dupanloup—H. M. Wagner—Abbe Edgeworth—C. Spurgeon—"Iconoclast"—The Théâtre Français—Rachel—Renan—Zola—Arsène Houssaye—Sarah Bernhardt—The Making of Brighton—George IV.—Mrs. Fitzherbert—The Making of Tunbridge Wells—Lord Mansfield—Princesse de Lamballe—Sheridan—Duke of Cumberland—Bubb Dodington, &c., &c.

"The volumes are extremely entertaining, and the stream of anecdote, incident, bon mot, and reminiscence that pours through them has often sparkle," &c.—Scotsman.

THE STARS IN THEIR COURSES:

A Modern Romance of the Himalayas. By EDITHA EWENS.
1 vol. crown 8vo, price 6s.

"It is impossible to deny its faithfulness to life, or question the efficiency with which the author does her work. The character-sketching and dialogue-writing are accomplished with great skill."—The Scotsman.

WARD & DOWNEY, Limited, 12, York-buildings, Adelphi, W.C.

Mr. Wm. HEINEMANN'S NEW BOOKS.

PETER THE GREAT.

By K. WALISZEWSKI. Translated by Lady MARY LOYD.
With Portrait. New Edition, 1 vol., 6s. Library Edition, 2 vols., 28s.

St. James's Gazette.—"In every way a brilliant piece of work—succinct, lucid, well-arranged, clear-sighted, and judicial. The author of this biography recalls something of the qualities of Carlyle."

NEW LETTERS OF NAPOLEON I.

Suppressed in the Collection published under the auspices of Napoleon III. Translated by Lady MARY LOYD. With Portrait. 1 vol., demy 8vo, 15s. net.

Standard.—"Form a valuable contribution to the political, as well as the personal, history of the Napoleonic period."

FICTION.

THE WAR OF THE WORLDS.

By H. G. WELLS,
Author of "The Time Machine." 1 vol., 6s.

The Saturday Review.—"In Mr. Wells the intellectual processes are foremost, not the emotional. To possess a new view of life and literature, to create its image with minute and assiduous care, that is the way to secure fame."

The Spectator.—"As a writer of scientific romance, Mr. Wells has never been surpassed. Poe was a man of rare genius; but in his work there is a stifling hot-house feeling which is absent from Mr. Wells's work. Even when he is most awful there is always something human about his characters. Both Poe and Mr. Wells are followers of Swift, but Mr. Wells keeps nearest to the human side of the author of Gulliver."

THE BETH BOOK.

By SARAH GRAND, Author of "The Heavenly Twins. 1 vol., 6s.

Punch.—"The heroine of 'The Beth Book' is one of Sarah Grand's most fascinating creations. The story is absorbing; the truth to nature in the characters every reader will recognise."

THE TRIUMPH OF DEATH.

By GABRIELE D'ANNUNZIO. 1 vol., 6s.

The Pall Mall Gazette.—"A masterpiece. The story holds and haunts one. . . . A great prose poem that cannot be surpassed. The work of a master—a master whose genius is beyond dispute."

THE FOURTH NAPOLEON.

By CHARLES BENHAM. 1 vol., 6s.

Mr. ZANGWILL writes:—"Surely one of the most remarkable first books of our day. A daring imagination, a sombre, subtle sense of 'la comédie humaine,' such are the characteristics of this powerful book. . . . . A thoroughness and subtlety which Balzac could not have excelled."

THE BROOM OF THE WAR GOD.

By H. N. BRAILSFORD. 1 vol., 6s. [Friday.

CLEO THE MAGNIFICENT.

By Z. Z., Author of "A Drama in Dutch." 1 vol., 6s.

THE NIGGER of the 'NARCISSUS.'

By JOSEPH CONRAD. 1 vol., 6s.

MR. JAMES PAYN says:—"It does not seem too much to say that Mr. Conrad has in this book introduced us to the British merchant seaman as Rudyard Kipling introduced us to the British soldier."

THE GADFLY.

By E. L. VOYNICH. 1 vol., 6s.

The St. James's Gazette.—"A very strikingly original romance, which will hold the attention of all who read it, and establish the author's reputation at once for first-rate dramatic ability. Exciting, sinister, even terrifying, we must avow it to be a work of real genius."

THE CHRISTIAN.

By HALL CAINE. 1 vol., 6s.

The Sketch.—"It quivers and palpitates with passion, for even Mr. Caine's bitterest detractors cannot deny that he is the possessor of that rarest of all gifts—genius."

GOD'S FOUNDLING.

By A. J. DAWSON, Author of "In the Bight of Benin." 1 vol., 6s.

The Pall Mall Gazette.—"A fine and striking piece of work, powerfully and skilfully developed."

A MAN WITH A MAID.

By Mrs. HENRY DUDENEY. Cloth, 3s. net; paper, 2s. 6d. net.

HOSPITALS & APPEALS.

LONDON FEVER HOSPITAL, Islington, N.
Over 80,000 sufferers from infectious fevers have been admitted into this Hospital since 1802, and probably ten times as many other persons have thereby been preserved from infection.
Patients pay about one-fourth of their cost, the other three-fourths falling upon the funds of the institution.
The contributions received in 1897 show a serious falling off compared with those of 1896.
ADDITIONAL HELP is URGENTLY NEEDED.

FOR KLONDIKE,

Passengers should book to Vancouver City, terminus of the CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY. The arrival platform is the departure wharf of all Klondike steamers. Complete outfits can be purchased in Vancouver City cheaper than in the United States. Purchasers save not only in first cost, but escape all Customs duties. Remember Klondike is in Canada. All outfits purchased elsewhere pay an average duty of 30 per cent. Steamers leave Vancouver City regularly direct for the Klondike.—Apply, CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY OFFICES, 67 and 68, King William-street, London Bridge, E.C.; 30, Cockspur-street, Trafalgar-square, W.C.

AN M.D.'s OPINION of GAMAGE'S

"OSOEZI" SADDLE.

HAVANT, HANTS,
April 3rd, 1897.

DEAR SIRS,

I have not ridden on the "OSOEZI" Saddle myself, but have been trying it for a lady patient to whom vibration would mean dreadful pain. She is perfectly comfortable on it, and expresses her pleasure every time I see her. I have shown the drawing to several people, and the patient, who came some distance to see me, ordered a saddle of this pattern from one of the agents here.

Yours faithfully,
M.D.

GIVEN AWAY to purchasers of ZUILIA, the New Indian Perfume, solely manufactured by the ZUILIA Perfumery Company, 13, Rosebery-avenue, London, E.C. Put up in artistic bottles, packed in wool, in handsome box, 1s. 3d., sent carriage free per return, for 1s. 6d.

This new and powerful scent is a marvellous discovery, being a blend of odoriferous perfumes, from which emanates a delicious aroma, delicate and pleasing, the generous bouquet pervading the boudoir, and, in fact, the whole household. No home should be without it. With ZUILIA Perfume we are giving free a 6d. sample box of ZUILIA Dentifrice unsurpassed for the preservation of the teeth. A SPECIAL OFFER.—£50 will be given gratis to purchasers who succeed in placing together the twelve pieces to form a square. INSTRUCTIONS.—Cut out the pieces and place together in such a way that the whole will form an ordinary square. When done, paste on cardboard or thick paper (in order to keep the square together), then post the same to us with a stamped envelope addressed, enclosing P.O. or stamps value 1s. 6d. for ZUILIA scent. NOTA BENE.—This offer holds good for readers of this paper for the next fourteen days. Should there be more than one person succeed in forming the square, then the £50 will be divided thus: If two correct, then each will receive £25; if five correct, then each will receive £10; if ten, then each will receive £5; and so on. The task set being very difficult, it is anticipated that few will succeed in solving, thus making the remuneration very substantial. IT IS SURELY WORTH TRYING FOR.

Mülhens' "Rhine Violets"

No. 4711 TRADE MARK.

DISTILLED FROM FRESHLY GATHERED RHINE VIOLETS.
A SCENT OF RARE FRAGRANCE.
A VERY ECHO OF NATURE.

CAUTION.

Owing to the phenomenal success of this popular Scent, some perfumers are offering essences of their own manufacture under the name of "RHINE VIOLETS." The public must not be deceived, but insist upon "MULHENS'" brand, which is distilled from the flower itself. Don't accept any bottle not bearing Ferd. Mülhens' name. This alone ensures genuineness. Ferd. Mülhens, of Cologne, is the originator of this exquisite perfume, and was the first to introduce it into England.

The Fashionable Press of London are unanimous in praise of it.

Prevention is Better than Cure.

Cure is at all Times Uncertain.

BUT

Prevention lies in a sound, vigorous, and well-nourished frame. With exhaustion and in a wasted condition, the body becomes liable to all diseases, and Cod Liver Oil is the means of prevention, for it is the most valuable nutrient in such cases. The best condition in which this valuable stamina-supplying material can be taken is

MELLIN'S COD LIVER OIL EMULSION

For it is easy of digestion even for the young, rapidly assimilated even by the weakly, and is most palatable for all. This cannot be said of plain Cod Liver Oil.

CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND, AND PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY.

To the Holders of
CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND, AND PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY FIVE PER CENT. FIRST MORTGAGE, EXTENSION, AND COLLATERAL BONDS.
FIVE PER CENT. DEBENTURE BONDS.

This Company has entered into an agreement with Messrs. Speyer & Co., New York, for the sale of about $52,000,000 New General Mortgage Four per Cent. Ninety Year Gold Bonds, Interest payable Jan. 1st and July 1st, to be issued for the purpose of retiring the following issues:—
$40,712,000 Five per Cent. First Mortgage, Extension, and Collateral Bonds.
$4,500,000 Five per Cent. Debenture Bonds.
$5,000,000 Seven per Cent. Chicago and South-Western Railway Company First Mortgage Bonds, due November 1st, 1899.

Upon ratification of the new mortgage by the stockholders at a meeting called for February 15th, 1898, the Chicago, Rock Island, and Pacific Railway Company intends to exercise its privilege of redemption at 105 and accrued interest, New York terms, as follows: The Five per Cent. First Mortgage, Extension, and Collateral Bonds to be paid on or before July 1st, 1898.

The Five per Cent. Debenture Bonds to be paid on September 1st, 1898.

The following particulars are taken from a statement by R. R. Cable, Esq., the President of the Chicago, Rock Island, and Pacific Railway Company:—

The New Mortgage provides that none of the existing Bonds shall be extended at maturity, but that they shall be retired, so that thereafter the New Bonds will be secured by a First Mortgage on all the railroad property and real estate of the Chicago, Rock Island, and Pacific Railway Company, including its railroad, terminals at Chicago and other points and equipment; and also its leases, all as is more fully specified in the mortgage.

The Capital Stock of the Company on March 31st, 1897, was	$46,156,000
The Bonded Debt	62,712,000
(This amount includes $12,500,000 Six per Cent. Chicago, Rock Island, and Pacific Railway First Mortgage Bonds due 1917.)
The net income of the Company for the fiscal year ending March 31st, 1897, after deduction of rentals and all other charges, was	$4,765,121.27
The interest on the bonded debt was	3,321,525
The surplus income for the year was	$1,443,596.27

By the proposed plan of refunding, the annual interest charges will be reduced, upon the retirement of the Five per Cent. First Mortgage, Extension, and Collateral Bonds, the Five per Cent. Debenture Bonds, and the Chicago and South-Western Railway Seven per Cent. Bonds, from $3,321,525 to $2,824,904, an annual SAVING of $496,621.

The net earnings for the nine months ending December 31st, 1897 (December estimated) show an increase of $1,525,198.24 over the corresponding period in 1896.

The Chicago, Rock Island, and Pacific Railway Company has regularly paid cash dividends in each year since the organisation of the Company in 1880, amounting in the aggregate to $38,938,465.

Subject to the ratification of the New Mortgage by the Stockholders,

The undersigned hereby OFFER, until February 17th, 1898 (unless the amount available for this purpose is exhausted earlier), $25,000,000 of the New General Mortgage Four per Cent. Gold Bonds

To the holders of the FIVE PER CENT. FIRST MORTGAGE, EXTENSION, and COLLATERAL BONDS, and the FIVE PER CENT. DEBENTURE BONDS, in exchange for their existing Bonds at the price of 103½ per cent. and accrued interest, New York terms, the computation to be made as of May 1st next, and the difference of interest between 4 per cent. and 5 per cent. to be allowed to the Bondholder.

Receipts will be issued for the Bonds deposited, to be exchanged free of charge to the Bondholders against new definitive Bonds when ready.

Applications will be made to have the new General Mortgage Four Per Cent. Gold Bonds officially quoted in New York, London, and Frankfort.

Full particulars as to the terms and conditions of the exchange may be obtained at the offices of the undersigned:

PROSPECTUS.

This Company is formed for the purposes defined by the Memorandum of Association, including powers:—

(1.) To manufacture and sell Guns, Gun Carriages, Ammunition and War Material, and to carry on business as Electrical, Hydraulic, Mining and General Engineers.

(2.) To acquire a Licence dated 19th November, 1897, granted by Messrs. Schneider & Co., of Creusot and Havre, the celebrated Manufacturers of Guns and War Material, to Manufacture and Sell the Schneider-Canet Artillery.

(3.) To acquire and take over as a going concern the undertaking of Easton, Anderson, & Goolden, Limited, the well-known Engineers, of Erith and London.

A distinctive feature of this Company will be its co-operation with other existing and well-known undertakings, by means of which it will gain many of the practical advantages of an amalgamation of Associated Firms so far as the securing of orders is concerned.

The Manufactories of Messrs. Schneider & Co. at Creusot and Havre are, as is well-known, among the largest of the kind in the world, and occupy in France, as regards Artillery, a position similar to of Messrs. Krupp in Germany and Sir W. G. Armstrong, Whitworth, & Co., Limited, in Great Britain.

The Schneider-Canet Artillery is extensively used in the French Army and Navy, and has been supplied to other Governments, including those of Brazil, Chili, Japan, Greece, and Portugal.

It is well-known that the profits on the manufacture of War Material are large. The business is at present in very few hands; and, the reputation of the Schneider-Canet Artillery being equal to that of any other type, the Directors are of opinion that a large and profitable business can be done by this Company. At the present time there is a great and increasing demand for Guns and War Material.

Under the terms of the Licence (which was granted on the 19th November, 1897, to Sir W. G. Pearce, Bart., and Mr. Francis Elgar), a translation of which, annexed to the Agreement of the 25th January, 1898, can be seen at the Offices of the Company and of the Company's Solicitors, this Company will have the benefit of the experience of Messrs. Schneider & Co., who undertake to furnish all the necessary Drawings, Information, Notes, Calculations, &c., and to afford other facilities for the execution of orders.

This Company is, therefore, saved much of the heavy expense of a separate and costly expert staff, and is consequently on very favourable terms as regards competition.

The Licence leaves this Company free to construct Artillery of any design for the British Government, and Guns in accordance with the Government requirements will be constructed, and submitted for trial.

Provisional Agreements have been secured for co-operation with the Fairfield Shipbuilding and Engineering Company, Limited, of Govan, Glasgow, and also in relation to the supply by Thos. Firth & Sons, Limited, of Sheffield, of the Steel which will be required for the manufacture of Guns and other purposes, so that the Company, in conjunction with the Companies above mentioned, will be in a position to take orders for the Construction and Complete Equipment of Battle Ships of the largest size, and generally to undertake contracts of any magnitude.

The Agreements in question provide that each of the above-named Companies shall use its influence to secure orders for and promote the business of the others. This Company is thus at once furnished with representatives throughout the world, and placed in an unusually favourable position for the early securing of remunerative orders, while its capital is comparatively so small that the results should be specially satisfactory.

In order to lessen the delay inseparable from the establishment of new Works, the Company have arranged for the purchase as a going concern of the entire Business and undertaking of Easton, Anderson, & Goolden, Limited, the well-known Engineers of Erith and London.

The Erith Works of Easton, Anderson, & Goolden, Limited, are admirably adapted for the purposes of this Company. Their situation and extent and the condition and value of the Plant, Machinery, and Works are fully detailed in the Report of Messrs. Fuller, Horsey, Sons, & Cassell, dated the 29th day of April, 1897, to the Trustees for the Debenture Stock Holders of Easton, Anderson, & Goolden, Limited; a copy of which, together with a copy of the same firm's Supplemental Report, dated the 2nd February, 1898, and of Messrs. W. B. Peat & Co.'s Certificate, dated the 31st January, 1898, as regards the other Assets of the Concern, accompanies the Prospectus.

Messrs. Fuller, Horsey, Sons, & Cassell's report of the 29th of April, 1897, states as regards the Plant and Machinery that, "with the exception perhaps of the Locomotive Works of the larger Railway Companies and the Royal Dockyards, it comprises the finest and most costly collection of Engineer's machine tools to be found in the South of England, and is in admirable working order."

They value the Freehold Engineering Works with Fixed and Loose Plant (exclusive of goodwill) at	£202,257 0 0
While Messrs. W. B. Peat & Co. certify that in addition to the items included in the above valuation the Stocks and Stores and other Assets of the undertaking in hand on the 30th June, 1897 (particulars of which are specified in their Certificate) were valued in the Books of the Company at that date (exclusive of goodwill), at ...	154,955 11 4
Making the Total Property and Assets of Easton, Anderson, & Goolden, Limited (as valued and certified above) ...	£357,212 11 4

These Assets were on the 30th June, 1897, subject to certain Liabilities which, excluding the amounts due in respect of Debenture Issues, stood on that date in the Books of the Company at the sum of £35,956 5s. 3d.

The Business has been carried on from the 30th June, 1897, down to the 31st December, 1897, from which date it is to be taken over by the Company, on the account and at the risk of Mr. Ernest Terah Hooley, who will indemnify the Company against any risk of Loss arising from the recent Engineers' Strike and Lockout, or otherwise during that period.

Easton, Anderson, & Goolden, Limited, possesses one of the oldest Engineering businesses in the Country, and its reputation for first-class work extends to all parts of the world, and as Contractors to the Home and Foreign Governments for many years it has acquired great experience in the manufacture of Gun Mountings, Gun Carriages, and War Material.

The Agreement for the purchase of this business provides that Messrs. Wilson & Baynes, Directors of Easton, Anderson, & Goolden, Limited, shall be appointed Managing Directors of the Company for a period of five years.

In addition to the manufacture of Ordnance and War Material, the Company will continue, develop, and extend the General Engineering business of Easton, Anderson, & Goolden, Limited, and in connection therewith special attention will be devoted to Electrical Traction and Electrical Transmission of Power, in both of which branches there will undoubtedly be great developments both at home and abroad in the immediate future. Several important schemes have been submitted to Easton, Anderson, & Goolden, Limited, and will be carefully examined by the Directors of this Company.

The Works Manager certifies that the Orders now on the books which will be taken over by this Company will keep the existing works fully employed for a period of six months.

The additional Plant required for the production of Guns, &c., will be proceeded with at once; and special arrangements have been made with one of the first Tool-Makers in Manchester for expediting the construction of the Plant in question, by allowing much of the finishing work to be done at Erith.

Sir W. G. Pearce and Mr. Francis Elgar, by an Agreement of the 25th of January, 1898, mentioned below, have agreed to transfer the benefit of the Licence from Messrs. Schneider & Co. to Mr. Ernest Terah Hooley for the sum of £50,000, payable partly in cash and partly in fully-paid Ordinary Shares of this Company, and this Licence is included in the sale by Mr. Ernest Terah Hooley to the Company under the Agreement of the 2nd of February, 1898.

Under the said Contract of the 2nd February, 1898, Mr. Ernest Terah Hooley agrees to sell to the Company the undertaking and assets of Easton, Anderson & Goolden, Limited, as a going concern as from the 31st December, 1897, subject to its debts, liabilities and contracts, except its debenture issues, which will be discharged by Easton, Anderson, & Goolden, Limited.

The Vendor, who is selling at a profit, has fixed the aggregate purchase money for the Licence and Properties before referred to at £550,000, and guarantees the subscription of a sum of £250,000 towards working capital and construction of Works, and agrees to pay the expenses of the issue of capital and of the promotion, formation, registration, and incorporation of the Company down to the allotment of Shares other than the stamp duties in connection with the acquisition of the Properties.

Contracts have been entered into between Sir William George Pearce, Bart., and Mr. Francis Elgar, and Mr. Ernest Terah Hooley, dated the 25th January, 1898; Mr. William Edward Davies, on behalf of the Company, and the Fairfield Shipbuilding and Engineering Company, Limited, dated the 31st January, 1898; Mr. William Edward Davies on behalf of the Company and Thos. Firth & Sons, Limited, dated 31st January, 1898; Easton, Anderson, & Goolden, Limited, and Mr. Ernest Terah Tooley, dated 31st January, 1898; and Mr. Ernest Terah Hooley and United Ordnance and Engineering Company, Limited, dated 2nd February, 1898; and Mr. Thomas Perceval Wilson and Mr. Ernest Terah Hooley, dated 31st January, 1898.

These Contracts can be seen, together with the Reports before referred to, at the Offices of the Company, and copies can also be seen at the Offices of the Company's Solicitors.

Easton, Anderson, & Goolden, Limited, whose business is to be acquired, have in the course of their business entered into numerous Trade and other Contracts the benefits whereof, and the obligations thereunder affect this Company. Full particulars of such Contracts cannot be set out within the limits of this Prospectus, and it is not considered that the 38th Section of the Companies Act of 1867, can be deemed to apply thereto. Subscribers for Share Capital under this Prospectus shall by their application expressly waive and be deemed to waive all right (if any) to disclosure or production of Contracts other than those above referred to.

Application will in due course be made to the London Stock Exchange for a settlement and official quotation.

Where the number of Shares or amount of Debenture Stock allotted is less than the number or amount applied for, the surplus paid on application will be credited towards the amount payable on allotment. In cases where no allotment is made the deposit will be returned in full.

Prospectuses and Forms of Application for Shares and Debenture Stock respectively can be obtained at the Offices of the Company, and at the Bankers, Brokers, and Solicitors.

Dated 3rd February, 1898.

The List of Applications will be opened on Monday morning, 7th February, at 10 a.m. to Tuesday at 4 p.m. for Town Subscribers, and to Wednesday at 4 p.m. for Country Subscribers. Preference in Allotment will be given to Shareholders of the Glencairn Company registered on the 5th February.

GLENCAIRN MAIN REEF GOLD MINING COMPANY, Limited.

Registered as a Limited Liability Company under the Laws of the South African Republic.

CAPITAL - - - - £550,000,

In 550,000 Ordinary Shares of £1 each.

ISSUED CAPITAL - - £500,000.

Issue of £140,000 Six per Cent. First Mortgage Debentures in Bonds of £50 each.

To be secured by first mortgage of all the landed property, buildings, plant and machinery of the Company.

The Debentures will be issued at par, and be repayable at 102 in seven annual drawings of £20,000 each and the premium of 2 per cent., commencing on May 1st, 1901, and terminating on May 1st, 1907, or by purchases in the market if below par. Holders of Debentures will have the option until 7th February, 1900, on giving seven days' notice, of converting them, at their nominal value, into Ordinary Shares, at the rate of £3 10s. per Share, that is to say, a holder of Debentures to the value of £350 would be entitled to 100 Ordinary Shares in exchange. Should this option be exercised the amount of the annual drawings will be correspondingly reduced.

TRUSTEES FOR THE DEBENTURE HOLDERS.
THE JOHANNESBURG CONSOLIDATED INVESTMENT COMPANY, LIMITED,
10 & 11, Austin Friars, E.C.

BANKERS—Messrs. GLYN, MILLS, CURRIE & CO., 67, Lombard Street, E.C.

THE JOHANNESBURG CONSOLIDATED INVESTMENT COMPANY, Limited, invite applications for the above issue at par, payable as follows—10 per cent. on Application; 40 per cent. on Allotment; 25 per cent. on 7th March; 25 per cent. on 7th April.

The issue will be secured by a first mortgage bond in favour of the Trustees, and duly registered in the Deeds Registry Office in Pretoria, upon all the landed property, mining claims and water rights, dams and reservoirs, buildings, stamps, cyanide works, machinery, and fixed plant of every description belonging to the Company. These are all in good working order and the buildings and surface works in good repair. There will also be a floating charge over the whole of the undertakings and assets of the Company.

The Debentures will bear interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, payable half-yearly on 1st May and 1st November, and the first coupon will be payable 1st November, 1898.

Interest on payments calculated from date of allotment, and the dates of subsequent instalments will accrue at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum to the 30th April, and will be paid when the provisional scrip is exchanged for definitive bonds on or about 1st May.

Instalments may be paid in full in advance either on allotment or on the due date of subsequent instalments under a discount at the rate of £3 per cent. per annum.

The Debentures will be to bearer, with coupons attached, or they can be registered at the Offices of the Company in Johannesburg, or of the London Agents, the Johannesburg Consolidated Investment Company, Limited, 10 & 11, Austin Friars, E.C., where the half-yearly Coupons will also be payable.

PROSPECTUS.

THE Glencairn Main Reef Gold Mining Company was originally formed in the year 1889, with a capital of £175,000, which was subsequently increased to £225,000, for the purpose of acquiring and working a block of 72 claims, in extent 102 acres, on the outcrop of the reef of the farm Driefontein, being portion of the Mynpacht of the Witwatersrand Gold Mining Company.

In June, 1896, it was decided to acquire the adjoining property of the Glenluce Gold Mining Company, and for this purpose the capital was further increased to £550,000, of which 225,000 shares were issued to the Shareholders of the Glenluce Gold Mining Company, in exchange for their shares, 50,000 shares were taken up, at £3 per share, by the Shareholders of the two companies, to furnish working capital, and 50,000 are held in reserve.

By this amalgamation the life of the mine is practically doubled (for the Glenluce property had only been worked as The Knight's Tribute on a small scale), but its extent and richness were ascertained to be fully equal to that of the Glencairn. This property consists of 60 claims on the farm Driefontein and on the same series of reefs as those of the Glencairn and the Witwatersrand Companies. These reefs are now well known to be amongst the most reliable and regular of the Witwatersrand series, and though not of a high grade are capable of being worked at a good profit. In addition to this, a valuable water right has been secured and a quantity of useful rock-drill and other plant acquired.

The property is bounded by the May Consolidated and New Primrose Companies on the west, and by the Witwatersrand Gold Mining Company on the east, and its relative position as regards neighbouring properties will be seen from the Sketch Plan.

In order to economise working costs, and to ensure more efficient control in the management, it was decided to remove the modern portions of the Glencairn Battery to the Glenluce site, and to increase the Battery power to 160 stamps of the most improved construction, also to erect 14 new steel Cyanide Vats, with reduction plant of sufficient capacity to treat all the tailings from the larger Battery. This radical change in the system of working entailed the suspension of all milling work, but at the same time the development of both sections of the Mine was carried on with vigour. The ore reserves in the two sections in December, 1896, as certified by the Surveyor, amounted to 253,000 tons. These extensive alterations and improvements, rendered necessary by the amalgamation, exhausted the working capital of the Company, and necessitated further expenditure to the extent of £140,000. It is for the purpose of liquidating this debt, and so cover the expenditure on the works above indicated, and thus place the Company at once on a dividend-paying basis, that this issue is now made.

Milling operations were resumed in the month of July, 1897, with 100 stamps, increased later on to 110, and preparations are being now made to drop an additional 20 stamps. The following table shows the working of the mine for the six months ending December, 1897, and from this it will be seen that working costs have been reduced from 19s. 1·8d. to 17s. 9·15d. or 16s. 10d. per ton milled, whereas before the suspension of work they were never less than 22s. to 23s. per ton. It will also be noticed that the development of the mine has been kept well ahead of the milling power, and that the quality of the ore maintains a consistent average value throughout. The monthly profit has also steadily improved from £7,483 to £10,600, and the management have no doubt that this will be materially increased when the additional stamps are operating.

A copy of the Articles of Association of the Company and the draft Trust deed securing the Debentures can be seen at the Offices of the Johannesburg Consolidated Investment Company, 10 & 11, Austin Friars, London, E.C., where the Prospectus and Forms of Application can be obtained.

In the event of the Company going into voluntary liquidation before the 7th February, 1900, the debentures will be repayable at 102.

Applications for Debentures on the Form accompanying the Prospectus may be sent to the Company's Bankers, together with cheque for the application money.

Failure to pay any instalment will render previous payments liable to forfeiture.

Provisional scrip will be issued against letters of allotment and cash receipts, and will be exchanged for definitive Debentures on and after 1st May, 1898.

Where no allotment is made the application money will be returned in full, and when the number of Debentures allotted is less than those applied for, the surplus will be credited to the account of future payments.

Application will be made to the Stock Exchange for a quotation in their Official List.

IN EMBODYING IN AN EIGHT-LINED RHYMED VERSE THE WORD "CHINAMAN," IN A SIMILAR WAY TO THAT SHOWN IN THE STANZA QUOTED BELOW AND IN A SIMILAR METRE.

This is the verse which is to serve as a model:—

Dear fOoLish LAdy were youR eyeS distresseD
On ListLess AfteRnoonS, to finD the crOwd—
Low crowd of miLlionAiReS, Dull, cOmmon, Loud—
Lolling At ReSt on lanD yOur Liking bLessed?
ARe you So maD with gOLd? At LeAst 'twere wise,
Rich Snob, to stanD by gOLd, Lest weAlth's unRest
Set free the DoOmfuL hate in LAbouR's eyeS.

It will be noticed that the word "dollars" is embodied seven times in the stanza, and that the first initials of the seven lines also form the same word. The lines positively reek with dollars. They were published in an evening paper as a comment on the following paragraph which appeared a few days ago:—

"The 'highest' New York Society consists now of seventy-five exclusive millionaire families, among whom, while the Vanderbilts are leaders of fashion, the Goulds and working millionaires generally find no place. One of the leaders of this set is reported to have said the other day, 'Nothing spoils the ocean like the proximity of a few common people.'"

In writing the eight lined rhymed verse which is asked for, competitors must embody the word "Chinaman" as frequently as they can. They must be careful, too, that the first initials of their eight lines also make this word. The stanzas should refer in some way to current events in the Far East; and, as has been said above, must be written in the metre of the specimen verse; that is to say, each line must contain ten syllables. In no case must more than two of the letters of the embodied word come together. Each line in the stanza must rhyme with some other, and all answers must reach me by the morning of Monday, February 21, at the latest.

ENTRE NOUS.

THE Queen will entertain a succession of "dine and sleep" guests at Windsor Castle from to-morrow until Monday, March 7, including most of the members of the Royal family who are now in England, some of the Ambassadors and Foreign Ministers, and several members of the Cabinet.

The first Levee of the season is to be held next Monday afternoon at St. James's Palace by the Prince of Wales, who will be accompanied to the Throne Room by the Duke of Connaught, Duke of York, and Prince Christian. A very large attendance is expected at this Levee, as an immense number of presentations have been intimated, and there is sure to be an unusually full entrée, as the Prince of Wales will receive the Corps Diplomatique, and the Ministers are to attend this Levee.

The Dowager Lady Ampthill and the Duchess of Roxburghe are to be successively the Ladies-in-Waiting on the Queen during the three weeks' rèsidence of the Court at Windsor Castle.

Her Majesty's suite during her visit to the Riviera will consist of Lady Antrim, Lord William Cecil, Mrs. Phipps, Sir Arthur Bigge, Colonel Carington, Lieutenant Ponsonby, the Munshi Abdul Karim, and Sir James Reid. Lord Cross and Lord James of Hereford will be successively the Ministers-in-Attendance on the Queen at Cimiez.

The Duke and Duchess of York have arrived at their apartments in St. James's Palace from Sandringham for the season.

The Duchess of Albany and her daughter, Princess Alice, who are staying at the Villa Nevada, Cannes, will return to Claremont about March 30, and at Whitsuntide they are going to Holland on a long visit to the Queen Regent of the Netherlands.

Prince Albert of Belgium, only surviving son of the Comte de Flandre, and heir presumptive to the throne, is to arrive in London from Brussels on Friday the 25th, and he will stay in England for a week before proceeding on a tour through the United States and Canada. Prince Albert is to be the guest of the Queen at Windsor Castle for a day or two during his stay in England, and he will pay a visit to the Duc and Duchesse d'Orléans at Twickenham. The King of the Belgians and the Comte de Flandre are first cousins of the late Comte de Paris, and of the Archduchess Clotilde of Austria, the mother of the Duchesse d'Orléans.

The second Levee and Drawing Room are to be held this week at Dublin Castle, only a fortnight after the first function. The same programme with regard to dinners and dances will be gone through after the second Drawing Room as on the first occasion. Between times Lord Cadogan has done a turn as a Conservative Cabinet Minister. Last week he crossed and recrossed the Irish Channel in order to attend the Cabinet Council. Common sense would suggest that the Chief Secretary should be in the Cabinet, and the Lord Lieutenant confine himself to representing in Ireland the Sovereign who has never represented herself there. In connection with Ireland, however, it is not the fashion to follow the dictates of common sense.

The death of Lord Carlingford leaves a vacant ribbon of St. Patrick. The Knights made in Lord Cadogan's time have not been—with the exception of Lord Roberts, and, of course, the Duke of York—particularly happily selected. There is much competition amongst Irish noblemen—who alone are eligible—to add K.P. to their styles and titles. In fact, the majority of them show nationality in no other way, except in the desire to obtain the national order.

Dr. Ingram, the author of "Who Fears to Speak of '98," has, by a curious coincidence, been elected Vice Provost of Trinity College, in the centenary year of '98. He has succeeded the late Dr. Carson in the post. Trinity College is popularly looked on as a centre of Unionism and even anti-Nationalism. It has, however, produced many rebels in its time, including the '98 hero, Robert Emmett. In later times, many of the "Young Irelanders" were Trinity Collegians, amongst their number being John Blake Dillon, the father of Mr. John Dillon.

The Morpeth Hunt Ball was held last week at the Assembly Rooms, Newcastle, instead of the Town Hall, Morpeth, where it has always hitherto taken place. It is understood locally that this was owing to the objection of the Earl of Carlisle (or, probably, his Countess), who owns the hall, to have intoxicating liquors consumed on the premises. If this statement is true, it certainly marks a new development of teetotalism. I know many worthy abstainers who, when they entertain their friends, do not hesitate to offer alcoholic drinks—sometimes of a very decent quality—to those who have a taste for them. Lord and Lady Carlisle, I suppose, would only regale their guests upon cold water or temperance decoctions. Unless that is so, I do not see why they should refuse to allow alcohol to be introduced at a ball in a building owned by them.

The Duke of Devonshire has consented to take the chair at the Royal Literary Fund annual dinner, which is to be held on Tuesday, May 17, at the Hotel Métropole. The American Ambassador (Colonel John Hay) will respond for the toast of literature.

THE "CYCLE IN CATHAY."

A Reuter's telegram from Shanghai calls attention to the fact that "Chinese ladies who, twenty years ago, were locked up in harems, may now be seen bicycling through the town."

So now the secret has come out,
  The mystery 's explained;
The situation's key at last
  Has surely been obtained.
The revolution which, 'twas said,
  Would soon make China reel,
Is but the revolution of
  The circling cycle wheel!

With us the bubble has been pricked,
  Tyre-shares have "punctured" been,
And Cycle companies, 'tis felt,
  Their brightest days have seen;
In England, and in Europe, too,
  The craze has passed away.
Then, why not to revive it try
  In populous Cathay?

Don't talk of Russia's scheming, then,
  Cease, prithee, to insist
Upon the dread intentions of
  The Kaiser's "Mailèd Fist";
The strange proceedings in the East
  Don't herald China's doom,
They only serve to introduce A Chinese Cycling boom!

Any one wanting a cottage by the sea with "associations" would do well to buy the "Octagon Cottage," at Budleigh Salterton, which is now on sale, for it has been tenanted by many men of note. Lord Jeffrey, Dr. Pusey, Sir John Millais, and Lord Leighton, are amongst those who have at various periods occupied it.

A recent circular of the Science and Art Department has produced a feeling of something like consternation among all who are interested in the work of schools of science. The circular intimated that the Department contemplated withdrawing its special grants from every school of science "where 25 per cent. of the first-year students leave at the end of the year, or more than that percentage of the second-year students at the end of the second year." There is, of course, no difference of opinion whatever as to the desirability of retaining as large a percentage as possible of the pupils for a two or three years' course, and nobody would object to reasonable regulations upon the subject. But what is desirable is often not practicable, and managers and teachers of all the schools of science carried on by School Boards, as well as of many other similar schools, unanimously affirm that the enforcement of the proposed regulation would be fatal to the existence of such institutions. It is admitted on all hands that the schools are doing a most valuable work, and to destroy them because they are unable as yet to keep as many as 75 per cent. of the students for a second or third year, would be an insane and disastrous proceeding. Owing to the outcry that has been raised, the Department has now issued a second circular, intended to remove the apprehensions occasioned by the first. To the minds of those acquainted with the peculiar ways of South Kensington, however, the second circular is scarcely less unsatisfactory than the first, which will have to be entirely withdrawn before confidence in the intentions of the Department towards the schools can be restored.

A little handbill has been sent to me, which has been circulated at Witney and the neighbourhood, with reference to "Dr." Sturman and his Society of Science, Literature, and Art, of London. The handbill reproduces a recent paragraph from TRUTH dealing with this Society, and refers to the previous exposure of Sturman's methods in this journal. It would seem that one or two people in that neighbourhood have paid money to Sturman for "Fellowships," under the impression that they were getting some sort of value for their money; and a neighbour who was wiser than they, has, therefore, issued this public notification. I wish I could prevail upon the Provincial Press to join in the good work of warning the public against this impudent piece of imposture.

The University of Durham will sustain a serious loss by the departure of the Rev. J. R. Shortt, Bursar of Hatfield Hall, who has been presented by the Dean and Chapter to the valuable rectory of Southwick, near Sunderland, which is worth about £750 a year, with residence. Mr. Shortt has well earned his preferment, for he has worked hard for the University, and has rendered important services in many ways, particularly as secretary of examinations, the duties of which post have been admirably organised by him.

Archdeacon Anson, who died last week at the Deanery, Winchester, while on a visit to his brother-in-law, Dean Stephens, did a great work in Lancashire during the forty years that he was Vicar of Birch-in-Rusholme. Many churches were built in the Birch district by the Archdeacon and his brother. He succeeded the late Bishop of Chichester as Archdeacon of Manchester, on the nomination of Mr. Gladstone, and filled that office most efficiently for twenty years. The Archdeacon not only worked hard at his parochial and diocesan duties, but he was actively interested in many of the Manchester charities, which he most generously supported. He was a son-in-law of Dean Hook, under whom he worked at Leeds for three years.

The important vicarage of St. Mary's, Beverley, has fallen to the gift of the Archbishop of York, in consequence of the preferment of the Rev. J. C. W. Burnaby to his family living of Asfordby, near Melton Mowbray. The vicarage of St. Mary's has been held successively by the Bishop of Peterborough, Canon Pelham, the Bishop of Southampton, and Canon Quirk, Rector of Bath, all of whom were nominees of Archbishop Thomson.

The Rev. Edgar Sheppard has withdrawn his acceptance of the Canonry at Gloucester to which he was recently nominated by the Lord Chancellor, and he will therefore retain his office of Sub-Dean of the Chapel Royal. I suspect the real reason for this change is to be found in the fact that Mr. Sheppard would not have been so well off at Gloucester as he is in London, and, by accepting the stall, he would practically have shelved himself. It is, under the circumstances, highly ridiculous for the papers to print nonsense about Mr. Sheppard changing his mind "in deference to the entreaties of his many friends," who wish him to remain in London. Nobody who was en connaissance de cause could in the least degree understand why Mr. Sheppard accepted the Gloucester Canonry, unless he was to continue to hold his present preferment with it.

There are often some very funny items of news in the local pages of the parish magazines, which are now published every month in all parts of the country. The last number of the magazine of a certain suburban parish contains a "summary of the month's work," signed by the Vicar, which proves, at least, that if the congregation of this incumbent do not entertain a high opinion of him it certainly will not be his own fault. At one function, this ecclesiastic reports that "the Vicar gave an earnest address," while on another occasion "the Vicar's address was a model for many a Sunday congregation," and at the watch-night service "the Vicar preached with all his ordinary force and clearness." There is an infantile ingenuousness worthy only of Parson Adams in the complacency with which "the Vicar" indites these glowing puffs of his own performances.

We are all company promoters now. A Welsh paper relates that the Bishop of Swansea, holding forth in a Sunday-school, referred to an undertaking styled the Welsh Church Press, remarking that 2,000 shares in the concern out of 6,000 had been taken up, and that he hoped some of his audience would subscribe, and that the company would be floated in the course of a fortnight. From what I know of the Episcopal Bench, I don't think I should myself accept any Bishop as an adviser on the subject of investments.

Here is another example of the parson as promoter—this time of a bazaar, which is also to be an unrivalled advertising medium. The writer is the Rev. A. T. Kinnings, of Huddersfield, and the document is addressed to likely firms in the neighbourhood :—

> Dear Sir,—In connection with my church—Trinity, Fartown, Huddersfield — we are holding in March one of the largest bazaars held in this town. From its character, and the popularity of the last, it will be well and largely patronised. The young men with whom I am associated are making a very special effort, and a chief element of their effort is a medium of advertisements for reliable business houses. Unless I was assured of an honest effort in return for goods given I would not enter into this arrangement. We propose to distribute by hand, in parcels, by an advertisement stall, all papers and cards forwarded to us. I ask your firm, therefore, if you will favour us with a parcel of goods, and in return your house shall be well advertised, &c., &c.

If the same amount of impudence is shown in pushing the advertisements as is shown in stocking the bazaar, there can be little doubt that this promise will be filled to the letter. What a pretty way it is of advancing the cause of religion!

A Wesleyan correspondent is anxious to know something more than has yet been made public as to the means by which the financial success of the Wesley House scheme has been assured. The scheme was to free from debt the house in the City-road where John Wesley used to reside and to establish and maintain there a museum of Wesley relics and other objects of interest to Methodists. There are many men of means in the Connexion, and if the scheme had aroused any general enthusiasm, there would have been no difficulty in obtaining the money required. It failed to do anything of the kind, and languished till some weeks ago when it was suddenly announced with a flourish of trumpets that a certain unnamed trust fund of £5,000, hitherto applied to other Wesleyan objects, was to be devoted to the purpose of this scheme. But a mysterious reticence was displayed respecting the name of the trust, and it is as to this and as to the intentions of the testator that my correspondent expresses what appears to be a pardonable curiosity. The present trustees presumably consider that they have power to hand over the money. It certainly seems desirable, however, that the name and particulars of the trust should be disclosed, so that the Wesleyan public may judge whether such an application of the fund will be in harmony with the views and wishes of the testator. At present many doubt it.

Some interesting particulars are given in the Chester Chronicle of the method in which the business of collecting money for the Baptist Mission Lecture Hall, Bridge-street, Chester, is carried on. As my readers are aware, this concern is run by one W. S. Jones, who calls himself a "pastor," and whose financial transactions and affairs were severely criticised some time ago in the Bankruptcy Court, which has not yet deemed it desirable to grant him his discharge. Hundreds of circulars appealing for subscriptions to the work of the mission are sent out every week to people in all parts of the country. These circulars do not bear the name of W. S. Jones, the pastor, which has probably become too well known, but the names of E. H. Jones, who is his wife (though there is nothing to indicate that fact) and of Mr. T. Bellis, who is described as the treasurer. Mr. Bellis, a young and inexperienced working man, has explained with perfect frankness his share in the affair. He is the treasurer, but it is Mrs. Jones who receives subscriptions, enters them in a book, and gives receipts. All Bellis has to do is to take once or twice a week the money she hands over to him, to pay with it the expenses of the mission, and to prepare the balance-sheet. Here is an extract from an interview with him in the local paper:—

> Now what guarantee have you, Bellis, that you receive all the money sent to Mrs. Jones? Are the postal orders and cheques made payable to her? Yes. You simply take the money that is handed over to you without question?—That is so. . . . . I (the interviewer) asked him if he did not think it a very dangerous game to play. He said he could not deny that it was a bit risky and thought he would give it up.

In view of this I would repeat the warning I have more than once given in reference to the begging letters from this mission. Jones has just stated that the accounts are in the hands of an auditor, but an auditor's certificate is practically worthless so long as the collection of the money is carried on under the conditions described above.

When the administration of the Commissariat Transport Department in Madras and Bombay was transferred to the Government of India in 1889 a special Army circular was issued containing the following clause:—

> No change will be made in the conditions under which officers and others now in the Commissariat Transport Department are serving; their promotion will continue to run on their respective Presidential lists, and they will continue to serve within their own Presidency, except in cases of emergency, when it may be desirable to employ them temporarily beyond it.

This order has just been unceremoniously set aside for the benefit of Lieutenant-Colonel G. L. Eliot, late Assistant Commissary-General, First Class, on the Bengal list, who has been promoted to the rank of Commissary-General in the Madras command. Some time back, owing to Lieutenant-Colonel Cooke, Commissary-General, going on sick leave, Lieutenant-Colonel Eliot was appointed officiating Commissary-General, he happening to hold at that time the appointment of Administrative Commissariat Officer in Burma, which, although under Madras, is open to officers of the other commands. Lieutenant-Colonel Cooke having subsequently retired, Lieutenant-Colonel Eliot is permanently confirmed in the rank which he was given temporarily. There can be no doubt that this appointment is simply the latest manifestation of the jobbing proclivities of Simla. The injustice that has been done to the other Commissariat officers on the Madras list might yet be put right by transferring to the Bengal list Lieutenant-Colonel Kelly, at present senior Commissary-General, First Class, on the Madras list, who is already officiating as Administrative Commissariat officer in Burma, and by filling up the vacancy thus created from the Madras list. But whether Simla will have the decency to mitigate the job in this way remains to be seen.

It seems to be a regular thing to reject cadets for the Army who are "defective in green." The mention of such a case in last week's Truth has brought to hand particulars of two others. If the short-sightedness of these youths had been of the kind associated with the immortal name of Verdant Green, one can understand that there are regiments in the British Army for whom they would have been constitutionally unsuited—the 4th Hussars, for example. It is also easy to see that an officer who was "defective in green" would fall a ready victim to the wiles of the bill-discounter. But why on earth a difficulty in distinguishing between certain shades of colour should interfere with a man's efficiency as an officer, passes my comprehension. It looks more like a test for girls entering a needlework school.

In another recent case a cadet was rejected on account of the loss of two front teeth, knocked out at football. As everybody knows, there was a time when the loss of the front teeth was a real disqualification for military service, but the reason for that disappeared with the arms and ammunition of our great-grandfathers. It has been urged that sound teeth are essential to the health of every soldier, but that, again, applies chiefly to the molars. A man who has lost two front teeth accidentally is under no difficulty in masticating his food. The defect is purely one of appearance, and can be easily remedied. We shall hear next that premature baldness is a disqualification for the Queen's commission.

Another recent case in which an Army candidate has been rejected on medical grounds illustrates the working of favouritism and personal influence at the War Office. The candidate in question passed the educational examination for admission to Woolwich in July last, but was rejected on the ground of a bodily ailment. He underwent an operation, passed again at the November examination (the War Office having declined to admit him to a second medical examination unless he again passed), and was a second time rejected for the same ailment, which had now developed again. He was again operated upon by an eminent surgeon, who certified that a very simple treatment, which could be completed in a fortnight, would prevent a recurrence of the trouble, and that he had no permanent ailment which disqualified him for the Army. Armed with this, the boy's father, Mr. E. F. Studd, applied to the War Office to allow the time for the remedy specified to be applied, and that the boy should be then re-examined by another medical board. This request was peremptorily refused, with an intimation that the decision already given was final.

Looking at this case alone, the attitude of the War Office is sufficiently unreasonable and inconsiderate. The boy having passed his educational examination twice in six months—the second time under great disadvantage—is evidently of the right stuff intellectually; and if there is any valid ground for supposing that the ailment can be easily and permanently cured, there is every reason for giving him a chance of trying the proposed treatment. But the ugly part of the affair is that in two other instances of recent occurrence, the War Office has assented to the very course which was here refused. Why this difference in the official attitude? Apparently because in those cases the friends of the candidates were able to bring to bear private interest, which Mr. Studd had not at his command. It may thus be seen that the occult influences which shape so many careers in the Service are at work even before a boy has gone up to Woolwich or Sandhurst.

It is a singular fact that the graphic account of Lieutenant Henderson's fight with Samory's forces should only have appeared in the London Press last Friday, seeing that the affair took place nine or ten months previously, and that the news of it in outline reached England a few weeks after the event. I confess I should uncommonly like to know when and by whom the narrative was compiled, and how it came to be communicated to the Press. The writer, whoever he may have been, exalts Lieutenant Henderson's valour very much at the expense of his discretion, for his surrendering himself to Samory seems to have been an unnecessary and useless act, the only effect of which was to embarass the Government. Unless I am mistaken, Lieutenant Henderson flatly disobeyed orders in going beyond Wa at all, and the whole of the operations which have been so trumpeted were a fruitless failure. The author of the Press narrative also seems to be strangely oblivious of the merits of other officers connected with the expedition—notably Captains Cramer and Haslewood of the Hausas.

A complaint reached me from Scarborough the other day respecting the arbitrary way in which non-commissioned officers on the Militia staff are sometimes refused permission to transfer to the Volunteers. A case has just occurred at that particular place, in which the Colonel refused to sanction the transfer of an N.C.O. of sixteen years' service, with every necessary qualification in the shape of character and certificates. There does not seem to be any local reason why the transfer of the man from the Permanent Staff should be objected to; and it would appear that the reason is rather to be found in some general objection which the C.O. has to part with his N.C.O.s, for I hear that in the last two years other cases of the same kind have occurred, and men have actually taken their discharge altogether because they were refused transfers to the Volunteer staff. The matter is also of importance from the point of view of the Volunteers, who would have a difficulty in getting the men they want if every Militia C.O. were to veto the transfer of his N.C.O.s in the same way.

Talking of the Militia, is it really necessary to charge a militiaman for the marking of his kit? In the Line a recruit gets his kit marked free. A Militiaman, on the other hand, seems to have the privilege of paying twice over, once on the completion of his recruit's drill, and a second time when he comes up for the annual training; the charge amounting to about eightpence altogether. The price seems very excessive, and it ought to be reduced to about one-quarter the present amount, and charged to the public.

The Army tailors seem to be a very unhappy class. Only the other day I gave expression to a growl from India. On the top of it comes another respecting the position of the master tailors in the Royal Artillery. The point of it is this: that, whereas in the cavalry and infantry qualified tailors are made sergeants as soon as they get an appointment, and thus have a chance of earning a pension in that rank, the men of the Royal Artillery who have been through their course at Pimlico, go to the batteries with the rank of acting bombardier, and take their turn for promotion to corporal, but are never made sergeants, although possessing all the necessary qualifications. Their only chance of getting to higher rank is by obtaining the appointment of sergeant-master-tailor at a depot, and as there is one depot for eighty-eight batteries, this chance is somewhat remote. The difficulty seems to be that, as the qualified tailors are on the strength of the battery as duty N.C.O.s, but cannot perform duty in barracks without neglecting their work in the shop, their promotion to the rank of sergeant would be inconvenient. This could be got over by making a certain number of these men supernumerary to the duty establishment of N.C.O.s, as are the collar-makers.

Another promotion grievance of very old standing, and repeatedly referred to in Truth, exists among the armourers, who are now, I understand, a section of the Army Ordnance Corps. A first-class armourer writing to me on the subject tells me that when he joined the Corps he was told that, after beginning as sergeant, he would become first-class armourer in five years, and that in another five or six years, at the utmost, he would be promoted to staff-armourer. He has now done seven or eight years as first-class armourer, but without seeing any prospect of further promotion before him, and there seem to be many others in the same case. The grievance has just been rendered acute by the fact that a batch of warrant officers, on completion of five years' service, have been allowed to extend their time, thus deferring for a long while any further prospect of promotion to the men below. Another grievance in this branch of the Service is the irregularity of the tour of foreign service. While one man is sent out to India, and remains there for eight years, another goes to Malta or Hong Kong, and comes home at the end of five. There ought to be a general rule on this point applicable to all.

I do not know whether it is intended to do anything for the non-commissioned ranks simultaneously with the betterment of "Tommy Atkins;" but if it is, attention might well be directed to an anomaly in connection with the pensions of quartermaster-sergeants. A quartermaster-sergeant becomes entitled to a pension of 2s. 9d. a day on completion of one year's service in that rank, provided he has completed twelve years from his promotion of sergeant; but no number of years' service as quartermaster-sergeant will enable him to increase this pension. I know a case in which a man has served over eight years as quartermaster-sergeant, but, as regards pension, he is in no better position than another who attained the same rank seven years later than himself. No doubt there are many cases of the same kind. There ought, I think, to be a provision for an extra threepence per diem after, say, five years' service as quartermaster-sergeant.

The promised increase of the Army will involve, presumably, some corresponding increase both in the Medical and in the Chaplains' departments, and it will be interesting to learn where the requisite officers are to come from. The difficulty is likely to be felt seriously in the Medical Department, already deplorably undermanned, unless the reforms Lord Lansdowne has promised bring up a handsome supply of new medical recruits. In both the Medical and the Chaplains' departments there are many men who have retired owing to temporary ill-health or other similar causes, and who would now be only too glad to return to active service, if red tape did not stand in the way. It would be worth the while of the Secretary of State to consider whether some of the men required might not be obtained from this source.

If Lord Lansdowne has not yet arrived at any decision in regard to the titles of Army medical officers, he would do well to note the way they arrange this matter in America. In the United States Army, which possesses, I believe, a highly distinguished and efficient medical service, the surgeons hold an ordinary military title, supplemented by the designation of their own department, thus: "Colonel Dash, Surgeon, United States Army." If the proposal to create a Medical Corps is carried out, the American system could be adopted by giving our doctors a similar military title, followed by "Royal Medical Corps," or whatever name may be adopted for the Department. What legitimate objection there can be to this, so long as the Army Pay Corps, and other non-combatant Departments, possess ordinary military rank, I fail altogether to see; and I think that combatant officers will show a very bad spirit if they object to the Medical Staff being placed on the same footing as the other Departmental Corps.

May I now suggest to Army medical officers and their friends, and also to their enemies, that an armistice should be declared, pending the definite announcement of Lord Lansdowne's intentions with regard to the Department? During the last fortnight I have been literally overwhelmed with correspondence on both sides of this question, and, as it is quite impossible for me to deal with more than a fraction of it, and the discussion can hardly lead to any practical result at the present juncture, I think we had better, for the present, at any rate, let the subject drop.

The Warrant Officers and Staff-Sergeants, R.A., at Valetta, have a mess, the members of which are seven in number. Six out of the seven are married men, and live some distance off, and not a few of them regularly frequent a second R.A. sergeants' mess situate at St. Elmo. Nevertheless, the takings at the first mess average upwards of £30 per month. There is only one possible conclusion from this, namely, that the mess is a regular drinking-shop for others than the nominal members; and I am told, that in point of fact, it is largely frequented by civilians. There are one or two minor irregularities in the management of this mess—e.g., the liquor is ordered direct from the brewer instead of through the canteen—and it is worth the consideration of the local military authorities whether its existence should not be cut short.

Reference was made in TRUTH the other day to an alleged grievance of Mrs. Atkins in regard to Tommy's washing at Malta. The point was that the normal week's wash is liable to be increased by suits of khaki and other extras without any corresponding addition to the payment. The ground, however, is rather cut from under this complaint by a subsequent letter from Malta, which states that Mrs. Atkins does no washing on that station, but habitually farms it out to native washerwomen, and pockets a handsome middlewoman's profit. From figures given me in regard to one company, it appears that as much as £5 profit per month can be made in this way, £6 or £7 being paid by the company for washing which Mrs. A. gets done for 25s. or 30s. I am sorry to have to add that there are serious complaints as to the way in which the work is done, and one Tommy tells me that his shirts come home in a simply disgraceful condition. The remedy would seem to be to eliminate the middlewoman, and allow a little more to the party who does the work.

The drift of the remarks in TRUTH, on February 3, respecting soldier grooms seems to have been somewhat misunderstood. It was certainly not my intention to pronounce any general opinion as to the suitability of ex-soldiers from mounted corps for employment as grooms in private service. But I have heard on many occasions that such men do not turn out as good servants as might be expected, and the reason for this seems worth while inquiring into. If the reason is to be looked for anywhere, it is undoubtedly in the considerations mentioned in TRUTH a fortnight ago, and the object which I had in view was to draw the attention of the military authorities to this point at a time when they are professing great anxiety to give "Tommy" technical instruction, and otherwise fit him for employment on leaving the Service. So far as knowledge of horses and stable work goes, an old Cavalryman, or Artillery or Army Service Corps driver ought to be fully qualified for engagement as a groom, and if he is not, the fault must lie with the system under which he has been working.

There was a correspondence in the Field some few years ago respecting the merits and demerits of "Tommy" as a servant in private stables; and the general balance of opinion was, I am sorry to say, somewhat unfavourable. It is better to face than to blink this fact. On the other hand, I am glad to be able to say that several competent witnesses give their testimony in "Tommy's" favour. I have a long letter from a retired officer, who, on the strength of extensive experience in India, entirely traverses the statements made by the correspondent whom I quoted on February 3 respecting the deficient knowledge of horses which cavalry soldiers possess. This gentleman states that he prefers soldiers for grooms, first, because they obey orders, secondly, because they work systematically, thirdly, because they are generally clean and smart. "My advice," he says, "to any man wanting a groom is to select an old soldier." A civilian medical practitioner writes to me in the same sense. He says that he has little time for personal supervision of his stables, but his animals, harness, and stables are always in the best of order, his bills are less than those of most of his friends, and he has never had occasion to employ a "vet." for anything except tail docking. I am very glad indeed to be able to give "Tommy" this testimonial, and I trust that the experience of others may be equally satisfactory.

Under the Canadian Poor Law, I understand, when a pensioner gets into the workhouse, he is left in possession of half his pension. A case in point is to be found at present in the poor house at Halifax, Nova Scotia, where a Crimean veteran from the old 49th Regiment is at present in the enjoyment of a pension of sixpence per diem, half of which the Poor Law authorities appropriate towards his keep. This is a degree better than the rule in force in England, but it is an utterly anomalous state of things that a pension should be dealt with in this way at all. The pension is given to the man for his own use, and it is then compulsorily appropriated for the benefit of the ratepayers. The proper way to get over this difficulty would be to empower guardians to supplement the pension by outdoor relief to an amount sufficient to keep the pensioner out of the workhouse.

There are a great many millionaires among us, and their number is increasing almost daily. For some reason—whether it is a case of cause and effect I cannot say—the number of paupers also increases. Millionaires are also often in great difficulty as to how to dispose of their surplus wealth. Let me suggest that a great opportunity offers itself to them in my plan for building almshouses or hospitals for Army pensioners. Such institutions would do a great deal of good, and the millionaire who built them would immortalise himself as a generous friend of our invincible Army and a noble upholder of the Empire.

I came across the other day another case which shows how shabbily some of the pensioners in employment as messengers in the Government Offices are treated under the existing rules. The case is that of an ex-sergeant in a Line regiment, who for some years carried on successfully a small business in a country town, but was ultimately ruined by a calamity which overtook the place. He was an industrious and well-behaved man, with an excellent Service record and good testimonials. When he came to grief, he had to look out for what work he could find, and eventually got one of these berths in the Office of Woods and Forests. There he is condemned permanently to work at wages rising from 21s. to 24s. per week, without the slightest prospect of promotion, however well he may behave, while scores of retired lackeys from the service of Ministers and M.P.s are infinitely better off. It was only, I believe, in 1893 that the Civil Service rules relating to messengers, &c., were last overhauled and resettled; but there seems a strong case for revising them once more. Surely a man who has spent the best part of his life in the Army or the Navy ought to be treated on as good terms as the man who has served in the butler's pantry or the servants' hall.

It is a point worthy of note in connection with the complaints of these temporary messengers that they are actually paid less than the labourers in the same offices, the latter getting 7d. an hour for fifty hours per week (£1 9s. 2d.) against the messengers' 21s. While the Government are improving the soldier's terms of employment, and making provision for finding work for him after discharge, they could not do better than improve the position of the old Army men who fill these berths in the Civil Service.

I find I did not do full justice to the case of the Lieutenant, R.N., who, after having been four months previously reprimanded and dismissed his ship, after trial by court-martial, for a brutal assault on a petty officer, has just been gazetted to H.M.S. Phœbe. The officer in question, Lieutenant Allenby, has not only got another ship, but has been actually appointed senior executive officer of that ship—a much-coveted berth, for which several officers applied. So far, therefore, from the sentence of the court-martial (where, by the way, he pleaded guilty) having the effect of a black mark against Lieutenant Allenby, it seems to be treated by the Admiralty as entitling him to special favour. It is not surprising to hear that on the Mediterranean Station, where the facts are only too well known, the appointment is regarded with profound disgust by all ranks.

It has already been remarked on this case that many a seaman has been flogged, imprisoned, and dismissed the Service for less serious offences than that of which Lieutenant Allenby was guilty. For an example in proof of this one need not look far. In Saturday's Times was reported the case of a boy belonging to H.M.S. Impregnable, who struck the Commander when he was awarding him a punishment. His punishment is twenty-four cuts with the birch inflicted in the presence of the ship's company, followed by three months imprisonment with hard labour, followed again by dismissal from the Service. That is the sentence on a youngster who, in a fit of temper, commits what can hardly have been more than a technical assault on a superior officer. But for a superior officer, who comes on board in the small hours of the morning, and in an explicable outburst of violence commits a murderous assault on a subordinate, first kicking him about the head and face, and then thrashing him with a stick until stopped by another officer, the punishment is four months' holiday followed by a special mark of Admiralty favour. Am I wrong in maintaining that in the maintenance of discipline in the Navy, the most elementary principles of justice are absolutely unknown?

I recently called attention to the scandalously insanitary state of the training ship Britannia at Dartmouth. There has been an extensive outbreak of measles on board this vessel, and a large number of cadets are ill. By the way, a correspondent of one of the Service papers asserts that at the last examination for entry to the Britannia only 104 candidates were examined for sixty-one vacancies! He states, moreover, that the examination was made very much easier than usual in order to prevent the failure of eighteen competitors. "The minimum in arithmetic, algebra, and geometry had to be changed, as also in the aggregate of Part I., or otherwise eighteen of the sixty-one would have been thrown out, having failed in one or more of the elementary subjects." This writer also states "that one Service and one Colonial candidate were so specially favoured by the examiners that they were actually allowed to pass without having complied with the printed regulations." These are very serious charges, and the matter ought to be thoroughly investigated. Perhaps some Service member will interrogate Mr. Goschen on the subject.

With reference to a paragraph in last week's Truth about the Royal Sovereign, I am informed that Captain Grenfell was not in command of the vessel at the time of the "mutinous demonstrations" which occurred while she was at Portsmouth last year. The ship was at the time manned by a navigating crew, and her present commander and crew were only turned over to her when she arrived out at Malta. I am very glad to know this, because it disposes of any suspicion that the aforesaid mutinous demonstrations may have been due to the quarter-deck vocabulary of the then Commanding Officer.

The following extraordinary story is sent to me from Chatham:—A man belonging to H.M.S. Pembroke, while on foreign service leave, wrote to the master-at-arms, forwarding an application for an extension of leave. The extension was not granted, and the man returned in due course, when he was made a prisoner and brought before the Commander on a charge of attempting to bribe the master-at-arms. He was not allowed to say a word in his own defence, and was sentenced to be reduced to the second class for leave, and second class for conduct. It was the first crime against him in his record. The explanation of the attempted bribery is this: When writing to the master-at-arms the man was at the same time writing to a shipmate, enclosing him a postal order for 6s. 6d. By a mistake he put the postal order into the letter to the master-at-arms, and on this the charge was based. Whether this defence is genuine or not, it is not for me to say. But at least it is one the truth of which can easily be tested, and which ought to have been tested thoroughly before the man was convicted and punished. If it is really true that he was sentenced to reduction without being allowed to offer any explanation, the case is a flagrant example of the loose and arbitrary way in which "justice" is administered in the Navy.

There is a great deal of grumbling among men employed at the Naval Ordnance Depot, Chatham, over the way in which promotion is carried out, and vacancies on the establishment filled up. From information received I could give a dozen instances in support of these complaints. They are individually small matters, but in the aggregate it is easy to understand that they create a large amount of dissatisfaction. The chief grievance seems to be the jobbing of outsiders into vacancies, which ought to be filled up from men who have been serving for some time on the establishment. It would be well if the officer in command were to look into this matter.

Two men of the Poona Punitive Police recently died, and an application was made through the station staff officer to the Officer Commanding Royal Artillery for the use of a gun carriage for the funeral. The O.C.R.A. replied: "Is the man a warrant officer? If not, why a gun carriage?" As no satisfactory answer could be given to this conundrum, the District Superintendent of Police at Poona was instructed to obtain the use of a hearse, which was done. When, however, the bills came to be submitted to the officers commanding the regiments to which the two men belonged, they declined to pay for the hearse, and the question then arose who was to pay the undertaker who had supplied the vehicle. The difficulty ended in the District Officer persuading the undertaker to strike the item out of his bill, which I am bound to say I should not have done had I been in the undertaker's place. The funeral in question was a military one, being attended by a firing party and a band from the Royal Irish Rifles. On the other hand, a gun carriage has been recently supplied at Poona, on the occasion of the burial of Mr. Rand, a civilian, and also at that of a General's daughter who died lately on the station. Under these circumstances the O.C.R.A. may well be asked why he took upon himself to object to lend a gun carriage on this occasion.

It is a difficult matter to criticise the treatment of prisoners in gaol, the witnesses as to what goes on there being what is called "tainted." I think, however, from a statement lately sent to Truth, that the authorities responsible for the Poona military prison might with advantage inquire into the way the soldiers there are treated, more especially when they are suffering from sickness. I am told that extra-cold shower-baths have been ordered in winter as a form of punishment, and that men suffering from ague have not been exempted from this discipline. It is also stated that it is impossible to obtain permission to make complaint to the chief warder, which would account for many irregularities going on without being brought to light.

Whenever the Channel Squadron is assembled at Portland inexplicable delay in the delivery of the mails is always a source of complaint. Elsewhere the postal service to warships in harbour is satisfactory enough; but at Portland it is a common occurrence for the letters and papers which ought to be delivered in the morning to arrive in the evening, and for those which ought to be received in the evening to be delayed till the next morning. Judging from the communications I have received, it is high time the Postmaster-General woke up his local representatives.

A telegram addressed "107, High-street, Manchester," was the other day returned to the sender on the ground that there is "no such number in High-street, City." There is such a number, however, in High-street, Oxford-road, a residential district of Manchester, and at that number lived the gentleman to whom the telegram was addressed. That the Post Office well know this, is proved by the fact that a few days after the telegram, a letter addressed to the same gentleman at "High-street, Manchester," without any number at all, was duly delivered at High-street, Oxford-road. If the Post Office can deliver the letter, where they have to supply the number from their own knowledge, why cannot they deliver the telegram, where the correct number is given, and the Post Office is merely left to decide which of two High-streets is intended?

Every one, of course, knows the answer to this question. If the fuller address, "High-street, Oxford-road," had been given, another penny must have been paid for the telegram. The Post Office, therefore, feign ignorance of the fact that there are two High-streets, in order to extort the additional penny, or to punish the sender for neglecting to pay it. Considering what serious consequences may result from the non-delivery of a telegram, it is a monstrous state of things that a public Department should resort to mischievous tricks of this kind for the sake of a copper or two. The addresses of telegrams ought to be free. The sender could then give all particulars necessary for the identification of the addressee, and the Post Office could transmit just as much as they considered necessary for their purpose. If the public revenue of this poverty-stricken country cannot afford to sacrifice the few pounds a year that this concession would cost, the number of words transmissible for sixpence in the body of the telegram might be reduced. I would rather be limited to six or eight words, and be at liberty to write the full address without charge, than be nominally allowed twelve words, including the address, with the knowledge that if I cut the address too short my message will miscarry, while if I make it too long I am making the Post Office a present of the charge for every superfluous word.

A good example of the dealings of the G.P.O. with its staff comes from Swansea, though whether it is peculiar to that town I cannot say. In 1893 a number of men entered the service as temporary sorting clerks, having been given to understand that a revision of the staff was shortly to be expected, and that several appointments would be made. After making themselves proficient in their duties, the men were all given employment on what are termed "allowances," and are still working as "temporary clerks." The Tweedmouth Commission, if I remember rightly, recommended the abolition of temporary allowances, but no attempt has yet been made to place these men on a permanent footing. On the contrary, they were recently asked to sign a document in the following terms:—

(1) I agree to attend at whatever official hours I may be directed;
(2) To conduct myself with propriety, and conform to the rules and regulations of the Post Office;
(3) I agree to assist in the work of the office without remuneration; and
(4) I acknowledge that I have no claim upon the Department for a permanent situation by reason of my temporary employment.

In other words, these men, after five years' regular employment in the office, are required to sign a document placing themselves for ever on the footing of temporary hands, renouncing all right to pay, and all claims to promotion or treatment as permanent servants. The document which I have quoted has been hectographed in the Swansea office. Whether it originated there or in some higher sphere does not appear; but it is a matter on which the heads of the Department ought to be challenged in Parliament. A more cold-blooded and oppressive display of official tyranny has rarely come to light.

A curious complaint reaches me from Maxwelltown, Kirkcudbright. It is to the effect that the local post-office has absolutely disappeared. There is no doubt that a post-office existed there once, but what has become of it nobody knows. As Maxwelltown contains some 4,000 inhabitants, and is, in fact, the most populous town in the county, the mysterious disappearance of the post-office is certainly a matter of some importance.

It may be worth while to mention that there is a simple way of providing against the smashing of valuable parcels in the Post Office in the manner complained of the other day by a firm at Hawick. The Postmaster-General accepts liability for parcels to an amount not exceeding 40s., provided that a certificate of posting (which is issued free of charge) be obtained at the time when the parcel is despatched. The 40s. liability can be extended by registering the parcel like a letter. In view of these provisions, I really do not think that people have much cause for complaint when they send valuable articles by letter post, and get them lost or damaged.

Those who are interested in the County Council Election cannot do better than provide themselves with the Municipal Year Book, the new edition of which has just been issued by Edward Lloyd, Limited. An immense amount of information relating to the municipal affairs both of London and provincial towns will be found in this handy little volume, and many of the facts are extremely interesting. I note, for instance, that Manchester made £40,000 last year from its gas works, and £10,000 more from its electric lighting service, as well as £12,000 from its markets. Glasgow, Leeds, and other towns show equally satisfactory results. Why London ratepayers should be denied the benefit of similar municipal enterprises it would puzzle anybody but a Moderate candidate to explain.

Now that Lord Salisbury and his friends are so intent on the glorification of the London Vestries, the question of the paving of the London streets, for which these bodies are responsible, is of special interest. Attention was called in TRUTH some time back to certain curious facts in connection with the laying of asphalte pavements. There are at present three companies in the field, and by an extraordinary coincidence each one of them, year by year, obtains the contract for paving in the same parishes or districts. If they had a private arrangement by which each was only to work in one particular district of London, the partition could not be arranged more neatly. In Westminster, for instance, I note that the Limmer Asphalte Company do all the work year after year, and at the present time out of 87,794 square yards they have laid about 82,000. Every year the process is solemnly gone through of inviting tenders for the work, yet, strange to say, other companies which tender successfully elsewhere never seem to succeed in Westminster. Very possibly the Vestries and Boards of Works are in no way responsible for this state of things. They may be perfectly helpless in the hands of the companies. But that only shows the advantage of having a central authority instead of a number of small local authorities to deal with a matter of this kind.

It is said that the Local Government Board is unable to keep pace with its work. No wonder. Just imagine Mr. Henry Chaplin, Mr. T. W. Russell, Sir Hugh Owen, and the other members of this august body worrying their minds for months over such a subject as the ingredients of the children's puddings at Holbeach Workhouse. At first they wanted to know how many currants were put in each pudding. After much expenditure of red tape this important question has been satisfactorily settled. Now the Board is complaining that there is—so it considers—an excess of suet in the puddings; also that no milk is used in making them. The workhouse master affirms that the children like the puddings as they are prepared at present, but will not eat them when they are made, according to the official recipe, with 1½ oz. of suet and 2 oz. of skimmed milk to each pound. This explanation may satisfy people who believe in the old-fashioned adage that the proof of the pudding is in the eating; but it is hardly likely that it will be accepted at Whitehall. The wiseacres there are evidently bent upon emulating the pedant who

> By geometric scale,
> Could take the size of pots of ale,
> Resolve, by sines and tangents straight,
> If bread and butter wanted weight.

The Local Government Board for Ireland has been asked to hold an inquiry into the financial affairs of the Bangor Town Commissioners, which are said to be in an inextricable muddle. If there is such a muddle, the fact can hardly be wondered at after the edifying exhibition of their methods of conducting the business of the town which the Commissioners gave at last week's meeting. A series of squabbles culminated in what a local reporter calls "a wild and indescribable scene." All the Commissioners rose from their seats, one put his clenched fist in another's face, and threats of personal violence, met with invitations to "just do it," were general. Then a couple of spectators joined in the war of words—no actual blows were struck—and finally the Chairman, who had "turned quite pale," succeeded in inducing the Commissioners "to go into committee." This meant that everybody except the members had to leave the room, which was decidedly a pity; for, judging from their behaviour in public meeting, the proceedings of these Bangor Commissioners in private must be highly entertaining.

There was another heated discussion at the meeting of the Lincoln Guardians last week respecting the boarding-out case, which some time ago led to an interesting passage-at-arms between the Chairman and Truth. It seems that the ladies of the District Boarding-out Committee, after personal visits to the home in question, declined to approve of it, and recommended that the two children living there should be removed. In an ordinary case such a recommendation would be adopted almost as a matter of course; but the woman with whom these children are placed has some exceedingly zealous friends among the Guardians, and, as the result of their efforts and eloquence, the proposal of the committee was rejected. It would almost appear that in some quarters more is thought of the interests of the foster-mother than of the welfare of the children; and the action of the Guardians in over-riding this recommendation certainly makes a farce of the appointment of a visiting committee as part of the boarding-out system.

The Conway Rural District Council still displays the most callous indifference in regard to the serious epidemic of scarlet fever which has occurred in the parish of Llysfaen. It has been proved that this epidemic, like previous epidemics, was due to the absence of a pure supply of water, the inhabitants having to depend upon rain water collected from the roofs of the houses and stored in old casks. Nothing whatever has been done to remedy this state of things, and the attitude of the Council in the presence of the scandal may be judged from an incident that occurred at their last meeting. The Sanitary Inspector reported that he had had an analysis made of a sample of water from one of the house casks, and that it was condemned as unfit for use, whereupon the unfortunate officer was actually censured for daring to take such a step without the authority of the Council! These Bumbles would apparently have preferred to let the family poison themselves by drinking the water.

A somewhat extraordinary case is reported in the Hampshire Chronicle. Two inmates of the lunatic ward of the Cambridge Military Hospital made their escape. They were both recaptured. One of them, Lee, had recently enlisted in the Carabineers. It seems that he had previously enlisted twice, and on each occasion had been discharged as insane. Brought before a magistrate, he was convicted of having on the last occasion of his enlistment made a false attestation, and he was sentenced to a month's hard labour. But if he had been put in an asylum as a lunatic, how, on his escape, could he be treated as a sane man? Either he ought not to have been put in the asylum, or he ought not to have been sent to prison.

Here is a curious story, sent to me apropos of what has been said in Truth about the tenant's liability for landlord's income tax. A firm in the City paid in the usual course, on their landlord's account, tax to the amount of £25 in two successive years, but omitted by an oversight to deduct it from their rent until the Michaelmas quarter in the second year. The landlord refused to allow the deduction then, contending that the law provides that the tax must be deducted from the rent for the quarter following the payment, and that if the tenant omits to deduct it, then he loses his right to do so. By way of excuse for insisting on his rights, the landlord pleaded that he had himself been guilty of a similar omission in regard to his own rent to a superior landlord, and that on the right to deduct the tax later than the next quarter being denied, he had taken counsel's opinion, and had been advised that he had no remedy. If this be really the state of the law, the law requires immediate amendment. But, partial as our laws are to landlords, I can hardly believe that things are as bad as this. Will some legal reader of Truth volunteer an opinion on the point?

On the question of Divorce Court costs, a correspondent, who has omitted to disclose his identity, but who writes from the Temple and presumably speaks by the card, calls my attention to the following observations of Sir Francis Jeune in a case of Richardson v. Richardson :—

> Whether a wife should obtain an order against a pauper husband for security, with a stay on failure to provide such security, is a matter as to which, I understand, no clear rule of practice exists, nor, in my opinion, should be laid down. Such cases must be rare, and each should, I think, be dealt with on its own merits, especial regard being had to the nature of the defence relied on by the wife.

It might be worth the while of the solicitor who wrote to me on the subject last week to look again into this point. My Inner Temple correspondent, not only gives his opinion that in such a case as was mentioned no order for security would be made against the husband suing in formâ pauperis, but he states that within his experience, a husband so suing—a workman with 15s. per week—has obtained a divorce at no other cost than that of a few shillings for bringing the witnesses to town. The petitioner was represented by counsel, of course gratis, instructed by a friendly solicitor's clerk, who drew up a brief consisting of a short epitome of the case on a couple of sheets of paper.

I am asked by a country clergyman to pillory this instance of legal extortion : His daughter, while a minor, had a legacy of £50 left to her—her sole worldly wealth. The legacy has somehow got into Chancery, and having come of age, the legatee is desirous of getting possession of it. She finds that she can only obtain an order for the purpose through a solicitor, and that the cost will not be less than £2 2s.—a pretty heavy tax on a sum of £50. I confess I should like to know how the young lady discovered this, for I presume that she has the same right as other parties to approach the majesty of the law in person. If that is not so, the case is certainly a hard one ; but I am not prepared to say that £2 2s. would be an excessive fee for the work which a solicitor would have to do in such a case.

A somewhat astounding decision has been given at Eddisbury Petty Sessions in a prosecution by the R.S.P.C.A. against two farmers named Williamson. The charge arose out of the drastic means the defendants adopted to cure a horse of the vice of jibbing. It seemed that the animal was harnessed to a cart and attached by a chain fastened round its neck to another horse and cart ; and in this position it was flogged and dragged along a field till it fell down. One of the defendants then thrashed the jibber till it got up, and after being pulled another hundred yards the wretched creature put an end to the struggle by again dropping down and dying on the spot. In dismissing the summonses, the magistrates expressed the opinion, not only that no cruelty was intended, but that none was inflicted. This view of the defendant's "intentions" may possibly have been right ; but how, in the face of the evidence, the magistrates could also hold that no cruelty was inflicted is utterly incomprehensible. After this decision, it would appear, indeed, almost useless for the R.S.P.C.A. to take any charge of cruelty whatever before the Eddisbury Bench.

My Legal Pillory this week shows once more the fantastic manner in which punishment is weighed out when the scales of justice are in the incompetent hands of the Great Unpaid. For callous brutality to a sick wife, the Warrington Shallows impose a paltry penalty of 10s. ; for snaring a rabbit the Bearsted Bench inflict a fine and costs amounting to £2 1s. 11d. Pecuniary penalties are also deemed sufficient for serious assaults at Wellington, Dunfermline, Eckington, and elsewhere ; but sentences of hard labour are passed for the most trumpery theft, and also for the crime of sleeping out or begging a penny. The results of the cases of cruelty to animals are also noteworthy. At Chelmsford the Bench "doubted whether they would not commit the defendant to prison," but they ended by allowing him a week's grace for the payment of a small penalty ; and at Manchester two out of three Justices held that anything more than a fine of 21s. would be "unduly severe" punishment for a most barbarous and horrible act of cruelty to an over-loaded horse. The quality of mercy is nearly always strained for the benefit of the animal torturer :—

Oldbury Police-court. Before Messrs. T. Lavender and E. Danks. John Baker charged with assaulting Samuel Rushton. Defendant struck complainant in the mouth and knocked him down. Fined 17s. 6d. including costs.

Warrington Police-court. Before the Mayor (Alderman Wright), Dr. Gornall, Messrs. Hepherd, and Smethurst. John Caldwell, convicted of an aggravated assault on his wife. Three days after her confinement defendant went into the bedroom drunk, used abusive language, and taking hold of her face crushed her nose with all his force. Next day he forced her to get up and do the housework while he went to bed. Fined 10s. and costs.

Eckington Petty Sessions. Before Messrs. J. F. Swallow, H. A. Fowler, R. Eyre, and Major L. B. Bowden. John Monaghan, convicted of assaulting Harry Morris. Defendant struck complainant with such force as to fracture his jaw, and knock two teeth out. Fined £2 10s. ; in default one month.

Dunfermline Burgh Court. Wm. Gilmour, convicted of assaulting his wife. He seized hold of the poor woman, threw her on the floor, and twisted her hand so violently that a finger was dislocated and the flesh badly torn. Fined 20s.

Wellington (Salop) Police-court. Before Messrs. R. Hobson and J. W. Clift. Edward Upton, convicted of assaulting his sister-in-law, the charge being reduced from one of unlawful wounding. He struck her on the head with a heavy poker, inflicting a wound on each side of the head, and also battered her about the body, rendering her unconscious. A doctor said the injuries were severe, though not dangerous. Fined £2 and costs.

Oldbury Police-court. Before the same magistrates. Frank Oakes, charged with vagrancy, by sleeping out in a shed and having no visible means of subsistence. One month.

Bearsted Police-court. Edwin Stedman, charged with trespassing in search of conies. He was seen to take a rabbit from some wires. Fined £2 1s. 11d. including costs.

Weston-super-Mare Police-court. Henry and Ellen Fowler, charged with sleeping out in the temporary sanitary hospital. They said they took shelter there as the night was bitterly cold and they had nowhere else to go. Seven days each.

North Shields Police-court. George King charged with stealing a jacket. Three months.

Liscard Police-court. John Riley, charged with begging. He asked for a penny at what proved to be a policeman's house. One month.

Godstone Petty Sessions. Before Major-General Sibley, Messrs. F. H. Birley, F. A. White, A. S. Daniell, and G. F. Rooke. James James, charged with stealing twelve cabbages from a field. Ten days.

Tunbridge Wells Borough Police-court. Before Messrs. F. W. Elers, R. Pelton, G. Langridge, and Alderman Pink. Henry Greener, charged with sleeping out. Three weeks.

Birmingham Police-court. Before Messrs. Gilliver, Sambridge, Brame, Leech, Warden, and Phillips. W. Ballam, charged with stealing a bundle of braces from a shop door. Two months.

Subscriptions greatly needed by The Royal Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.—6,929 convictions this year ; 7,320 last year. Address complaints of cruelty, contributions, letters, &c., to Secretary, 105, Jermyn-st., London.

Manchester City Police-court. Before Mr. T. C. Horsfall (Chairman), Mr. Arrandale, and Mr. Hughes. Thomas Gollan, Frederick Bollard, and Wm. Bollard, charged with cruelty to a horse. The horse was unable to move a heavily-laden furniture van; and after beating it, the defendants deliberately lighted a fire of shavings under the animal's hind quarters. The Chairman would have liked to send them to prison without the option of a fine, or at least to have imposed a penalty of 40s. and costs. His colleagues thought that would be "unduly severe," and defendants were fined 21s. each and costs.

Chelmsford County Petty Sessions. Before Mr. T. Kemble and other magistrates. James Bones, charged with cruelty to a mare. He beat the animal most unmercifully with a heavy crowbar, causing some weals nine inches long. The Bench considered it a shameful case. Fined £1 and 6s. costs; allowed a week to pay.

Burton County Police-court. Before Messrs. M. Richardson and S. Higgott. Joseph Page, Arthur Clover, Joseph Salt, and Wm. Bagnall, charged under the Poaching Prevention Act with being found in possession of rabbits and nets. Fined £3 8s. each; in default one month.

Bristol Police-court. Before Messrs. W. W. Jose and W. J. Davis. John Morgan, charged with stealing a duck. One month.

Glasgow Sheriff Criminal-court. Before Sheriff Fyfe. John Jardine, convicted of stealing a turkey from a shed at the docks. Six months.

Carnarvon Police-court. Before Dr. R. Parry and other magistrates. Samuel Loyal, a professional acrobat, charged with cruelty to an apprentice name Ricks, aged twelve years. Defendant struck the lad on the head and in the mouth, severely thrashed him on the legs and back with a whip, and lifted him up by the ears till they were cut and swollen. Fined 10s. and £4 10s. costs.

In the case of H. E. Collins, the manager, and F. R. Howell and T. Cory, two of the directors of the National Bank of Wales, who were sentenced at the Old Bailey last week, justice has been exceedingly slow, if sure. It is nearly four years since the failure of the bank and the discovery of the fraud by which the three prisoners pocketed £30,000. But though the fraud was of the grossest possible character, the trustee in the bankruptcy, acting, he has explained, under the advice of counsel, took no criminal proceedings against the swindlers, and it seems probable that nothing whatever would have been done had it not been for the exceedingly severe remarks which Judge Owen, of the Cardiff County Court, made when the facts came before him last July. The result of the Judge's action is that Collins has now been sentenced to four years' penal servitude, and Howell to fifteen, and Cory to eight months' hard labour. This is satisfactory, for the accused well-deserved the punishment which has been inflicted upon them. It is, however, anything but satisfactory to know that the prosecution was delayed so long, and that it would apparently never have been instituted at all if the case had not chanced to come, quite incidentally, under the notice of the County Court Judge. One would like to hear now the name of the learned counsel who advised the trustee not to take any action.

One or two correspondents have drawn my attention to the result of a case at Oxford Assizes in which a man named Bayzand was indicted for the manslaughter of his wife. There was plenty of evidence that the woman had been most cruelly neglected, but there was no proof that this neglect, shocking though it was, caused, or even substantially accelerated, death, and in these circumstances the jury found the prisoner not guilty of the crime of manslaughter, and he was discharged. One correspondent deems it a monstrous state of things that what the Judge stigmatised as "wilful, gross, and culpable neglect on the part of the prisoner" should thus go entirely unpunished; and with this I agree. But it would have been equally monstrous for the jury to convict the man of manslaughter on account of conduct which, however bad, was not shown to have occasioned or hastened the poor creature's death. A different charge ought to have been preferred against the prisoner, if that was possible; and, if it was not possible, the law needs amending to meet such a case.

The latest move of the notorious Richard Banner Oakley is to tout for subscriptions to what he calls "the Star Prosecution Fund." My evening contemporary has been saying nasty things about R. B. O.—I have said some myself—and he recognises that, "as a public duty," he ought to take criminal proceedings; but, sad to say, "he cannot afford the expense." Hence his appeal to the public to assist him in performing this public duty. In the circular he is sending out Oakley poses, of course, as an injured innocent. With characteristic impudence he asserts that he was "improperly convicted" upon a "technical charge"—this being his humorous euphemism for the gross fraud he perpetrated in connection with the Co-operative Credit Bank. He further argues that as he has served his sentence (I believe it was five years' penal servitude) he is entitled "to live a peaceable and honest life." Certainly. But now that he has again had the effrontery to invite investments from the public through the medium of his Underwriting Bureau, the Press has a right to point out the disastrous experiences which befell those who "co-operated" with Mr. Banner Oakley in past years. I scarcely think his Star Prosecution Fund will amount to much. But if people are misguided enough to subscribe at all, I hope they will subscribe sufficient to provide for the payment of the defendant's costs. If that is done, my contemporary can view the threatened proceedings with perfect equanimity.

There is a new recruit to the ravening army of West End usurers. His name—that is to say, the name he gives himself—is George J. Addison, his address is 3, Holles-street, Cavendish-square, and his ground bait for gudgeon in the shape of a specious circular is now being scattered with a lavish hand in all directions. "I beg to call your attention that (sic) I still continue to make immediate cash advances" he writes, for all the world as if he were an old-established blood-sucker. It will be seen from this sample that Addison's style is scarcely Addisonian. Curious to relate, in the opening sentence and throughout the circular he uses the same words and makes the same mistakes as the notorious Isaac Gordon. This may be, of course, a mere case of illiterate plagiarism; but, on the other hand, I shall not be in the least surprised to find that Addison is simply another alias of the many-aliased Gordon. And whether these twain are one or not, I pity anybody who falls into the new usury trap at 3, Holles-street.

In addition to the circulars just mentioned, George J. Addison is also sending out a special circular to secretaries of West-End clubs, in which he offers those who "introduce good loans" (he means easy dupes) "from 5 to 10 per cent. commission upon the profit made." It is perhaps only natural that Addison should be oblivious of the fact that this is about as odious and insulting an offer as could be made to an honourable man. Several of the club secretaries who have forwarded the circulars to me express themselves very strongly on the subject, and, really, if one of them chose to make Mr. Addison acquainted with his opinion through the medium of a horsewhip I do not think he would be much blamed.

It would not the least surprise me if the intelligent foreigner, making a study of this country, were to record the fact that the law in London is not the same as the law in Liverpool, and, startling as it may seem, he would be right. Only last week, in the latter city, two wretched women were brought up at the police-court for pretending to tell fortunes. One was sent to hard labour for two months, and the other bound over. So much for Liverpool. Now, in London, if I walk down the most fashionable streets, I come across the advertisements of the Society soothsayers, against whom, apparently, the police are powerless; for in these cases there is no secrecy—rather bold advertisement—since, in one instance, a uniformed servitor parades outside the door ready to marshal the "clients" into the presence of the "rogue and vagabond"—I mean the mouthpiece of the stars. Of course, if the police in London had the power to interfere, such a state of things would never be permitted to exist.

People continue to send me letters and postcards which they have received from Monsieur Emile Solomiac, of Bordeaux, whose little dodge for unloading cheap claret on the British public has recently been exposed in Truth. I regret to state, however, that although I have repeatedly asked purchasers of the "Grand Cru, La Générale, année, 1888," to favour me with their opinions on that brand and vintage, not a word have I heard from any one who has bought the wine. I confess this has aroused an awful suspicion in my mind. Can it be that none of the purchasers has survived the first dose of "Grand Cru, La Générale"?

I see that Messrs. Klene & Co., publishers, of 105, Great Russell-street, are once more touting for the materials for another of their monumental works. Last autumn they were promising enduring fame—cash price £25—to such persons as would furnish them with their biographies for inclusion amongst "Men of Merit and Women of Worth." How that venture has succeeded I am unable to state. I do not even know whether the worthy women and meritorious men have yet had an opportunity of blushing at the record of their virtues, as supplied by themselves. But I have seen a number of the circulars with which Messrs. Klene, who in the meantime have left their old address at 83, New Oxford-street, are making a fresh attempt to beguile the vain-glorious. "Our Contemporaries" is the title of the new venture, and the book "is designed to give a permanent record of the careers of prominent men and women, who are directly engaged or interesting themselves in works or occupations of usefulness and renown, embracing music, art, literature, science, the Army, Navy," &c. In this circular, however, Messrs. Klene have been discreetly reticent upon one point. They have not mentioned the price of inclusion in their roll of fame. Perhaps they found that many a worthy man was frightened at the £25 subscription to the first volume. Besides, there are so many cheaper methods of self-advertisement. Manning Press, for instance, would always provide the same thing for a guinea or two.

The Chief Officers of County and Borough Police Forces should be on their guard against the following move, just tried—I am glad to say unsuccessfully—upon the Chief Constable of Cambridgeshire. This gentleman was favoured a week or two back with a letter from a Mr. Lloyd Palmer, Secretary of "St. Margaret's Home for Invalid Children," Anerley-road, intimating that a lady was about to visit Cambridgeshire to solicit subscriptions to the Home, and asking the Chief Constable to "afford her protection." The Chief Constable thought he should like to know more of St. Margaret's Home for Invalid Children before obliging to the extent desired. He made inquiries, and the result was not of a nature to lead him to take the representative of St. Margaret's Home under special police protection. It is pretty clear that the application was only made for the purpose of exploiting the Chief Constable's reply, if it had been favourable, and representing that the work of the collectors was specially sanctioned and approved by the police. The mere fact of such an attempt being made should be sufficient to cast suspicion on those who made it.

The particular "charity" concerned in the above incident appears to be a concern of a type only too common. It was started some years ago by a professional nurse, avowedly as a business undertaking. Later on a "free ward" was opened, and contributions invited for its support. The proprietress married, and the present "secretary" of the concern is her husband. They have no committee, or other guarantee for the bona fides of the undertaking, nor do they issue any proper accounts. There is, therefore, not the slightest reason why persons collecting money (presumably on commission) for this concern should be treated on a different footing from ordinary beggars.

Here is another example of the modus operandi of the "Creditreform Association"—a concern of German origin, to which reference was made in Truth a few weeks back. The deponents are a firm in Liverpool:—

This afternoon we had a visit from a representative of this Association. The said representative desired to see one of our principals, asserting it was on some private matter. Incautiously, as it proved afterwards, he was allowed to enter into our private office. He made a statement to the effect that his Company had previously had some inquiry about the standing of our firm, and that they, the Association, had recently received a further inquiry, in consideration of which it was his duty to come to us, the subjects of such inquiry, to obtain from us infornation as regards our financial standing. He seemed very much surprised when we informed him that we considered such a method of procedure might be detrimental to the interest of the inquiry. He produced a paper which he asked us to fill in. Unfortunately, this paper he subsequently placed in his pocket, but as far as we remember it asked a certain number of questions, most of which were of a leading and personal nature. Upon our refusing to continue the discussion with him, ... instead of taking his departure, he implied in a more or less direct fashion that if we did not answer the questions detailed in this printed report, our so not doing would be detrimental to us. As we, fortunately, are quite independent of the report, good or evil, of any association of this nature, we gave him to understand the door was open for him. The man's presence in itself was displeasing, and his method of endeavouring to secure his purpose was bullying. . . . .

The writer seems to have made a mistake in merely intimating that the door was open. The least he ought to have done under the circumstances, was to apply to the person of the intruder a sufficient amount of pressure to facilitate his egress. I trust that this will be done at the next office where he presents himself, and if the proprietor has first put on his heaviest boots, the result will be the more satisfactory.

By an oversight on the part of my advertisement manager there appeared in last week's TRUTH a "competition" advertisement, emanating from the Zuilia Perfumery Company, 13, Rosebery-avenue. The advertisement offered a prize of £50 to any purchaser of the company's goods who could solve a puzzle attached. I do not know much for or against the Zuilia Perfumery Company, and at the time when the advertisement appeared I knew nothing at all. But the advertisement belonged to a class which I am not as a rule prepared to take the responsibility of publishing. On my attention being called to the matter, I sent a representative to interview the Zuilia Company, but, although he has called twice, he has been unable to find any responsible person on the premises, and a correspondent writing on the subject states that he has had a similar experience. I can only hope, therefore, that no reader of TRUTH has paid his or her money to the company in the hope of securing the £50 prize; and in reply to one or two special inquiries as to whether I recommend people to enter for the competition, my answer is, Certainly not.

The London and Provincial Bank, Limited, seems to deserve a word of notice while the treatment of bank clerks is under consideration. In this bank the juniors start at £20 a year, which rises by £10 a year until £120 is reached, so that it takes a man eight or nine years to earn £2 a week, and after that his prospects of further increase become doubtful. In this bank, also, the rule prevails that no man must marry until his salary reaches £150 a year, and I can speak to at least one case in which it has taken a man twenty years to arrive at that desirable consummation. This is a bank which, according to its last balance-sheet, is making an annual profit of over £370,000 a year, and its last year's dividends have been at the rate of 17½ per cent., free of income-tax. Except for a grant of £4,000 to "Officers' Pension and Gratuity Fund," not a penny out of these enormous profits is devoted to improving the condition of the staff.

Now, I would suggest to the Directors of the London and Provincial Bank that they should, out of their next half-year's profits, devote a sufficient sum to increasing their salaries to such a point as will permit of their men being allowed to marry at thirty years of age. There is nothing in the relations between banking companies and their junior staffs which is more objectionable from every point of view than this anti-matrimonial regulation. In no other field of employment, so far as I am aware, is celibacy enforced, and the fact of the banks insisting upon it is a tacit confession that they are not paying their employees a living wage; for if that phrase means anything, it means a sufficient wage to enable a man when he is well past his youth to marry and maintain his family in decency and comfort.

I am, I suppose, an old-fashioned person, unduly conservative in my notions. But I cannot reconcile myself to the last stage in the advance of Woman—the sandwich-girl. Twice have I encountered a procession of these damsels, tramping the gutters in their pantomime costumes, bearing the praises of Thingumy's cocoa, or some other matchless compound on their backs and bosoms, exchanging chaff with the 'bus-drivers and street boys, and trying their best to look as if they liked the job. Of course I know that my prejudice will wear out in time—like the prejudice against railways, Wagner's music, or Home Rule. Of course I know that the time-honoured sandwich-man was an eyesore in our streets, and that the genius of the advertisement contractor is going to replace him with something up-to-date, piquant, and attractive. Of course I know that selfish masculine prejudices must not debar Woman from her sacred right to earn her independence by any form of honest toil within her reach. All round, I am quite aware, I have "no case." But, nevertheless, I can't help wishing that we could do something better with our girls than that.

Here is another opportunity for girls which does not sound over attractive :—

Young Lady Wanted, to Assist in Office. Must be quick at figures. Used to long hours. Strand district preferred. Wages, 7s.—Address, &c.

Seven shillings a week, and must be used to long hours! Such a state of things is worth the attention of moralists who are concerned about the temptations offered to girls in London. If a shilling for a long day—say 1d. an hour—is the market rate of wages for girls in the Strand district, who desire to earn "an honest living," is it wonderful that many prefer a living which is not "honest"?

I hear, somewhat late in the day, from a resident on the Great Western line, who has come across the recent remarks in TRUTH on foot-warmers, that the Great Western Company have lately made great progress in warming their trains by steam. In that case, they are far in advance of most of their contemporaries, and deserve all credit for it. But the fact of one train being warmed by steam does not excuse the absence of the common foot-warmer in a train which is not provided with the steam apparatus.

In spite of all that has been said on the subject, no abatement seems to take place in the cruelties perpetrated on poultry exported alive from Ireland to England. A gentleman at Brighton tells me that he saw the other day a railway truck loaded with crates of fowls on their way from Ireland to some place in Sussex. Such a journey cannot possibly be performed much under forty-eight hours, and must often take longer. But, however long it may be, the wretched birds get neither food nor drink from beginning to end of it, unless some tender-hearted railway official or passenger takes pity upon them. The trade is, I believe, a growing one, and steps ought to be taken to have it conducted with more humanity.

A brewer's drayman in Hampshire picked up the other day a pocket-book containing a £5 note, a silver pencil, and various papers, as well as a notification that, if lost and returned, the finder would be rewarded. The drayman forwarded it to its owner, a doctor near Petersfield, in a registered letter, and was rewarded by a brief note of thanks, accompanied by stamps for the postage of the parcel, and one halfpenny over. I don't say that he was entitled to more, though it is hardly a handsome remuneration for the work of packing up the parcel and taking it to the post; but I do say that the doctor has a curious idea of what constitutes a "reward." To save disappointment in future, it would be better for him to inscribe in his pocket-book that anybody finding and returning it will be—thanked.

One has heard such depressing accounts of the dangers of the journey to Klondike, and the hardships of life in that region, that it is decidedly refreshing to come across a rosier picture. This is supplied by a correspondent of mine who went to Dawson City last June, and who has lately returned to Winnipeg. He intends to go back to Dawson City in the coming spring, and without pretending that the journey is an easy one, or that life is all beer and skittles when you get there, he affirms that many of the stories on the subject in the newspapers and magazines are most exaggerated and misleading. Still I trust none of my readers will rashly assume from this gentleman's testimony that a trip to Klondike can be lightly undertaken. It may be that things are not so black as they have been painted; but on the other hand my correspondent may be something of a Mark Tapley.

Here is a curiosity in the shape of English as she is wrote by our negro fellow subjects. The document is a letter addressed to an English firm of ship-owners by a coloured gentleman at Sierra Leone:—

Messrs. ———

Sirs,—I hope you are all well. I only write these few lines to remind you of the favours I have be asking you. Will you be kind as to put me in any of your ships as Pursers s Clerk. If you have that extremely oblidging state of mind which will permit you to do that did of kindness I shall experience the deepest Love you have for your friend whose age is 20 years.—I remain Your Humble and Dutiful Servant ———

It would be amusing if it were not so serious to watch the impassiveness of the authorities in this country; whatever the need for legislation in any direction little short of a cataclysm will ensure its adoption. Notwithstanding repeated accidents—not infrequently accompanied by loss of life—through this modern craze for carrying firearms, no steps have been taken to make the practice illegal and punishable by heavy penalties. The consequences of this supineness are, that it is open to a half-witted individual to fire off a revolver in the crowded gallery of a theatre, or, as happened only last week in Camden Town, for a quarrel between two boys to end in one of them being shot through the arm and carried away to a hospital. The necessity for legislation on this subject has been emphasised from the Bench, apparently without result, and there appears every probability that (as enterprising traders are to be found who meet the increasing demand by supplying a pistol for eighteenpence) many more lives will have to be lost before the Government sees fit to pay any attention to such a trivial matter.

"SLEEPY HOLLOW" AT WESTMINSTER.

There's no stir in the air, there's no stir on the floor,
Each bench is more empty than ever before;
The Members stroll in and look listlessly round
At a House that is steeped in depression profound;
No sign of a laugh does the sitting beguile,
There is never a chance for the ghost of a smile;
There's a somnolent hush, a somniferous lull—
Oh! it's dismally,
Direfully,
Dolefully dull!

The writers of leaders take placid repose,
As the flabby debate drowses on to its close;
The "lobby-ists" yawn as they limply withdraw,
Soon weary of making their bricks without straw;
The descriptive reporters to ennui succumb;
The caricaturists look languidly glum;
For how can they subjects for merriment cull?
It's so mournfully,
Mopingly,
Mumpishly dull!

The Ministers nod on the Treasury Bench,
Too torpid to even an argument clench.
Returned to do nothing—the truth let us tell,
And admit that they do it remarkably well.
Supinely, inertly, they bring in their Bills,
With an air that the zest of their followers kills;
They are even too lazy to make a good mull—
Oh, it's dreadfully,
Drowsily,
Drearily dull!

Where, where is the jester? Where, where is the bore?
Where, where are the fighters that once "took the floor"?
Where, where are the cheers, and the shouts of "'Vide! 'Vide!"
And the yells and the groans that the Irish supplied?
Where, where are the partisan passions so deep?
Come, Echo, make answer!——But Echo's asleep.
Yes, all the proceedings are numbingly null—
It is dismally,
Direfully,
Dolefully dull!

The absolute freedom from all Parliamentary control in all foreign affairs, which is the outcome of the Premiership and the Secretaryship for Foreign Affairs being concentrated in the person of a Peer was exemplified last week by Lord Salisbury and Mr. Balfour making at the same moment two directly contrary statements with regard to the Chinese Loan, the one in the Lords and the other in the Commons. But Lord Salisbury's speech was remarkable for another reason. A considerable portion of it was obviously a reply to Mr. Chamberlain and to the fire-eaters in the Cabinet, who decline to allow that gentleman to have the monopoly of pernicious braggadocio.

The Parliamentary position is a curious one. According to the Liberal Unionists, they went over to Lord Salisbury in order to save the United Kingdom from what they were pleased to call dismemberment. At present a Radical can only look to the cautious sense and experience of Lord Salisbury in foreign affairs to save the country from being plunged into some mad war, in order to enable Mr. Chamberlain to substitute a policy of armaments and annexations for one of domestic reform.

The difference between the two men is this. Lord Salisbury honestly disbelieves in democratic reforms at home, but he is not prepared to involve us in a foreign war in order to avert them. Mr. Chamberlain does believe in such reforms; but, as to act on this belief would ruin him with his Tory allies, he is prepared to involve us in foreign war in order to divert public attention from them. Differing as I do entirely from Lord Salisbury upon domestic politics, I do not believe that he would go one inch beyond what he deems desirable for the public welfare, in order to retain office; whereas I believe that Mr. Chamberlain would take any course that might lead to his own aggrandisement, regardless of the consequences to the country. What I fear, however, is that the Premier may not have sufficient determination to be able to hold his own against Mr. Chamberlain. The latter gentleman is as dangerous in a Cabinet as would be a powder-monkey with a match-box in a powder-magazine, bitten with the illusion that he would personally benefit by an explosion. I would therefore urge on Lord Salisbury not to lose sight of the powder-monkey; indeed, he would do well to take from him the match-box and keep it under lock and key.

I agree with Mr. Dillon that Mr. Redmond's amendment to the Address in favour of Home Rule would have been far more practical had the word "independent" been left out, and "on the lines of Mr. Gladstone's two Bills" been substituted; for "independent," when applied to a Parliament, is open to several constructions. Mr. Dillon, speaking for the majority of the Irish Nationalists, stated that they understood it as meaning that the Irish Parliament ought to be independent of interference in the local matters assigned to it; and Mr. Balfour, as Leader of the House, accepted this meaning.

What surprised me in the debate that took place was the ignorance of the Conservative Members in regard to the past history of Home Rule. They appeared greatly elated when Mr. Dillon stated that the Irish desired separation—i.e., co-equal legislative rights with England, and that they had accepted Mr. Gladstone's scheme of Home Rule as a compromise to which they were prepared loyally to adhere. This had been explained by Mr. Parnell and other Irish Nationalists a hundred times during the Parnell debates.

I am as much to-day for Irish Home Rule as I ever was; but I am convinced that Ireland will never get it so long as a Home Rule Bill which has passed in the House of Commons has to be ratified by the House of Lords. To convert the absolute veto of the House of Lords into a suspensory veto is, therefore, as much a preliminary necessity as it is to take the drag off the wheel of a cart that has to be moved forward. And the same is the case with regard to all Democratic legislation.

A CONCERT OF-EUROPE-CURSED ISLAND.

(With apologies to Charles Dibdin.)

"Oh, Freedom!" one day a poor Cretan did say,
"I wish your assistance you'd lend us,
For woe and disaster
Come thicker and faster,
And threaten to speedily end us.
We have fleets on our seas, 'twas the Powers sent us these,
And their soldiers are camped on our dry land;
But though they have mustered,
And flustered and blustered,
They seem to be fooling our island—
Our injured and much-deceived island!
Our humbugged and victimised island!
The Turks were to go
Ages since, as you know,
But still they are lords of our island.

"The Powers in their might talk and wrangle and write,
And plan after plan are debating;
They are fuming and fussing,
And always discussing,
Whilst we grow aweary of waiting.
Crete, they say, shall be free, but they all disagree,
Each time that we think we descry land;
Their ev'ry endeavour,
Leaves things worse than ever,
In our poor, long-suffering island—
Our 'sold' and our stultified island!
Our dished and our much-diddled island!
Our cruelly treated,
Repeatedly cheated,
Our 'Concert-of-Europe'-cursed island!

"'The Concert!' Oh! shame, they should use such a name
For what seems expressly created
To discord induce,
And to make more profuse
The ills that it should have abated.
'The Concert!' What stuff! We have had quite enough
Of its sinister music in my land;
With Europe, once trusted,
We now are disgusted
Throughout my unfortunate island.
We are sick of the Powers in our island!
They are proving the bane of our island;
And if they'd clear out,
Why, without the least doubt,
There would then be some chance for our island!"

Port-Ensign Kokorris, of the Greek Navy, who has been under trial for sending to the Minister of Marine at Athens a telegram accusing one of the Greek commanders of treachery and disobedience to orders, has been acquitted. The bearing of this trial upon the explanation which I have given of the cause of the inactivity of the Greek fleet during the late war is manifest. The news, however, comes to hand so late that I am compelled to defer further remark upon it.

SCRUTATOR.

ANGLO-AFRICAN SLAVERY.

ZANZIBAR, with the Island of Pemba, is, to all intents and purposes, British territory. There is a Sultan residing at Zanzibar, but he is about as much a factor in the government of the country over which he is nominally the ruler as was the descendant of the Moguls at Delhi in India after we had replaced him by British rule. Pemba is an island where cloves are cultivated. The owners of the soil are Arabs, and the cultivation is carried on by slave labour. Of slaves there are about 150,000, almost all of whom are employed in field labour; but there are about 2,000 women who are held in slave concubinage by their Arab masters. The adjacent mainland belongs directly to us. There, too, the land is worked by slaves, of whom there are about 100,000.

A year ago a decree was published declaring that the status of slavery has ceased to exist in Pemba. Any slave there might go before a Court and claim his freedom. The decree has practically been a dead letter, because few of the slaves understand what it means, and as the masters decline to employ freed slaves, those who do understand what they have to do in order to obtain their liberty have the cheerful prospect before them of starving to death if they choose to obtain it. The total number of those who have taken advantage of the decree, which excludes slave concubines from its provisions, are at most fifty. In last week's debate Mr. Curzon admitted these facts, and justified them. The object of the decree, he contended, was to strike off the shackles of these unfortunate people, but at the same time not to ruin the industry of Pemba. The slaves had not sought to be emancipated by the action of the Courts because their masters had offered to substitute for the former condition of their service other conditions. Paid labour was thus replacing slave labour. This was a condition of things that ought to be encouraged, for otherwise the slaves would become disobedient and independent.

On the mainland Mr. Curzon admitted that nothing had been done to abolish slavery, and that before doing anything in this direction we must wait the result of the experiment in Pemba. At present the landowners are on the verge of ruin, because the missionaries hold out the temptation to slaves to run away from their masters and to settle on missionary land, and the construction of the railroad to Uganda has raised the price of labour.

What does all this really mean? Slavery, under the name of forced labour, is to continue both in Pemba and on the mainland. The status of slavery is not to be legally recognised, but matters are to be so arranged that if a black man does not work for a master, he will have to starve. The only difference, therefore, made by the decree is that, whereas formerly black men were made to work for food and lodging, they are now to be made to work for some little pittance in lieu of food.

The natives of Africa are black. Every endeavour to profit by annexations of African territory to the Empire is based upon the idea of making the black owners of the territory work for the white men who may take up their residence in it. Look, says Mr. Rhodes, in a recent interview, at these strong black men shooting, hunting, and amusing themselves, instead of working for the whites! and he denounces "Exeter Hall" as having ruined Rhodesia by its fads. In tropical countries a black man may easily secure for himself all his simple requirements by rudely and carelessly cultivating a very small area of ground. If this pleases him, why should he work for a white man? We call him lazy. But is he more lazy than a country gentleman at home? Is he doing more harm by declining to work in a mine than the company promoter who would make him work in one? I can understand the Socialist doctrine that every one should do his share of work. But I do not understand the doctrine that every black man should labour, whether he likes to or not, in order to put money into the pocket of a white man. We may lay it down broadly that very few black men work more than is absolutely necessary in order to provide themselves with food, and get themselves guns and spirits. In a native State, when a black man wants this gun and a bottle of spirits, he forces some other black man to produce something in exchange for them. I regret that such should be the case, but our idea of substituting for this forced labour of one black for another the forced labour of all blacks for us, hardly commends itself to me. I do not believe that we are likely to profit by laying hands on vast territories in the interior of Africa. A few merchants may make money by trading, but the cost and the responsibilities involved in these additions to the Empire outweigh this profit. Be this, however, as it may, one thing is certain, and is admitted by Mr. Rhodes. Wherever we annex territory peopled by Africans, these Africans must be forced to work for us, if the territory is to be rendered valuable. Free labour means that one man can only be forced to work for another if he so pleases. In making the conditions under which he is prepared to sell his labour, he is only a free agent when he may elect to work or not to work, and, if he does the former, when he has a voice in the conditions under which he accepts service. Slavery means that a man is forced to work for a master, although he may not be disposed to do so, and under the conditions that the master imposes. Wherever the British flag flies, this latter state of things should not be allowed to exist. Wherever there are Englishmen seeking to grow rich by black labour, there ought to be a Labour Bureau specially charged with the duty of seeing that such a state of things does not exist. We must accept the responsibilities involved in bringing under our rule subject races. The subject race is the actual owner of the soil. If the owner likes to cultivate it for himself, he should have an opportunity to do so. If he likes to accept a wage for working for another, he should be free to say what that wage is to be, and if at the end of any week he prefers to cease to work, then he should have a right to put an end to the bargain.

MR. ANDREW'S SIX-AND-EIGHTPENCE.

During the last week or two a Manchester jury have again been occupied for several days with the story of "The Wreck of a Cotton Mill," originally told in TRUTH of March 25 last year. The action was again an action for libel, but the plaintiffs this time were Mr. Eli Andrew, the Managing Director of Jonathan Andrew & Sons, Limited, Ashton-under-Lyne (the concern respecting the failure of which the public have heard so much), and his son, Mr. Harold Andrew. The circumstances of the action were peculiar, and reflect but little credit upon the plaintiffs. It will be remembered that in the first TRUTH article dealing with the failure of Jonathan Andrew & Sons an accidental mistake was made respecting the position of Mr. Frank Andrew, one of the principal shareholders, in relation to the failure. This accident, although at once apologised for, and although the apology was followed by an ample tender of pecuniary compensation, was made the subject of an action for libel, which was tried at Manchester last summer, and ended in a verdict for £500 damages. It was a significant fact in connection with that action that while the conduct of the Directors as a body was severely criticised in my article, the Directors themselves preferred to offer no reply of any kind; and it was left to another member of the Andrew family to take proceedings, on the ground that he had been wrongfully associated in the article with his brother and his brother's son. The action of Mr. Frank Andrew against TRUTH was, in fact, avowedly brought for the purpose of showing that that gentleman was in no way personally responsible for what his brother and nephew had done, and looked at in that light the action endorsed, rather than traversed, my criticism of the conduct of the Directors.

In the course of Mr. Frank Andrew's action against me, however, various documents were disclosed, as usually happens in such proceedings. Among them was the original communication from various victims of the failure at Ashton, which had first drawn my attention to the matter. The authors of this communication were men in humble circumstances, who had been practically ruined by the failure of Jonathan Andrew & Sons, and their case afforded a striking example of the mischief which my articles pointed out—the mischief of an insolvent joint-stock concern borrowing money right and left from its own employees and others, without giving them the slightest means of knowing the true position of those to whom their money was lent. As might be expected, these unfortunate men, in communicating with TRUTH on the subject, wrote very strongly. Substantially the version of the case which they gave was accurate, but in certain particulars they went beyond the facts. They imputed that Mr. Eli Andrew had drawn considerable sums out of the business, and they drew a comparison between the conduct of the Directors and that of the notorious Jabez Balfour. The document in which these expressions occurred was, as I have said, sent for the purpose of calling my attention to the case, and was not intended for publication in TRUTH. It was not published, nor were the statements of which Mr. Eli Andrew complained reproduced in any form in this paper. Before dealing with the case at all, I sent down and made my own inquiries on the spot, and I found that, whatever ground there might be for criticising the conduct of the Directors, there was no evidence that they had benefited pecuniarily by what had taken place—rather the reverse. Had the matter, therefore, ended with the publication of the TRUTH article, nothing further would have been heard of this communication to me from Ashton-under-Lyne. Mr. Eli Andrew and his son have never to this day challenged a single statement or remark that has been made in TRUTH. But the action of Mr. Frank Andrew incidentally brought to light the private correspondence that had passed between myself and various parties at Ashton, and thereby Mr. Eli Andrew was furnished with the means of setting the law in motion against those who had dared to call the attention of the Press to the affairs of his firm. One of these men was an employee of a boiler insurance company, and had lost £700 by the failure of Jonathan Andrew & Sons. A second was a working millwright, who had lost £600. It mattered not that these men had already been the heaviest sufferers by the failure of Jonathan Andrew & Sons. It mattered not that they had lost by that failure the savings of years, and the provision which they had made for their old age. It mattered not that they had on every possible ground the strongest claim to the sympathy of the proprietors and Directors of the concern. It mattered not that they were poor men, from whom no substantial damages could possibly be extracted, and who would be involved by expensive litigation in present ruin upon the top of the loss they had already incurred. Insensible to every consideration of this kind, Mr. Eli Andrew and his son, although they had never dared to utter a word of protest against the indictment of their company in TRUTH, as soon as they learnt what had passed, more or less confidentially, between the victims of the failure and myself, seized the opportunity of attempting to vindicate their own characters at the expense of these men.

What has been the result? After a hearing extending over four days, in the course of which Mr. Eli Andrew gave evidence at great length, and all the affairs of this company for a period of many years were minutely gone into, the jury have awarded the plaintiffs the sum of forty shillings as damages against three of the defendants. In other words, they consider that each of the Messrs. Andrew is entitled to 6s. 8d. as compensation from each of the defendants for the wrong that has been done him. Such a verdict carries with it the fullest possible condemnation, not only of the conduct of the plaintiffs in relation to the management of the company, but of the course they have taken in attempting to vindicate themselves at the cost of those whom the failure of their company has already involved in ruin. In order to appreciate the significance of the jury's finding, it must be remembered that the defendants had made allegations of the gravest kind, not only against the business capacity, but also against the integrity, of the plaintiffs. Although they pleaded justification, they undoubtedly failed at the trial to bring home to the plaintiffs any charge of malversation of money. So far therefore, if the plaintiffs were entitled to a verdict, they would seem to have been entitled to damages on a very heavy and substantial scale. In awarding only the contemptuous sum they did, the jury were clearly influenced by the feeling that, of the two parties, the defendants had the most to complain of, and that although they had, in their communication to Truth, gone beyond what the facts justified, their error was not one to be heavily visited upon them. It is clear that but for the unjustifiable allusion to Jabez Balfour, and the suggestion that the plaintiffs had lined their own nest at the expense of the creditors of the company, the jury would either have returned a verdict for the defendants, or have dismissed the plaintiffs with the proverbial farthing damages. Even as it is, it seems a matter for regret that they did not take the latter course. In view of the fact that damages to the amount of £2 had been awarded, the judge declined to interfere with the ordinary course of the law in regard to costs, and the whole expense of this litigation is, therefore, thrown upon the three working men, who already owe to the Messrs. Andrew the loss of nearly every penny they possessed. The result, therefore, of the case is as disastrous to the defendants as it is useless to the Messrs. Eli and Harold Andrew. It should also be mentioned that there was a fourth defendant in the case, Mr. Whitworth, a solicitor, who had prepared the statement which was forwarded by the other defendants to Truth Office. This gentleman pleaded that he had only acted under professional privilege, and that there had been no publication of the alleged libel so far as he was concerned. This question was left to the jury, who found in his favour. Mr. Whitworth, therefore, gets his verdict, and I suppose his costs also, against the Messrs. Andrew. These gentlemen have, therefore, but little to congratulate themselves upon in the result of their proceedings.

Turning to the question which underlies the whole of this litigation, the trial at Manchester only serves to bring out more clearly than ever the perfect accuracy of all the statements respecting Messrs. Andrew & Sons' dealings with their creditors which were made in Truth last March. The facts now established serve to fortify the case which I have put forward both in regard to the culpability of the Directors of Jonathan Andrew & Sons, and the urgent necessity for some change in the law regulating borrowing by joint-stock companies. The gist of this case lies in the fact that the Directors went on year after year receiving small loans on deposit from working men in their employ, and small tradespeople and others in the neighbourhood, at a time when they were carrying on business at a loss, and when the solvency of the concern was at best doubtful; and further, that when matters reached a critical position, they gave to their bankers a charge upon the whole assets of the concern, except the actual premises which were already mortgaged. Thus, after keeping their business afloat for years chiefly by loans, the greater part of which were obtained from people in humble circumstances, who would never have advanced a halfpenny had they known the true facts about the business, the Directors finally, behind the backs of these people, deprived them of the whole visible security for their advances. The company took over the business in 1882. For three years after that date dividends were paid; but it has already been shown, in the action of Mr. Frank Andrew against Truth, that that gentleman found fault with the accounts on which these dividends were based, and objected so strongly to the payment of a dividend that he resigned his directorship mainly upon this ground. It is, therefore, doubtful whether the company ever worked at a profit after the first few months of its existence. The borrowing by means of small deposits from workpeople and others began about 1889, at which time, according to Mr. Eli Andrew's own statement in the witness-box, there were liabilities to the amount of £39,000 beyond the share capital, although it is true he estimated that the assets far more than covered all liabilities. His account of the way in which the deposits began is worth reproducing as showing the course of business in these cases:—

> It was the custom in Ashton-under-Lyne and many other large towns for the workpeople in mills to pay so much a week into a club, and to divide it when "the wakes" came round. The people at their mill paid sixpence, or a shilling, or one shilling and sixpence, a week into the club, and the secretary of the Company, who acted for the club, paid the money weekly into the Company's exchequer, and at the end of the year it was divided.
> The Judge: The secretary of the club, instead of paying the money to a banker or holding it himself, paid it to the Company?
> Witness: Yes, and 5 per cent. interest was paid on it.
> Further examined, plaintiff said that other clubs in the town, finding that they were taking money in that way, came to them and offered money. They therefore decided to put up a printed notice at the entrance to the works to the effect that they were prepared to receive loans. They also advertised in the local papers for loans. They were at that time one of twenty-one companies that were advertising for loans. They offered 4½ per cent.

From this, turn to a passage in the cross-examination of Mr. Eli Andrew:—

> And is it a fact that from 1885 until this Company was finally wound up there was each year, with the exception of 1890, an increasing loss?—Yes.
> And is it not equally true that in each year, not excepting 1890, there was an increase of loans from the unfortunate workpeople of Ashton-under-Lyne?—Up to a certain point you are quite right.
> Is it not a fact that from 1885, when the total loans were £1,600, the amount increased till May, 1895, when the loans of these unfortunate people had steadily increased till they had reached £14,000 odd?—Yes.
> The balance-sheets and reports that have been referred to were balance-sheets and reports made to the seven shareholders, including the three dummies?—And the bank.
> And the bank. But the unfortunate loanholders, most of them working people earning weekly wages, did not see the balance-sheets and the reports?—No.
> And did you think it right, Mr. Andrew, when the losses on your business were steadily increasing, that these loans should go on from people who were ignorant of the actual state of affairs?—We thought the money lost was the money of the shareholders; we were confident that there was money to pay everybody else.
> Do you say it is a thing you would do over again if you had the chance?—No, not if I knew that the thing was to be shipwrecked in the way it was. I should never dream of doing it over again.

Among the victims of the reckless borrowing thus described there were, besides the defendants whose case has already been mentioned, a former manager of Jonathan Andrew & Company, who put in some £94, the wife of a carpenter who had put in £400, another former employee of the firm who had put in £50, and several other witnesses. So many witnesses of this kind, indeed, were forthcoming at the trial that the jury stopped the evidence under this head, declaring that they had heard enough. The contention, of course, on behalf of Mr. Andrew, was, as he stated in his own evidence, that at the time these loans were accepted, he believed, first, that the assets more than covered the liabilities, and, secondly, that although the business was working for the time at a loss, it only needed a turn of the tide in the cotton trade to bring prosperity to Andrew & Sons again. A good deal of expert evidence in support of this contention was given, but evidence at least as cogent was given on the other side. An auctioneer and valuer from Ashton, the valuer to the Assessment Committee of the local Union, put the gross valuation of the premises at £17,773, while the actual valuation in the books of the company was £42,870. This gentleman criticised the machinery most unfavourably, and remarked that "such mills could not hope to make a profit in the Ashton trade." An expert from Oldham said that "if the mills were offered to him free of charge he would not undertake to work them at a profit. . . . . As a going concern he considered that the mills of Jonathan Andrew & Sons, Limited, had no value." I mention this evidence to show that the opinions entertained by Mr. Eli Andrew, both as to the value of the assets and as to the prospects of a future improvement in the trade, were, to put it at the mildest, extremely sanguine. On the bona fides of this gentleman and his son I neither make now, nor ever have made, any imputation. Nothing graver is alleged against them than errors of judgment; but there is a point where errors of judgment become little short of criminal, and that point seems to be very nearly reached when the Managing Director and principal proprietor of a joint-stock concern so grossly miscalculates both the present value and the future prospects of the business as to involve a whole crowd of working men and small tradesmen in hopeless ruin.

The moral of this case is clear as the day. Some protection is required for working men, women, and others with little knowledge of business, against the consequences of such colossal mistakes as were made in this case. At the least, all those who are invited to lend their money to joint-stock companies ought to be furnished with the fullest and most explicit statement of the financial position of the business, and with some independent valuation of its assets. More than this, I hold that loans contracted under the circumstances which prevail in Lancashire should have the validity of debentures, and should rank before all subsequent charges. As I put it in a former reference to this case, it should be made, once and for all, impossible that men and women who, from faith in an old family name, or a sentimental belief in the solvency and integrity of their employers, have invested their all in a rickety joint-stock concern, should find in the hour of disaster that a bank, or some creditor better able than themselves to assert his rights, has scooped in every farthing of the available assets, while they themselves are repaid for their confidence in the firm by being left in beggary. Among the legislative measures promised for the present session is a bill for amending the Companies Acts in such a manner as to check frauds by promoters. The opportunity might well be taken of adding a clause or two which would save confiding creditors from such disastrous consequences as followed on the failure of Jonathan Andrew & Sons.

WALKER'S PARTNERSHIP TRICK.

It may save some few unsuspecting persons from parting with cash which they can ill afford to lose if I mention that Mr. F. E. Walker, of Swiss embroidery fame, is still going about seeking whom he may devour. The Swiss embroidery swindle was very fully described in TRUTH last summer, but there is evidently a sufficient number of people still in the dark about it to provide Walker with a modest livelihood. He is still at his old address, 4, Queen's Club-terrace, West Kensington; he has not attempted to disguise his identity by changing his name; and the game he is now carrying on differs from the old one merely in details. The old trick was begun by advertising for a partner. The partner, when found, was invited to open an office in the City, and stock it with Swiss embroidery, or similar goods, which Walker knew how to buy cheap and sell at a handsome profit. If the partner went through with the transaction, he presently found himself installed in the office with perhaps fifty or a hundred pounds' worth of Swiss embroidery on his hands, for which he had paid cash to a firm at St. Gallen; and that Walker had either gone to Madeira to cure a lung complaint, or had simply disappeared from Queen's Club-terrace without leaving either address or explanation behind him. Inquiry of the firm at St. Gallen then disclosed that Walker had received a commission from them on the sale of the embroidery, and that the firm were greatly shocked to hear of his shady dealings. They might be willing to take the embroidery back at a heavy discount on the price paid; failing that, the victim had to sell it for what it would fetch in the City, what it would fetch being invariably but a small fraction of what it had cost.

Such was the Swiss embroidery swindle. What precise variation of it Walker is now working I am not in a position to say. But I find that in the early part of January he was again advertising for a partner, and representing himself as a traveller for a large drapery dealer, desirous of finding a capitalist to start with him independently in the household drapery line. He writes to the prospective partner:—

> I want some one to take an inexpensive office and start this business and share profits, and until they reach £25 a month after paying all expenses I will be content with ¼ share. There is no risk. Everything would be entirely under your control, I being in much the same position as a traveller. £60 to £80 is sufficient to start and carry on the business, but additional capital can be made use of, &c.

The gentleman to whom this was addressed went on with the negotiation for some little time. Then he communicated with TRUTH. At my request he endeavoured to obtain from Walker the names of the wholesale firms with which the proposed partnership was to deal. Walker proved coy, but eventually in the course of a personal interview he mentioned the names of Hermann Dreyfus, St. Gallen (not the firm which figured in the Swiss embroidery swindle); a firm named Beecroft, of Halifax (recommended for blankets); and a Birmingham firm, who were offering an attractive line of watches at 8s. 3d. Walker also stated that he had himself been in the employ of Messrs. Thomas Wallis & Co., Lewis & Allenby, and William Whiteley. It would be interesting to know whether these firms have any knowledge of him, and particularly whether those first mentioned have lately been dealing through him on commission.

Beyond the point thus reached, the negotiation to which I have been referring did not go. The prospective partner wrote that, having seen the articles in TRUTH on the Swiss embroidery trick, and noticing the similarity of the name and address, he did not feel disposed to do business with F. Walker, of Queen's Club-terrace, and Walker replied with the following frank and engaging communication:—

4, Queen's Club-terrace, W.

——, Esq.

DEAR SIR,—Yours received. It is a case of "give a dog a bad name," &c. While quite understanding your disinclination to carry on any business with me in view of what you have read, I insist you could go in with a worse party, for, call me what you like, I am not a fool, and if I have sold indifferent embroidery, I can sell goods privately on easy terms.

You were in possession of TRUTH revelations when you wrote me, and I am sorry you did not refer to them when we met. You wanted to know where our goods should be bought. I did not tell you because I did not know myself. I was only interested in getting bargains, and when you said you could get credit, I agreed readily. If I wanted you to buy embroidery, I should have told you, because it is clear if I wanted you to buy stuff I was interested in, I must tell you the place to go.

The incident is now closed. I put a mad cat scheme before people, they tumble over each other to start. I put an ordinary, steady, every-day business proposal forward on lines above suspicion, and it does not go.

As to TRUTH, they got some copy for the silly season out of my insignificant tale-pitching. If I dealt in stocks and shares on the same plan instead of embroidery, I should have been left alone. I shall not change my name or address. I have left off spoof because it was not so profitable as steady business; and, as I am famous, I must abandon hopes of getting financed in a genuine venture, unless I change my name, and that I shan't do, because I am not ashamed of anything I have done, as long as City ways are at their present level.—Yours truly,

F. WALKER.

After this candid confession a third party need not affect any delicacy in speaking of Walker's character. "Call me what you like," he says, "I am not a fool." The proper thing to call him seems to me to be "an impudent swindler." Apparently, he is not altogether a fool, because he has managed, up to now, to keep out of gaol. But I would not advise him to boast of this too soon. He is quite in error on one point. "If he dealt in stocks and shares on the same plan," it is by no means so certain as he thinks that he would have been "left alone." There are now in her Majesty's prisons plenty of fraudulent bucket-shop keepers who could undeceive him on this point. Nor does it follow that because "City ways are at their present level" that there is nothing to be ashamed of, and no particular risk in a dry goods swindle at West Kensington. I can only hope that it will not be long before the truth of this is brought home to Mr. Walker.

ANOTHER URGENT REQUEST FOR 2s. 6d.

Nearly three years ago a few interesting particulars were published in TRUTH respecting "An Urgent Request for 2s. 6d.," circulated by a Mr. G. W. Linnecar, of "Mansion House Mission," Camberwell-road. As it appears that Mr. Linnecar is still urgently requesting 2s. 6d., and as half-crowns seem to have been rolling in ever since in response to his request, it may be useful to re-state the reasons which I then gave Mr. Linnecar's sympathisers for keeping their silver in their own pockets. The "Urgent Request" is based on an imposing account of the amount of food and other charitable relief given by Mr. Linnecar to the poor of the neighbourhood. Now, Mr. Linnecar is the pastor of a place of worship called "The Mansion House Chapel"—the only connection with the Mansion House of which the Mission can boast. The contributions of the charitable public are thrown into the working funds of this chapel, the chief charge upon which is the salary of the pastor. The amount of money disbursed from the same funds in charity is insignificant. It follows that, of the money subscribed in response to the appeals, only a small portion is devoted to the purpose for which it is asked. By an analysis of Mr. Linnecar's accounts, I was able to show in 1895 that out of every 2s. 6d. subscribed in response to his "urgent request," Mr. Linnecar himself got 1s. 0¾d., the chapel and the working expenses about the same, and the poor about 4¼d.

Mr. Linnecar's latest accounts show that what was true in 1895 is equally true now. If anything, matters are worse. For the year ending October last, Linnecar received about £417 in donations, &c. He expended on charity little more than one-seventh of this—£61 6s. 4d. But even out of this amount £25 odd was granted to other charities, so that the actual amount expended in charitable relief through the mission (free meals, and so on) was only £36. On this basis, out of each 2s. 6d. contributed during that year in answer to his "urgent request," Linnecar devoted less than 2½d. to the object for which the money was asked. Now let us see where the remaining 2s. 3½d. went to.

The Mansion House Chapel and Mission got through in 1896-7 £586. The lion's share of this went to Mr. Linnecar himself, who is down for £246. The general chapel expenses, including the rent and payments on account of a mortgage, came to £141. The principal other item is £61 14s. 6d. for "stationery, printing, and advertising." It is impossible to suppose that the ordinary chapel work involved this last expenditure, and the bulk of it must clearly have been incurred in connection with the mission—probably on the appeals which benefited the local poor to the amount of £36. On the other hand, the "collections at services" only brought in £155 7s. 6d. The rest of the income (which amounted to £601 11s. 9d.) is made up of the charitable donations and a few other trifling items. So that it comes to this. Mr. Linnecar is pastor of a chapel the up-keep of which costs about £150 a year, apart from the pastor's salary. The collections at services only yield £155. The chapel and the pastor cannot, therefore, possibly be kept going on the ordinary resources of the chapel. Mr. Linnecar, however, starts free teas and charitable relief, and appeals to the public generally for help. He gets a response to the tune of over £400 a year, out of which he expends about £60 on charity (less than £40 of it on relief in kind). He is thereby enabled to draw a salary of £246, and to wind up the year's accounts with a credit balance of £15. These facts will, I trust, furnish every intelligent reader with a sufficient reason for refusing Mr. Linnecar's "Urgent Request for 2s. 6d."

"THE DOVEC-OT."

Mr. George Edwardes has presented the English public with a delightful work. Intensely interesting, amusing, and human, "The Dove-Cot," which is an adaptation from the French play called "Jalouse," by Bisson and Leclercq, has just that touch of tenderness and pathos which adds so much charm to the light, delicate, and fragrant humour of the story. Miss Ellis Jeffreys, married to clever young Seymour Hicks, is insanely jealous of his every action. She rummages his pockets, "goes through" his private papers, and makes a daily tour of inspection round his sanctum sanctorum. The confidential maid, fully alive to the "jaundiced eye" of her pretty mistress, and desirous of getting a night off on her own account, sprinkles her master's best Sunday go-to-meeting coat with patchouli, and adorns his shoulder with two golden hairs plucked from her brilliant dyed tresses. Ellis falls a victim to the artful trick, and is convinced Seymour is faithless to her. She will have a divorce; she will go back to mamma and papa—anything, or anywhere, sooner than become reconciled to her poor innocent husband. So off they both go to the home of her childhood in Barlescombe, where the good old people have already got wind of the lovers' quarrel and decided upon a little plan of their own to effect a re-union. These dear, simple, loving souls, so admirably played by Mr. James Welch and Miss Carlotta Addison—this tender, devoted couple, who have never had a dispute in all their gentle lives, and are certainly entitled to the Dunmow Flitch, suddenly round on each other in order to give a false impression to the foolish youngsters. They hurl sugar-basins about, the contents of wardrobes are flung on to the stage through the open doors, and sundry valuable nick-nacks are pitched here and there with ruthless disregard by these transformed beings. At the height of the confusion in come the other distracted pair, who stand paralysed at the amazing scene before them. The subterfuge succeeds admirably, Ellis firmly believes her wretched mother is a deceived and ill-used woman, and they both retire to one side of the house, whilst the husband and father slink off to the opposite wing. The lights are low, all is still, silence reigns supreme, when a door on either side of the room is cautiously opened, and Miss Addison and Mr. Welch steal in on tip toe. "Good-night, sweetheart; this is the first time for thirty-two years that we've been separated," murmurs the loving wife. "It is, it is," whispers the dear old man; and with one last kiss the honest couple divide again and return to their refractory children. Of course, the naughty lady's maid confesses her guilt in the end and Ellis promises her Seymour never, never to suspect him any more. But how about the acting of this pretty and wholesome work? It has certainly not met with the appreciation it deserves. Take Miss Ellis Jeffreys and Mr. Seymour Hicks, for instance. What do we hear from the critics about them? Comparatively nothing. And yet they remind the student and lover of acting of the most delightful French comedians, I mean comedians of the good old days when we could see a far better style of the great art in Paris than here in London. When actresses like Sarah Bernhardt and Réjane come over here they are treated to columns of adulation. Then it is the play that is neglected for the artist. But the brilliantly clever acting which can now be seen at the Duke of York's Theatre is passed over with a line or half a sentence. Take, again, the performance of Miss Carlotta Addison as the dear, sweet old mother; here is the most finished and delicate piece of art that can possibly be imagined. It is just the style that was perfected by Lady Bancroft when she played the old lady in "The Vicarage." But what is said of this little gem of a study? What do we hear about it? Nothing at all. It is thrown away, unrecognised and neglected. For my own part, I strongly recommend every one to go and see "The Dove-Cot" who can appreciate a charming story daintily told, dialogue brilliantly humorous and witty, and acting of which any artistic country might well be proud.

NOTES FROM PARIS.

SNAP-SHOTS AT THE ZOLA TRIAL.

THE Zola trial has been so exciting that nobody thinks of Sardou's new drama. Yet it has for its subject the abduction of Louis XVII. from the Temple. The drama on which all eyes are now turned is the Assize Court of the Seine. The theatre in which the actors come and go is an oblong room with a high dado, and six or eight tall windows above it, facing as many on the other side. The public entrance is a noble portal at the head of a broad flight of stone steps. What is technically "the public" enter by this door. By "public" I mean the people who stand patiently in a queue for hours before the Court opens. They have standing room in a pen that is on a higher level than the rest of the room. Persons having tickets, witnesses, and advocates, enter by low, narrow doors, guarded by gendarmes, from corridors. There are rows of chairs for them; but tickets are never numbered, and, in their impatience to see and hear, people jump upon the chairs. The witnesses have padded benches. I should say the Assize Court might hold comfortably 250 ticket-holders, but not more. About 1,200 have managed daily to squeeze into it. As nothing exacerbates nerves and temper more than the air of an ill-ventilated, over-crowded room, battles are frequent. When about five spectators try to keep a footing on the same chair, how can they feel amiably towards each other? Opposite the pen, at the other end of the room, is the bench—a more imposing piece of carved oak furniture than that of an English law court. I should say on it, but must say behind it, sit three judges in crimson ermine trimmed robes and black velvet mortier caps with gold bands. The central judge is the President, or Chief Justice; the others the Councillors, or puisne Judges, who are the merest dummies. Behind the President, and hung high, is a "Christ on the Cross" by Bonnat. Symbolism is so much better in religious art than naturalism. This Christ was painted in the last decade of the Empire, when the Naturalist school was beginning to make a noise. Courbet then said: "Who ever saw a real allegory?" Zola was already "burning the Seine." Bonnat, a friend of the late M. Floquet—they were both from Bayonne—painted, to be dans le mouvement, this dreadful Christ, who has the coarse anatomy of a hodman and veins swollen into ropes. It is not "Ecce Homo!" but "Behold the poor wretch!" The imagination is pinned down, limited, and pestered with such mere "reality." It becomes an eyesore after one has been some time in Court. The French never excelled in religious pictorial art or sculpture. But they excelled in the Middle Ages in church architecture and coloured-glass windows.

The jury, as in England, sit in a box at right angles to the bench, and facing the dock. Zola is not there. He sits on a chair within the bar. Maître Labori sits beside him. The gérant of the Aurore — a plain, humble person, who lives at Belleville — is beside Clémenceau, whose brother, Maître Clémenceau, is between him and Labori. The Public Prosecutor is behind a desk, under the jury-box. He is in crimson, but wears no ermine. His cap is also a mortier, and looks like a baron's. Like St. Paul, Zola is of mean presence. He looks souffreteux, or ill at ease, and chronically out of sorts. There is no observation in his eye, but a staring, bewildered expression. That "document," on which he so much insists as a writer, is not taken from the outer world, but is the product of his nerves acting on his fancy. A conflict must go on within him between his Venetian and French instincts. Hence, perhaps, the air of discomfort. He strikes me as one who was too scantily fed in childhood. The features are common-place. It would be hard to describe his nose. But the forehead is remarkable for the quantity of horizontal wrinkles and a horseshoe. The face rather hides than expresses power. There is no soupçon of "side" or pose. He is very unaffected, speaks exactly as he feels, and has the voice of a very nervous man. Drumont charges him with having had a Jewish father. But the type is not Hebrew, though I have seen Jews with that curiously wrinkled forehead, and I know not what in the eyes that might be due to past forefathers working in dark counting-houses and living in obscure ghettos. His father came to France to obtain a concession for supplying Aix in Provence with water. This looks rather Jewish, but Christians, as well as Jews, can be company promoters. Where Zola shows strength is in the neck, shoulders, and chest. One understands, when one eyes his trunk, how indefatigable he has been in working at his mixen; what labour he has accomplished, pitchfork in hand, in piling up that heap! Unfortunately, the stables of Augeas in which he works are filthier than when he began. I am afraid that Naturalism has made the present state of France worse than the past.

Zola comes daily in an elegant carriage. It is his own. The one in which he rode on the opening day of the trial was his publisher's. He is escorted by cyclists belonging to the police. For safety he enters by the judges' door. It opens on to a courtyard strongly guarded. Directly his carriage enters, the porte-cochère is shut behind it. These precautions are necessary. He would otherwise risk being frightfully mauled, if not murdered. The Clémenceaus are always with him. They leave each day by a different door.

The Chief Justice is a good-humoured, elderly person. He is wonderfully fair, for a French judge, in dealing with a case in which political interests are involved. When Colonel Henry gave Lieutenant-Colonel Picquart the lie direct, this Judge said, with a twinkle in the eye, "These gentlemen cannot agree." He let them fight it out—verbally.

The military witnesses came in undress uniform. Most of them belonged to the General Staff. None of them gave me a high idea of its intellect—save Picquart, who might be a redoubtable man if he saw his way to a coup d'état. Three Generals were point-blank and straightforward. They were Boisdeffre, Pellieux, and Mercier. Boisdeffre is visibly of aristocratic race. He is not a gamecock like Lord Cardigan, but is showy, and might be the hero of a Balaclava charge. General Gonse, who was mixed up in what he spoke of as "Picquart's intrigues," seemed to feel he was in a mess, and anxious to slip out of it.

The military witnesses were dreadfully bothered by counsel. Certainly they were guilty of an illegality. But to minds like theirs this would be of no consequence, once they were persuaded that Dreyfus was a traitor. Colonel Picquart was wholly different from the other officers. He is forty-two, and the youngest Colonel in the French Army, is fair, has small Teutonic eyes of turquoise blue, with heavy eyelids and a projecting intellectual forehead. In nose and contour of face he resembles Mme. Bartet, and he has a tall, slim figure. The eyes have a vague expression, cultivated, I dare say, in Intelligence work, and look at distant objects. He gave his evidence as if dictating. It was less clear than it seemed, but a fine piece of special pleading. Picquart was brought into the Intelligence Department with a view to the revision of the Dreyfus trial. He would have succeeded had the Dreyfus clan been less impatient. They kept goading and threatening to make a noise. He had brought round his chief, General Gonse, who, when Picquart wanted to move, got frightened and half revealed the matter to Boisdeffre. The fat was then in the fire.

The hands at the witness-bar afforded interesting studies. Colonel Henry had a hand like a shoulder of mutton. Mme. Dreyfus had a white, elegant hand, but from old habit showed too much the diamond ring on her little finger, which remained apart from the other fingers. The Generals held their hands bolt upright when being sworn, and let them fall straight down. Picquart had slim, nervous, elegant hands, good to run over the keyboard of a piano, to draw, etch, or possibly make artificial flowers.

"Gyp" during the trial kept on the move in the corridors encircling the Assize Court. Anatole France, of the Academy, was in attendance. She is a little bit of a woman, and so slender. But one sees she is somebody. She has an eye that rivets one. And yet it is not impertinent. Persons who did not know who she was were puzzled to fix her class or rank. Still, she is ladylike. Her complexion is fair, and her hair, of which she has a quantity, is a golden fleece shot with magenta.

I am so sorry to hear of the death of Tony Revillon, the novelist, journalist, ex-Deputy, and good-humoured, good-natured wit. Tony was called simply "Tony" by his friends; and nearly every one was a friend of this capital fellow. He could not be stuck up or dignified if he were given all France to poser as such. There was a deal of the good-hearted, devoted dog in Tony, but I never knew him to show his teeth or bark at any one. He was for long years in the Chamber of Deputies, where he represented Charonne, an east-end quarter bearing the same relation to Paris that Hackney does to London. Tony might be known by his round, smiling face, pug nose, long hair, Macfarlane surtout, and broad-brimmed hat, the shape of a Louisiana planter's, but in felt. The views in politics of this good soul were almost rick-burning. He was quite sincere. But he was, when he laid down his pen, too indolent and easy-going ever to light an incendiary match. Tony was faithful in all things. He had a lot of poor relations in Burgundy, who were a constant drain on his purse. As he never saved a farthing, this was hard on him. I never heard of his losing a friend, or turning his back on a friend in need. Like the dog, he could not help devoting himself to somebody. His first idol was Lamartine. He came—walking, I believe—all the way from Burgundy, in 1848 or thereabouts, to dedicate to that poet an ode he had written in his honour. Lamartine was enchanted with his good nature and harmless mirth. He employed him on a newspaper he then directed, and made him his journalistic secretary. Tony's affection for the first idol of his life never varied. His feminine idol was Mme. Ratazzi. He was always at her side when he could be of any use, and absent when he was not wanted. He thought her house the most picturesque, amusing, and interesting in Europe; and so it was. He was a humble follower of hers when Eugène Sue and Victor Hugo were offering flowers of literature at her shrine, and Ponsard writing for her "Horace et Lydie." Illustrious admirers came and went, but Tony seemed destined to go on admiring. One could not imagine him doing anything so grave as dying. He was the trusty friend of Mme. Ratazzi's second and third husbands, Signor Ratazzi, the Italian statesman, and Señor de Rute, one of the most charming and distingué Spaniards that it has ever been my good fortune to meet.

Shakespeare is nearly perfect. But there is one great want in "Antony and Cleopatra." It lacks a Tony Revillon. Cleopatra does not seem to have had among her followers one whose devoted attachment was absolute and unswerving as that of a dog. She bewitched Herod, Cæsar, Antony. But she attached permanently no devoted soul. I cannot, therefore, agree with Mrs. Jameson in thinking her good-natured. Birds of a feather do flock together. Tony was at all Mme. Ratazzi's regally appointed dinners when she was a widow for the second time, and living in the Duc de Aquila's house in the Avenue du Bois de Boulogne, a house she since sold to Count Telfner, Mrs. John Mackay's brother-in-law. He sat some places from her, but near enough to the centre to serve as a bout en train. His humour—and good humour—flowed easily, and was never excessive. Poor Tony, though his face was not aristocratic, was one of Nature's gentlemen. On birthdays and other festal occasions he recited at dessert neatly-turned and sparkling verses written for the hostess. His voice, as he delivered them, was soft and sonorous—so different from the thundering tones in the Chamber of Deputies. Tony was fond of voting Estimates in the Chamber of Deputies. This taste was analogous to the chronically hungry man's for the smell of restaurants. It raised him in his own eyes to think that he who lived constantly from hand to mouth, unless when he had a Deputy's salary, could help to vote away millions.

LETTER FROM THE LINKMAN.

DEAR LADY BETTY,—The opening of Parliament is the signal for commencing the elections at most of the old-established clubs, and, in consequence of these, for several weeks after that event there is an amount of irritation in the West End which is both undesirable and unwholesome. According to the present system the names of those who wish to be admitted come up in rotation, and either the members or the committee elect or reject the candidate. This system is altogether wrong, and the majority of sensible men now perceive that selection is the best method of election. The following letter which has been addressed to me deals with the matter very satisfactorily:—

"Travellers' Club,
"Thursday, February 10, 1898.

"SIR,—You have frequently written in TRUTH against the present system of electing candidates for clubs, and a case which has recently occurred is so glaringly unjust that I cannot resist the temptation of addressing these few remarks to you. A, an unmarried man, fell in love with Mrs. B, who very properly avoided him in consequence of his offensive attentions. This year, B, the husband of the lady, came up for election at a celebrated club, and A, who was a member of the committee, secured his rejection. I may add that B is a well-known man, and is in every way suited to be a member of the club to which I refer.

"The system opens the door to much injustice; it breeds bad blood amongst members, and it often injures the interests of the club itself. Moreover, few well-known men will submit themselves to the ordeal; for the more widely a man is known the more enemies he has. The time has come when election by selection must be substituted for the present system. Were the names of all the candidates submitted to the committee at each election, the best could be admitted without having to wait many years as they now have, and this would encourage them to seek admission. Besides this, no candidate would have to run the risk of being black-balled, and of for ever afterwards having it remembered against him that he was. The only argument used in favour of the old method is that it provides an admirable opportunity for paying off old scores, but that is, to my mind, a very serious objection to it. I am happy to say that most men are now in favour of altering the present system of election, but it is indescribably difficult to make club committee-men move on to new lines. Seeing the competition which there is in these days, when clubs are founded by the score every year, and considering the fact that the most desirable members can no longer afford to belong to several clubs, as their predecessors did, committee-men will not much longer be able to resist the general demand for a change in the system of elections. "X. Y. Z."

* * * * *

It is notorious that Blue Books are compiled in a scandalously slip-shod manner, but during the past few days a truly marvellous specimen of this kind of work has been presented to Parliament, and it is to be hoped that the notice of the House of Commons will be drawn to the matter. The Royal Commission on Liquor Licensing Laws directed that a return of clubs in Great Britain and Ireland should be made, and this return, "compiled from information supplied by the police authorities," has now been published. There are 195 pages in the Blue Book in question, and the first twenty-seven of these deal with the Metropolitan Clubs and those within the City of London Police District. Half-an-hour's study of the latter has revealed the existence of over a hundred flagrant errors! For instance, the Amphitryon Club, which was started some six years ago and closed its doors more than a year ago, is included in the Report, and it is incidently mentioned that this club has been in existence seventy-four years! The Wheel Club and the Trafalgar Cycling Club also appear in the Report, though they have both ceased to exist.

The Marylebone Cricket Club, with 4,000 members; the Queen's Club, with 1,300 members; Prince's Club, Knightsbridge, with 1,500 members; the Sheen House Club, with 1,500 members; the Imperial Institute, with 6,500 members; and the Empress Club in Dover-street, with 2,000 members, are omitted. These are only a few of the clubs which are not mentioned in the Report, which the secretary of the Royal Commission assures us is "A complete record of the clubs in England, Scotland, Ireland and Wales, as nearly as they can be obtained." If the authorities of the Metropolitan and City Police know so little of the London clubs, as it is shown that they do in this Report, the errors which must occur in the odd 150 pages which deal with the provinces may be expected to be altogether amazing. To hark back, no notice is taken of the existence of the Cecil Club, the Dilettante—one of the oldest institutions of the kind in Great Britain—the Welcome Club at Earl's Court, the Gallery Club in Grafton-street, and many others which are equally well known.

It would take several columns to mention all the mistakes which occur even in the first twenty-seven pages of the Report in question, but, as a final shot, it may be stated that even the addition, which purports to give the total number of clubs in London, is about sixty short of the mark. A more slip-shod piece of work can scarcely ever have been placed before the public, and it is to be hoped that some member will ask a question in the House on the subject, as these official Reports cost large sums of money to produce.

* * * * *

British diplomatists and many others of all nationalities who have come into contact with Sir Francis Clare Ford, our Ambassador at Rome, will hear with regret that he has been and is still seriously unwell. It is, moreover, feared that he may be compelled to retire from the Service before his term of office expires, which, according to the superannuation regulations, will be towards the end of the present year. Sir Francis has been an especially popular diplomatist throughout his long career, and at every post at which he has served his name is remembered by a host of friends.

As the commercial interests of Great Britain have grown, the importance of British Consuls and Vice-Consuls has increased, and this has been greatly assisted by the disinclination which the members of our Diplomatic Service for many years showed to occupy themselves with commercial matters. The tendency of the day is to attach more and more importance to Consular officials, and many experienced diplomatists predict that in the future this will affect the position of members of the Diplomatic Service. As there is not so much competition to obtain appointments in the Consular service, and as the salaries are frequently high, parents who are puzzling their brains to discover employment for their sons might profitably look in this direction. Besides, the old system of pitch-forking ruined Guardsmen and others of the same stamp into Consular berths is now almost entirely obsolete, which increases the chances of promotion.

It seems strange that in the Colonial Service the custom still exists of reserving the higher appointments for supporters of which ever Government happens to be in power when a vacancy occurs. When a man enters the Colonial Service, he should have the right to expect to be able to climb to the highest rung of the ladder, if he has sufficient ability and Fortune is on his side. As it is, the Colonial Service is the only one which is still regarded by the various Governments as a happy hunting-ground for impecunious supporters. If an Ambassador is the product of long training and much experience, surely a man who is to govern a big colony should be a specially trained man.—Believe me to be, very truly yours,

SPORTING NOTES.

THE race for the Two Thousand will be run this year on April 27, which is about a week earlier than usual. The result of the Newmarket Biennial, on April 13, might revolutionise the betting on both the Two Thousand and Derby if Lord Durham's dark colt Gerolstein (who cost 2,600 gs. as a yearling) should happen to defeat Orzil or Ninus, and he would have a considerable advantage in the weight, with both these colts. Cap Martin was mentioned the other day in one of the papers in connection with the Two Thousand, but Mr. Baird's colt is not entered, which, however, matters the less, inasmuch as Cap Martin wants so much time to develop that he certainly will not be in proper racing condition before Ascot at the earliest. He will be found dangerous only in T.Y.C. races. Mr. Baird, however, may have a formidable candidate for the Two Thousand in the dark Brio, who is going on very well indeed. It is much to be regretted that Champ de Mars has scarcely any engagements of any value, as he is decidedly one of the finest three-year-olds now in training at Newmarket. He was never entered for any of the "classic" stakes, and he was unluckily struck out of several rich races when he was a yearling.

Chelandry is being warmly recommended for the Lincolnshire Handicap by writers whose advice is manifestly founded on the most intense ignorance, as Lord Rosebery's mare is doing only easy work at Newmarket, and it is almost certain that she will not run until the City and Suburban, which race she will probably win if she goes on all right.

Lord Dunraven has a couple of the best looking and most racing-like two-year-olds at Newmarket in the colts by St. Simon out of L'Abbesse de Jouarre and by Bend Or out of Molly Morgan. They ought certainly to distinguish themselves on the turf; and in the same stable is another magnificent youngster—the filly by Kendal out of the famous St. Marguerite, for which Sir Blundell Maple paid 3,100 gs. at Doncaster; and he afterwards resold her to Sir Richard Waldie Griffith. She should turn out one of the flyers of next season.

It is full time that the idiotic practice of having ten or a dozen purely ornamental stewards at race meetings should be stopped by the authorities, and the managers ought not to be allowed to advertise the names of individuals until they have ascertained that an adequate number of the persons chosen can certainly attend. At some recent meetings infinite trouble and inconvenience have been caused through the absence of stewards, but the authorities continue to watch this scandalous state of affairs with stupid unconcern. The other day, at a certain meeting, the names of ten stewards were printed on the card, but, lo and behold! an objection was lodged against the winner of one of the principal races, and then it turned out that the case could not be decided at once (as it obviously ought to have been) because there were not a sufficient number of stewards on the course to deal with the matter.

I see that Longtown has been mentioned as a promising Derby outsider. Any one who is asinine enough to be gulled into backing this horse for the Derby may look upon his money as absolutely lost. Longtown has such bad hocks that he could have no chance under any circumstances at Epsom, where the gradients of the course would soon stop him. He has come on during the winter in a very satisfactory way, but he is far more likely to win some second-class handicap than to go for any big race. This horse will probably prove to be deficient in stamina. Matthew Dawson, who is taking the waters at Bath, has removed to Waterloo Lodge, Newmarket, from Exning, where his late stables have been let to Mr. Keene, with Melton Lodge.

Nobody should back Gulistan for the Lincolnshire Handicap until his number is up, as it is exceedingly doubtful whether Mr. de Rothschild's horse will stand a preparation. Gulistan ran very well in the Cambridgeshire, but he has become a most difficult horse to train, and last week he was stopped in his work for several days. I shall be vastly surprised if he turns out a second Le Nicham.

The weights for the Liverpool Spring Cup were published last week, and that the entry is a poor one in point of class is proved by the fact that Labrador is top weight with 9 st. I do not believe that the Duke of Westminster's horse can give 2 lb. to Crestfallen, who has made a prodigious improvement during the winter. The distance is not far enough for St. Bris, who is a much over-rated horse, and Butter is exceedingly moderate, there being no merit in his defeat of Merle at Doncaster, as this filly is clearly deficient in stamina. Stowmarket has seen his best day, and the distance is not far enough for either Northallerton, Asterie, or Nouveau Riche. It is a proof of the frantic and ruinous competition which now prevails, owing to the excessive number of race meetings, that there should be only twenty-two entries for this handicap of £800, although the liability on each entry is only £3. Twenty years ago such a race would have attracted a hundred entries at least. If Crestfallen is the best of Mr. Lambton's lot, I should be inclined to fancy that he will win this event for Lord Derby if he "goes for it."

I hear that the Duke of Westminster's colt Batt is going on remarkably well; he will be specially prepared for the Two Thousand, and is tolerably certain to be the best of the Kingsclere lot for the Derby, in spite of the support which has been given by some mooncalves to Collar. Batt was seized (like other horses trained by Porter) with influenza at Ascot, and months elapsed before the colt had fairly recovered. He was very far from being at his best when he won the Criterion Stakes and the Mile Houghton Stakes at Newmarket during the last week in October. This colt, who is by Sheen out of Vampire, has fine speed, and he can stay well. If he comes all right to the post, it is any odds on his defeating Hawfinch both at Newmarket and at Epsom.

The Duke of Portland has a dreadfully moderate lot of horses in training at Newmarket, and unless his two-year-olds are really smart he will have another bad season. Wantage, the dark three-year-old colt by Sheen out of Satchel, is likely to win some races if he is judiciously placed, but he is not expected to turn out to be within measurable distance of Derby form. That grandly-bred filly, Elizabeth Hardwick, by Orme out of Mowerina, dam of Donovan, is a failure, and will never do much good on the turf, but she ought to make a valuable brood mare. The two-year-olds do not include any produce of Atalanta, Mowerina, or Memoir, and the best-looking of the lot is Manners, own brother to Amiable.

I see it is stated that Captain Machell has a great desire to win a Grand National. The writer has persumably forgotten that Captain Machell won the Grand National of 1873 with Disturbance, when he netted nearly £30,000 in bets. In that year the Grand National was a very heavy betting race, and Footman, a horse owned by the present Lord Penrhyn, was backed to win a great stake, both by its stable and by the public. Another horse which carried an enormous lot of money was Rhyshworth, who had won many good races on the flat for Mr. Henry Savile, who sold him to Mr. Chaplin, and he would have won a big stake if his steed had secured the Aintree event. Disturbance was a gold mine to Captain Machell, who had won a lot of money in the previous November, when his horse carried off the Croydon Steeplechase, which was then a very important race.

I fully expect that Mr. Keene will be very dangerous indeed at Lincoln with either Voter or St. Cloud II. It is a fantastical puerility for any one to suppose that Knight of the Thistle could give Voter 4 lb., and, considering the excellent form which the American horse has shown in the United States, I cannot see that he is overweighted. It is probable, however, that St. Cloud II. (who has made a great improvement during the winter) will be the best from this stable at Lincoln. This horse is a good beginner and he has fine speed.

Barcalwhey, who has been backed for a good deal of money for the Grand National, started favourite for the Prince of Wales's Steeplechase at Sandown Park last week, but he fell when going well. There has been a great deal of talk about The Shaker, a horse belonging to Lord William Beresford, who here met Barcalwhey with 17 lb. the best of the weights, and he finished third. At Aintree the pair will meet at 10 lb., and I should fancy that Barcalwhey will be the better. It is, however, all nonsense and rubbish to bet upon the Grand National until the day of running arrives. There will probably be a very large field, and great and manifold may be the changes in the course of the next five weeks. I myself fancy that Cathal will run well if he goes on all right.

It is complained, with much justice, that steeplechasing in this country has become a perfect farce, and anything more entirely ludicrous and melancholy than the incidents of some recent contests could not well be imagined, and they are certainly calculated to bring this form of sport into utter and well-deserved contempt. A rule ought at once to be passed that, unless a steeplechase is completed within a certain time, the race shall be void. I believe that there is such a law in Australia, and the sooner it is adopted in England the better for all concerned.

Vatel will be found a smart colt next season. It will be remembered that this animal came out last year with a great reputation at the Kempton Park Easter meeting, where odds of 3 to 1 were betted on him for a Maiden Plate in a field of twelve, and he won in a common canter. Vatel directly afterwards fell lame, and he was thrown up for the summer, and did not run again as a two-year-old. He, however, has wintered well, and he has remarkably fine action. This colt is being prepared to run for the Union Jack Stakes at Liverpool, and he will probably win that race for Mr. de Rothschild, who has a two-year-old own brother to Vatel, now in training at Newmarket.

I hear that Sir John Kelk intends to have The Baker specially prepared for the Chester Cup, after which he will be reserved for the Gold Cup at Ascot. There was not a better two-year-old performance last season than The Baker's runaway victory for the mile Nursery at Doncaster, with 8st. 7lb. on his back, and a field of eighteen behind him. The only defeats of this colt were at Stockton and at York, and, in my opinion, his running on those occasions had better be ignored altogether in estimating his chance for future events.

Hermiston is doing practically no work at Kingsclere, and it is quite certain that Mr. Low's colt will not run before Epsom, and very likely he will be kept for the Kempton Park Jubilee Handicap. If he should win the City and Suburban we should at once find Batt made first favourite for the Two Thousand.

It is very disappointing to find only thirty-two entries for the National Hunt Steeplechase of £1,000, which is to be run at Gatwick next month, the distance being four miles. The first year this steeplechase was run there were actually thirty-one starters, Mr. Angell ("Cherry") winning with Bridegroom. The race was run at Market Harborough, and I fancy it was a stake of about £200. There were twenty-nine starters at Wetherby, in 1865, when Mr. Chaplin won with Emperor. Sir Humphrey de Trafford would very likely have won the Gatwick race with his American four-year-old Lafayette, but for this animal being disqualified by his victory at Kempton Park the other day. There is not a single French entry, although last year's race, which was run at Newmarket, went across the Channel through the victory of Nord Ouest.

Lord Downe's term of office as Steward of the Jockey Club will expire when the annual financial meeting of the members is held at Newmarket in April during the Craven week, and it is reported that he will be replaced by Mr. Henry Fitzwilliam, Lord Harewood then becoming the senior Steward. Lord Downe was appointed in April, 1895, in succession to Lord March.

No wonder Hall men and University men are staggered by the turn events have taken at Cambridge. Old members of the University are disgusted and ashamed. It was known that there were differences between Trinity Hall and the rowing authorities. Howell, the Hall first-boat captain and an old Blue had declined to row. Bell, just when the crew was going into strict training, also declined. He had been rowing for some time. I will content myself with saying that, in many important respects his position with reference to his rowing differed very materially from that of Howell, and it is unfair to put the two in the same boat. At a meeting of the C.U.B.C., Dudley Ward and Etherington-Smith charged Howell with inducing Hall men to refuse to row in the University eight. Matters must indeed have come to a pretty pass when the President has to impeach any boat captain for such an offence. I doubt if the records of either University or any college can give a precedent for such a proceeding.

The charge was too serious to be lightly made, and Lehmann was invited to take the chair, such was the importance of the occasion. Howell denied that he had endeavoured to prevent any one from rowing. Admitted that his statement was correct, and that he had not brought direct pressure to bear, he must have a very poor notion of the authority of a Hall first boat captain if he does not realise that his own refusal to row would, in itself, be an influence working in the very direction of which Dudley Ward complained. It is to be hoped that Howell and Bell will have the good sense to follow Lehmann's advice, and make up their differences. Surely they have too much good feeling to continue to allow themselves to incur public odium while the person whose catspaw they permit themselves to be escapes scathless. To describe their conduct as unsportsmanlike would be courteous, says the Granta. I have no wish to enter into the details of the events which have led up to the present regrettable incident. Howell may rest assured that he has done both Cambridge and his college an infinity of harm. It is not merely his services which are a loss to the University, but the loss to the prestige and honour both of the Hall and Cambridge is almost irreparable. Owing to the conduct of one man the position of the Hall is impugned. What parent will care to send a son to a college which has been for many years the leading rowing college in the University, after the name of Trinity Hall has been made a reproach to the ears of the University. It is a thousand pities that the glorious reputation of the college should be imperilled by the ill-considered action of a few. There is to be a college meeting to consider the question, and it is to be hoped that the college will clearly show that it supports Steele, who is rowing stroke, and will induce Howell to give all his energy and abilities to the President of the University Boat Club. In no other way can the offence be atoned. All the same, those who know the inner workings both of the Hall and University rowing, cannot fail to sympathise to a great extent with Mr. Howell. In condemning his action, as I have done, I have not forgotten that he has in all probability not acted on his own initiative. He has been injudicious enough to have his hand forced. He has appeared before the public as the culprit. He has to bear blame which is not altogether his due. His task, therefore, in abandoning his old position and in loyally assisting his University should not be made too difficult for him. There is one who is old enough to know better, who ought to be able to fight his own quarrels himself, and he is most likely at the bottom of the whole mischief. I hope he is happy.

With regard to the University eight itself, it is not by any means so bad as some people imagine. Steele is improving rapidly at stroke; Goldie is developing into an excellent seven, and Etherington-Smith is much better with his body swing, and rows long, while Swanston, at five, has made the most improvement of any. Rennie, at bow, varies considerably. Their chances of success are not rosy, but Rome was not built in a day, and Fletcher cannot eradicate old vices and teach new methods at once. He can teach oarsmanship, but watermanship is only gained by experience. There is every probability that the crew will be much better than any of recent years. For the sake of the University it is to be hoped that peace will be proclaimed. It is bad enough that Cambridge has forgotten how to row. Surely she has not forgotten how to behave as well.

Since the above was written the good sense of the Hall men has saved the situation. They have passed a vote of confidence in Howell, and urged both him and Bell to row for the University. I believe Howell has acted with the best intentions, but he has been as badly advised as a young fellow could be.

At both Universities college meetings are now in full swing. At Oxford the Exeter open half was won by Dawson from scratch, on a heavy track, in excellent time. In the Christ Church sports the open event was a long jump, in which Gordon, the Blue, did well. At Cambridge there are one or two promising half-milers. In the Trinity Sports Hunter, a freshman, won that event in fast time, and also took the mile easily. In the sprints Pilkington showed very good form, and if he has a little more practice he will be a first-class sprinter, and with training he should come on well for the quarter. Workman won the open mile in good style. Carter, the University president, showed up very fairly in the King's open quarter, and he and Pilkington ought to make a good pair at Queen's. Judging by the Emmanuel open three miles, the Oxford president, Fremantle, will win the event on one leg. Davis shows promise with the weight.

There has been another round of the Association Cup, and those old cup-winners, West Bromwich Albion, just managed to pull through, and so did Derby County. A southern club has again survived. In the first five minutes Southampton scored against Newcastle United, and that was the only point scored. The southern team showed excellent defence, and were very lucky in again playing on their own ground. It would not be nice to damp the ardour of some of their supporters, so it is better not to suggest that they will not win the Cup. The heroes of the first round, Burslem Port Vale, had to visit Burnley, and found the local team too strong for them. They could beat the champions of the first division of the League, but the leaders of the second division were too much for them. In the Amateur Cup the best game was that which resulted in a draw between the Casuals and Old Etonians after a very fast game. At Queen's Club the Corinthians were beaten by Edinburgh St. Bernard's, but the Englishmen had the misfortune to lose Topham from the forwards early in the game. This loss necessarily made them weak in front of goal. Moon did some good work in goal. The crowd behaved very badly on more than one occasion, and hooted the referee. Both the Universities were playing. Oxford met Clapton and Cambridge the Old Carthusians, for whom Cobbold played. The Inter-University match ought to be very close and interesting.

As an exposition of Rugby football, the match between Cambridge and Blackheath was far more interesting than the International game on the previous Saturday. The narrow victory of Blackheath was attributable to the better passing of the halves. During the second half Robinson, who had been putting in some brilliant runs, had to retire. By the way, why has not Tucker got his International again? There was some extraordinary play in the match between Rosslyn Park and the Harlequins. The latter soon scored, but they were in the end beaten, Hewlett, a comparatively new three-quarter, scoring thrice. That Croydon are a strong team was shown by the fact that Oxford could only just win, but then several blues were away. After an uninteresting and scrambling game, the Old Merchant Taylors drew with St. Thomas's.

MAMMON.

From MOSES MOSS to BENJAMIN BOSS.

Sunday.

MY DEAR BEN,—The growing hopes that the Chinese problem would be solved by a favourable result of the loan negotiations have been shattered, and it now appears that there is to be no loan until, I suppose, the Celestials want the money very badly. This country is not likely to force a loan upon China, and it suffices for the present that a firm stand has been made against encroachments by any particular Power.

Politics and Markets.

Politics are, however, still a factor in the Stock Markets. It is true that the friction between Russia and this country, on account of the Far East, has for the present been removed, but the Cretan question remains, and we have had a full-fledged Cuban scare, which was this time engineered with the assistance of a stolen private letter of the Spanish Minister in Washington. That document contained some sound home-truths, which President McKinley might as well take to heart, but it has brought about the recall of the Ambassador, and the prompt action of the Spanish Government has prevented the incident from assuming larger proportions. It sufficed to put down Yankee Rails at one time, but there has since been a very sharp recovery, and, unless our American cousins provide some fresh unpleasant revelations, the Yankee Market looks like going considerably higher. Rumours of a coming fight between the Canadian Pacific and Grand Trunk Companies have kept back an advance in these stocks, although an excellent six-monthly Trunk statement played into the hands of the "Bulls." Inter-Bourse securities have partly been under the influence of the Zola trial, which has put the Paris Bourse out of humour; but in the South American section a sharp rise in Uruguay bonds has been the feature, on cablegrams from Monte Video announcing the defeat of the Herrera party by a coup d'état on the part of Señor Cuestas. Argentines have been firm, and Perus are bracing up again. The Home Railway department has borne another dividend disappointment, that of the North-Western very bravely, and now that no further disappointments of this kind need be feared, investors and speculators are nibbling again, so that in view of the great scarcity of stock disclosed at the settlement, we may have a general improvement any day. In the Mining Market greater activity has prevailed amongst West Australians, the West Australian Market Trust group distinguishing itself by important upward movements. In the Kaffir Circus business has been on a very small scale, notwithstanding a fresh record output for January. I said all along that Oom Paul would again be elected President, but the market is now waiting for some indications as to how he will conduct himself towards the mining industry after his victory. In the Industrial section a favourable Allsopp dividend has been the feature, and there has been a speculative outburst in West Australian timber shares, the Karri and Jarrah wood being in great favour for street paving. A rush of industrial enterprises is coming on again, amongst which the Oil Companies will more especially have to be carefully scrutinised.

Home Rails—Scarcity of Stock.

The position which was shown in Home Rails at the fortnightly settlement is an interesting one, inasmuch as there was a surprising scarcity of stock, considering the recent disappointing dividend announcements. Contangoes were generally lower, and while on North-Western a backwardation of $\frac{1}{4}$ was finally paid, and Great Central 1894 Ordinary were carried over at even, the contango on Dover "A" dropped to below $\frac{1}{8}$. Almost the only stocks on which rates were higher were North-Eastern and Brighton "A." There is no doubt that North-Western had been largely sold speculatively in anticipation of some such unfavourable result as was announced, viz., a dividend at the rate of $7\frac{3}{4}$ per cent. against 8 per cent. last year. The reports, both of the North-Western and Midland, show that the expenditure has grown very considerably, the ratio of the North-Western for 1897 being 57·9 per cent., against 55·6 per cent. in 1896, while the Midland shows still worse with 57·6 per cent., against 54·8 per cent. in 1896. It is evident, however, that holders of Home Railway stocks are not selling. They probably view the increase in working expenses as partly due to temporary causes, such as the preparations of some of the Companies for the coming competition of the Great Central Railway, and they are disinclined to part with stocks in which they have undoubtedly done exceedingly well during the past few years. This is a position which lends itself eminently to a move on the part of the speculative element, and should money remain fairly easy, it is more than probable that we shall see a speculative outburst. In such a movement Dover "A" will doubtless be well to the front, as they look cheap at $112\frac{3}{4}$ xd., and traffics continue remarkably good. Stock is more plentiful as regards Brighton "A," but these have also improved to $178\frac{3}{8}$, the line also showing well with traffic increases. In fact, the total traffic gain for the past week of £83,665 was most satisfactory, and brings up the aggregate increase for the past five weeks to £264,356. In the next returns, moreover, the resumption of work in the engineering trade should begin to tell, and large traffic increases from the lines most affected can be looked for. Great Easterns are high enough in comparison with Dover "A," but Chathams have met with a good deal of favour, owing to the steady progress which has been made. In the Heavy division, North-Western will probably experience the most important improvement, when they do move, as stock is so scarce. Great Central stocks, after the recent set-back, are going ahead again, the 1894 Ordinary being quoted 42, and as this stock is heavily oversold it will not be surprising to see some of the operators take it up. The relapse in Great Northern Deferred appears to have been quite heavy enough, and a recovery is due. The statements made at the Metropolitan District meeting by Mr. J. S. Forbes were in every respect favourable, and point to exceptional progress of this line. The opposition with regard to the low-rate experiment proved, moreover, very weak, and I cannot, under the circumstances, understand the decline in Districts, except on the assumption that somebody is depressing them in order to pick up some cheap stock, and then to engineer a fresh rise. Easier rates at the last settlement seemed to indicate investment purchases. Excellent trade reports from Scotland were responsible for a sharp rally in Caledonian Deferred and North British Deferred, the former improving to $58\frac{1}{2}$, the latter to $46\frac{3}{8}$. Very large traffics are being looked for in the immediate future. Since I wrote last week on the promising outlook for the Central London Railway, an important advance has taken place in all the various stocks of this Company. The £10 Ordinary fully-paid is now quoted $10\frac{3}{4}$, ditto partly-paid $6\frac{3}{4}$, the Preferred $1\frac{3}{4}$, the Deferred $4\frac{7}{8}$. I am not surprised that the public should view these stocks with favour, as the line may be considered the most important underground electric railway ever built, and must attract an enormous amount of passenger traffic. Until the opening of the line early next year the shares receive 3 per cent. interest, and I should not be surprised if they were to receive considerable dividends immediately on the commencement of working. In the meantime, the £10 shares of the Waterloo and City Railway are already quoted at 14, and for my part I would rather buy Central London shares.

The Yankee Market Bracing Up.

Not very long ago one heard the universal cry amongst those who had been heavily hit in Yankee Rails in the past "Never again." "Never," however, is a long word, and quite a change has come over the scene during the last few months. At first some of the more plucky speculators went for short turns. They accumulated considerable profits, and then grew bolder, with yet better results, while now the well-sustained advance and the general activity have attracted a considerable portion of the public to the Yankee market again. For this there is every reason, and although some financial scribes are still posing as irreconcilable, it is manifestly absurd to abandon a market for ever because at some former time you have experienced some losses in it. The position of the American department has altogether changed—through excellent crops and the end of the financial crisis, while large traffic increases provide a sound basis for a further appreciation in the stocks. The various reorganisations have, moreover, placed a number of hitherto weak roads into a firm position. It is in the Preference stocks of these reorganised Companies that, as I have repeatedly mentioned, the most important improvement is justified, and readers of Truth who have taken my advice have benefited very largely thereby. Take, for instance, Atchison Five per Cent. Prefs., which have risen from 17¾ to 32⅝, Erie First Prefs., which from 28⅝ have advanced to 43¾; Norfolk Adjustment Prefs., which are quoted at 54½ against 22½ last year; Northern Pacific new Prefs. at 67⅞ x.d., against 34½ in 1897; and Southern Prefs. at 33⅜ against 25 last year. Amongst all these Preference stocks it appears to me that Northern Pacific new Prefs. and Erie Prefs. are at present the most tempting. The Northern Pacific is expected to benefit very largely by the rush to Klondike. It appears also that the syndicate, which is desirous of buying all the remaining surplus lands of the Northern Pacific, has come to an agreement with the Company respecting the principal details of the deal. If the negotiations prove successful, the Northern Pacific would be a gainer to the extent of $15,000,000, while its stockholders will have the right to subscribe to the Company which will be formed to purchase the land. As regards the Erie, I have already mentioned the favourable nature of the Susquehanna and Western deal. The Erie Company has now issued a circular informing the holders of the stock trust certificates of the arrangements made for the acquisition of the Susquehanna by the issue of additional Ordinary and Preference shares of the Erie Company. The deal has, of course, been approved by the reorganisation depositaries and the voting trustees. For each Preference share of the Susquehanna $\frac{30}{100}$ of one share of Erie First Prefs. will be given, and the Common stock is to obtain share for share in Erie Common. Erie Prefs. have now improved to 43¾, and are expected to rise to 47 in the near future, while the Common stock now quoted 15⅞ should take a jump as soon as certain options are finished with. The market generally has been very buoyant at times, although a set-back was caused by a fresh Cuban scare, which was brought about by the publication of Senor Dupuy de Lôme's indiscreet private letter. The Spanish Minister acted, however, with promptitude in sending his resignation to his Government, who at once recalled him. Thus it may be hoped that the incident, which has been worked for all that it is worth by Wall-street "Bears," is closed. The New York Central deal still acts as a strong supporting factor. In the general advance which has of late taken place Milwaukee have not had their share, and whenever the stock rises to the neighbourhood of 99 it appears to relapse again. Yet traffics are upon the whole very satisfactory, and it may be assumed, therefore, that insiders do not wish to start any upward movement yet, and that they are reserving their strength until we get close to the next dividend announcement in March. On the other hand, Louisville and Nashville have commenced a fresh improvement, which seems to be due chiefly to the success of the refunding scheme. It is announced that the Company have sold $12,500,000 of Collateral Trust Gold Fours to retire the $7,070,000 Consolidated Sevens maturing on April 1, and to reimburse the Treasury for the cost of the Paducah and Memphis Division and other properties acquired. It is stated that the saving of interest on the Sevens alone will be $212,000. This, combined with the improvement of traffics on the road, renders a resumption of dividends certain in the near future. A stumbling-block as regards the Union Pacific has hitherto been the Kansas-Pacific sale. We have, however, cablegrams now to the effect that the Kansas-Pacific sale will not be postponed beyond the 15th inst., and that the United States Government has agreed with the Reorganisation Committee on the amount to be paid. Should this prove correct, we may look for an important advance in both Union-Pacific Prefs., now quoted 63, and in the Common stock, which again improved to 36, reacting to 34¾. I hope that my readers took the advice I gave them a week ago of buying Union-Pacifics on a decline. They touched at one time 34¼, and thus there has been an excellent opportunity for making a profitable turn. For the month of December the Union Pacific system shows a gross increase of $325,710, and a net gain of $270,477, which must be considered most satisfactory. Central Pacifics should also benefit by a settlement of the Union Pacific difficulty. This Company is doing remarkably well, and once the Government debt is settled the shares should go ahead. In December the gross profits showed an increase of $196,000, while for the whole twelve months of 1897 the gross traffics amounted to $14,173,602, which compares with $12,453,950 in 1890, the net earnings being $5,979,761, against $4,694,990. Chesapeake and Ohio have so far hung fire, being quoted 24½, but it is reported that this stock is close to dividend point, and that, moreover, it will be taken into the Vanderbilt system. In Denvers a moderate improvement has taken place, a syndicate having taken these up, with the result that the Prefs. have risen to 52¾, the Ordinary being quoted 14. I have for some time taken a favourable view of these stocks. Missouri, Kansas, and Texas have been neglected somewhat of late, but they are a good purchase at anything like 13⅝. Readings have, on the whole, been quiet, but a considerable demand has arisen for Reading Fours, with buyers at 89¼. Canadian Pacifics have again moved irregularly, and at one time dropped to 89½, from which there has been a recovery to 90. As has been generally expected, the Canadian Pacific dividend has now been announced at 2½ per cent. for the six months, making 4 per cent. for the year. Traffics continue satisfactory, although the increases are not so large as they have been, the last weekly return showing $53,000 increases. Rumours of trouble with the Grand Trunk on account of the Klondike traffic are being persistently circulated, and this has apparently prevented any further rise in the stock. Grand Trunks, on the other hand, have not suffered so much from these rumours, as they were supported by an excellent six-monthly statement, which shows that through the improved earnings in that period the net revenue deficiency which was left on June 30, 1897, of £265,000, has not only been wiped out, but that there is now a credit balance of £10,200. This means, of course, that the surplus of earnings over fixed charges will henceforth accrue to the benefit of the Guaranteed, and after that to the Prefs. The Guaranteed has now moved up to 77⅝, the First Prefs. being quoted 69½, and it will therefore be seen that there is not much more margin left for a further rise, especially if these two Companies should now set to rate-cutting. The respective Boards would, however, be so severely blamed by their stockholders for the adoption of a fighting policy, that I expect the matter will be settled.

Foreigners and South Americans.

At one time the Paris Bourse showed considerable buoyancy, and Foreigners benefited from this circumstance, but during the last few days the Zola trial has again acted as a wet blanket. Spanish receded from the highest point touched to 61⅜ on the ambassadorial trouble, and Turks seem to fluctuate with the varying news concerning the governorship of Crete and Russian policy as regards Prince George of Greece. I have, however, for some time taken the view that there is nothing to be made out of old-world securities, and that on the contrary my readers should devote their attention to the South American department, in which very considerable profits are still to be realised. I am glad to see that the view which I took with regard to Uruguay is being borne out by events. Under ordinary circumstances the Stock Exchange would not hail the execution of a coup d'état with a rise in the stock of the country affected, but in Uruguay the position is very peculiar. The late President Borda, one of the creatures of Herrera, had left Uruguay a legacy in the shape of a corrupt Congress nominated by him, and not elected in the usual course. This Congress is disavowed by the majority of the people, and every respectable and wealthy inhabitant supports Senor Cuestas, hitherto acting-President. Cuestas has dissolved the Chambers, has formed a Provisional Government which has been recognised by all the military and departmental authorities, and has appointed a Council of State of eighty-eight members representing all political parties in proportion, which will perform all legislative functions until the new elections in November. He has with him as Vice-President, Senor Maceachen, who, as the name indicates, is of Scotch descent, and represents the very considerable Scottish element in Uruguay, where our compatriots from across the border are amongst the most prosperous settlers. Thus, even if Senor Cuestas should fall a victim to the assassin's dagger he will at once be replaced by a man equally honest and honourable. Cablegrams from Monte Video state that he will now apply all his energies to financial reorganisation, and in this he will have the support of European financiers. The Three and a Half per Cent. Loan has now moved up to 43, the Five per Cent. Loan to 55, and, unless some fresh unfavourable event should occur, we may look for an important rise in these bonds. Argentine Government stocks have been steady, and but fractional advances are shown, the 1886 Loan being quoted 92¾, the Funding Loan 91½, Buenos Ayres Water and Drainage bonds 75¾. Argentine Railway stocks have been well maintained, as traffics commence to show satisfactory increases, owing to the moving of the crops. Buenos Ayres Great Southern are quoted 157, Buenos Ayres and Rosario 76½; but Central Argentine have reacted to 84, which is not surprising in view of the indifferent dividend outlook for this line. Cordoba Central First Prefs. are steady at 93, the Second Prefs. rising to 54, but Cordoba Central (Central Northern Section) Income Debenture stock remains at 58½, another traffic decrease of $16,270 being shown. Reports have been cabled from New York that Messrs. Seligmann Bros. are negotiating with the Mexican Government concerning the refunding of the National Gold Debt, which amounts to $100,000,000, and which can be redeemed in July next. These bonds are largely held in this country, and in Germany and Holland. This refunding scheme has been on the tapis for some time, but so far there has been no improvement in the 6 per cent. Loans, which remain at 98¾. Brazilians and Chilians have kept dull, and Guatemala bonds are 1½ lower on the assassination of President Barrios. Peruvian Corporation stocks, however, are recovering, latest news from Lima being more satisfactory. I have received several inquiries from holders of Ecuador bonds as to whether anything will be done for them. One of my correspondents mentions that about three months ago an American-German Syndicate was formed to build a railway in Ecuador, giving £2 10s. for every £100 bond deposited to their scheme in cash, and, furthermore, guaranteeing 6 per cent. on £35 for every £100 bond, and to redeem or pay off in six or seven years the present outstanding bonds at £35 for every £100. My correspondent is under the impression that about eighty per cent. agreed to the Syndicate's terms, and fondly hopes that there is a prospect of the coupons due being paid from some £40,000 which he fancies should be in the bank at Guayaquil to the credit of the Ecuador bondholders. The conduct of the Government of Ecuador has been so disreputable that, for the present, no hopes can be cherished such as my correspondent entertains. According to the last report of the Corporation of Foreign Bondholders, the Minister of Finance at Guayaquil had stated that a deposit made in connection with the payment of the interest on the Internal Debt had been transferred to London, "so as to preserve it from the fatal consequences which the increasing depreciation of silver was producing, and to give a guarantee to the bondholders of the honesty of the Ecuador Government." The Council of Foreign Bondholders, however, state that this alleged deposit in London is a mere figure of speech, and that it is extremely unlikely that any cash has actually been lodged with any bank in London. The ideas entertained by the Minister of Finance of Ecuador as to national honesty are well illustrated by his suggestion that a Government agent should be appointed in London for the purpose of privately buying up the bonds of Ecuador now in circulation in all the European Markets, and that the funds required for this purpose should be raised by the issue of a consolidated loan, to be obtained from one of the Guayaquil banks. This suggestion of buying up depreciated bonds in order to effect an arrangement with the creditors of the Republic is too precious, and shows that honesty is at a considerable discount in Ecuador.

The Kaffir Circus—Another Record Crushing.

I have all along predicted that Oom Paul would be re-elected as President of the Transvaal with a considerable majority, and I looked upon the repeated rumours that this would not be the case as mere electioneering dodges. The majority is a large one, the President having been supported by 12,858 votes, against 3,753 for Burger, and 2,001 for General Joubert. The not inconsiderable number of Boers who have supported Mr. Schalk Burger shows, however, that the view in favour of concessions to the mining industry, which are specially recommended by Mr. Schalk Burger, is gaining ground even in Boer circles, and President Kruger will have to reckon with this. If he is wise he will, now that he has again been victorious, use his power with moderation, and show greater liberality in the treatment of the mining industry. It is well known that he will require a very large loan in order to carry out railway construction, and otherwise strengthen the finances of the country. It will be quite impossible for him to obtain the sums required if he does not grant suitable concessions, for it is not only England that insists upon these, but both France and Germany have very large amounts invested in Transvaal mining enterprises, and the financiers of these countries will, therefore, also answer with a distinct non possumus, unless the Transvaal Government assumes a more liberal policy. The Kaffir Circus is awaiting developments in this respect, and in the meantime even another record output for January has not contrived to bring about an improvement in this market. As regards these crushings, which amounted to 313,826 oz. from the Witwatersrand district, as against 310,712 oz. in December, 1897, they were not by any means uniformly favourable. There were, on the contrary, decreases in the case of the Crown Deep (605 oz.), Johannesburg Pioneer (612 oz.), Langlaagte Estate (337 oz.), North Randfontein (310 oz.), Nourse Deep (700 oz.), Paarl Central (750 oz.), Porges Randfontein (511 oz.), Violet Consolidated (375 oz.), and notably the Sheba (2,605 oz.). On the other hand, increases were not wanting, the Geldenhuis Deep being to the front with an increase of 1,485 oz., while the Geldenhuis Estate showed an increase of 627 oz., and Henry Nourse 242 oz. Knights showed well with a return of 5,215 oz., against 4,983 oz. in December, and 4,724 oz. in November, and it is surprising that these shares do not improve. The Lancaster had an increase of 346 oz., and the Langlaagte Block B shows well with a return of 4,709 oz., against 4,484 oz. in December. The Langlaagte Star, too, was well up the previous crushing (4,031 oz. against 4,020 oz. in December). The Rose Deep had 9,666 oz., against 9,491 oz., and the Van Ryn West showed well with 4,463 oz., against 3,936 oz. in December, the output of the Van Ryn being 4,189 oz., against 4,002 oz. in December. Hardly any support has been given to the market by leading houses, and all the groups have therefore shown dulness. Rand Mines are easier at 33$\frac{1}{16}$, Consolidated Goldfields at 4$\frac{13}{16}$, while even East Rands, which had hitherto been firmly supported, are down to 5⅛. Chartered shares have been dull at 3⅛, further information being awaited concerning the intentions of the Government with regard to future arrangements. The resignation of some of the ornamental Directors would not perhaps hurt the Company much. In the Robinson group Randfontein have been quiet at $1\frac{15}{16}$, but Langlaagte Star are firm at $1\frac{13}{16}$, and Langlaagte Estate are dull at $3\frac{5}{8}$. In the Barnato group Glencairn at $2\frac{1}{4}$ are well maintained, while Barnato Consols stand at $2\frac{1}{4}$, Johannesburg Consolidated Investment at $1\frac{15}{16}$. A Johannesburg correspondent writes to me with reference to the special supplement to the Economist of December 18, dealing with the Deep Level mines. He says that this article has excited no small attention in Johannesburg, and while admitting that it is a sufficiently creditable production, my correspondent complains that the writer shows too much bias in favour of certain undertakings to the detriment of others. My correspondent asks why the undertakings controlled by the Rand Mines are so highly commended, while those of the Consolidated Goldfields are damned with faint praise? The writer of the article states that roughly £2,800,000 must still be provided to bring the various Companies of the Goldfields group to a producing stage, and that of this sum the Consolidated Goldfields have in hand about £1,000,000, while "financing the balance will be a severe strain upon the resources of that Company." To this my correspondent remarks that of the £1,800,000 there has already been provided £500,000 for the Simmer East, and towards this sum the Consolidated Goldfields did not contribute a single penny. A sum of £1,050,000 must be found for the Jupiter and Simmer West; but if the reefs struck on these properties are good no sane man doubts that the money will be forthcoming, just as it was when wanted for the Simmer East. My correspondent further objects to the statement which the Economist man is kind enough to make, that the holdings of the Goldfields Deep Company in the Glen Deep and Rose Deep are thoroughly sound, but do not represent a large figure. Yet these two assets, taking Rose Deep at £7 and Glen Deep at £2, represent, according to my correspondent, a value of well over £800,000, leaving out altogether the trifle of 300,000 Robinson Deep shares, which to-day are valued at well over £3,000,000 sterling! The other Company to be financed is the Knight's Deep, which has in hand sufficient reserve shares to provide for all its requirements. So, asks my correspondent, where is "the severe strain," and he suggests that "it exists merely in the jaundiced imagination of the Economist man." This is how my correspondent concludes his argument:—

> But it is not at all likely that any shares will have to be sold. The money will be provided when wanted from outside sources, as it has been over and over again provided before. There is only one strong point to bear in mind. When the outcrop mine is good, the deep level is practically certain to be good also. Moreover, in the early stages these deep levels have been, and will be, financed by the big houses; as soon as a good reef is struck, there are plenty of people willing to come forward and advance money on debentures—witness the recent issues of Robinson Deep debentures, which stand at about £120, and of Simmer East, towards which the parent Companies did not contribute a shilling. Or, as soon as operations are well started, reserve shares are issued to liquidate liabilities—witness the issue of 50,000 Crown Deep shares at £10. 10s., guaranteed at £10, and now the issue of 75,066 Nourse Deep shares at £6 10s., guaranteed at £6 5s

I hold no brief for the Consolidated Goldfields Company, but the remarks of this Johannesburg correspondent are very much to the point, and tend to show that the article in question was conceived more in favour of the Rand Mines than of the other parent Company. From the details to hand concerning the East Rand meeting, which was held at Johannesburg on January 12, it may be assumed that the appointment of a European committee of eight members, four of whom are nominated by French shareholders, will prove a step in the right direction. The amendments also with regard to the representation at the meetings seem to be appropriate. The consolidation of the Henderson's Consolidated Corporation with the Henderson's Transvaal Estates has now been completed, and an issue of First Mortgage Debentures is being made, which are certainly well secured. The consolidation is doubtless in the interest of both enterprises, and when matters in the Transvaal generally revive the Henderson's Estates will be in a position to take advantage of it. Simmer and Jack shares have been affected by what has generally been looked upon as a disappointing return, the additional new stamps not having supplied a corresponding increase, although the total of 10,163 oz. for January compares with 8,120 oz. for December. There is every prospect, however, that the next crushings will show a very important improvement. It is announced that the appointment of Mr. George Albu as Managing Director of the Van Ryn Gold Mines Estate has been ratified, while his brother, Mr. Leopold Albu, joins the Board here. This is very satisfactory, as Messrs. Albu are well known for the excellence of their management. Diamond shares have been quiet in sympathy with gold mines, De Beers being quoted $30\frac{1}{16}$, New Jagersfontein $8\frac{1}{4}$.

Golden West Australia.

A good deal of irregularity has been shown in the West Australian department during the past week. While the majority of the groups were dull, the West Australian Market Trust group distinguished itself by an all-round advance, which was led by Northern Territories, the rise in which to 2 I mentioned last week. The price has now jumped to $3\frac{3}{16}$, and some information of a most favourable nature has been published. It appears that advices have been received from the property, according to which considerable bodies of high-class ore have now been exposed, after the shafts which had been sunk by the Chinese had been cleared of water, and it is believed that a large amount of gold-bearing ore is in sight. The other shares of this group have also improved, Associated Gold Mines being quoted $4\frac{1}{8}$; Associated Southern, $1\frac{3}{16}$; while Associated North Western have taken a jump to $1\frac{1}{16}$. The latest rumour is to the effect that an amalgamation of all the Associated Companies is in contemplation. Lake View South stand at $1\frac{1}{2}$. West Australian Joint Stock Trust have hardened in sympathy with the other finance shares of this group to $2\frac{9}{16}$, West Australian Loan and General Finance being quoted $1\frac{13}{16}$, and West Australian Market Trusts stand at $1\frac{1}{4}$-$\frac{5}{16}$. Of crushings, the list this week is not so extensive, but it contains some very satisfactory results, being as follows:—

Lake View Consols ...	5,026	4,576	14 dwt.

The Lake View Consols output would have been larger, had not the twenty old stamps broken down. It was only a question of time when this old battery would become useless, and now ten new stamps are being erected instead alongside the forty-stamp mill, which will probably commence working this month. The crushing of 5,026 tons yielded 4,576 oz. of gold, the cyanide return from 3,527 tons was 2,607 oz., and with the concentrates of 371 oz., the total output for January is brought up to 7,554 oz., against 8,615 oz. in December. Mr. Callahan, however, cables that with the new filter presses and the additional ten stamps at work, he expected to increase the monthly return to between 11,000 and 12,000 oz. The occurrence shows that unforseen delays must always be expected in connection with mining enterprises, and that, therefore, my advice to clear profits when the shares rose to 12 was sound. At the present price of $10\frac{3}{8}$ Lake View Consols should certainly be held, as the output will henceforth doubtless increase. The manager also cables that the experimental treatment of telluride ore has been successful, and that he has ordered plant for the treatment of this ore with a capacity of 100 tons per day. This should yield large returns, as the telluride ore is known to be very rich. Further ore bodies have also been cut, the assays of which vary from 1 oz. to 7 oz. per ton. At the Ivanhoe meeting very satisfactory statements were made, and the shares are firmer at $6\frac{5}{16}$. The day of the special settlement should be announced almost immediately. The various meetings of the sub-Companies of the London and Globe Finance Corporation, which have been invited to amalgamate in the new Exploration Company, have been adjourned to the 23rd and 25th inst. I think that this was the proper course to take, for, as I stated last week, particulars of the other mines which were to be combined in the same Company should be furnished. The matter may now be left to the respective Boards and to the committees which have been nominated to confer with the Directors. They will, doubtless, now obtain all the information available, including the accounts and balance-sheets of their Companies, and if these should prove satisfactory, no better solution can possibly be found than the combination now contemplated, which will be supported by so powerful a Company as the London and Globe Finance Corporation, and obviate separate reconstructions. By joining this exploration Company the shareholders should have a fair prospect of making good their losses. West Australian Goldfields have remained dull at $2\frac{3}{16}$, chiefly owing to the protracted illness of the head of the group, whom I hope, however, to see in the City again shortly. Hampton Plains have also been inactive at $1\frac{1}{16}$. Hannan's Brownhill have again shown strength, the price having now reached $8\frac{1}{8}$, and the other shares of the London and West Australian group have also been firm, East Murchison United at $1\frac{1}{16}$, Consolidated Murchison at 6s. 3d., Sons of Gwalia at $2\frac{1}{8}$. A cablegram from the Sons of Gwalia Mine states that the January crushing of 1,260 tons yielded 1,577 oz. of gold, while the tailings are stated to assay 25 dwt. per ton. Golden Horseshoes have been fairly steady at $8\frac{5}{16}$, and Lady Shentons, after advancing to $3\frac{5}{8}$, have reacted to 3. Further favourable information has been received from the property, the latest news being to the effect that the winze from the No. 4 level has been sunk 7 ft., showing 4 ft. of high-class ore. The view of insiders is that the shares may any day start again on the up-grade. In the meantime, a good deal of attention is being directed to the Florence Gold Mine, which adjoins the Lady Shenton. The Company was recently reconstructed, and therefore has ample working capital, and the Lady Shenton lode has been struck close to the boundary, so that there can be no doubt now that it runs through the Florence Mine. Under these circumstances, Florence shares, now quoted $\frac{3}{4}$, are likely to rise to a higher level. Great Boulder Proprietary have been quiet at 23s. 9d., but with the return of Mr. John Waddington, a good deal of fresh information will doubtless be available. North Boulders, after improving, are easier again, and Burbank's Birthday Gift remain dull at $1\frac{5}{8}$. Hannan's Props. have been firm at 16s., but business in Kalgurli has been less active, the quotation being now $6\frac{1}{8}$. At the meeting of the West Australian Development Association, Mr. Nicolas, the mining engineer who was responsible for the favourable reports on the McKenzie and Armadale properties, at last put in an appearance. Curiously enough, Mr. Nicolas complained that he had been denied an opportunity of meeting the shareholders in order to explain his true position, and the position of affairs generally. Who, then, is responsible for this extraordinary state of things, and why, and by whom, was Mr. Nicolas denied his opportunity?

Indian, Australasian, and British Columbian Mines.

A firmer tone has prevailed in the Indian section under the lead of Mysore Gold, which have improved to $5\frac{7}{16}$. Advances have also occurred in Ooregums and Nundydroog, but Mysore Reefs are lower. In Australian mines, other than West Australian, Mount Lyell have eased off to $14\frac{1}{4}$, while Mount Lyell North are quoted $3\frac{5}{8}$, Mount Lyell West 14s. Mount Morgan are slightly lower at $4\frac{7}{16}$, and Aladdin's Lamp are quiet at $1\frac{3}{4}$, Broken Hill Proprietary at $2\frac{1}{8}$. In the New Zealand section Consolidated Goldfields of New Zealand, Waitekauri, and Taitapu have improved, but New Zealand Joint Stock and Waihi are lower. In the British Columbian department Klondike North-West Territories are better, but London and British Columbian Goldfields have given way. A very strong tendency has been shown by Waverley Gold, which I recommended when quoted $1\frac{3}{8}$, and which have now risen to $1\frac{3}{4}$. British America Corporation shares have been quiet at 2s. 9d. to 3s. 3d. premium, but I should not be suprised to see these wake up very suddenly. In the Mexican section Consolidated Goldfields of Mexico have been firm at $1\frac{7}{16}$ to $1\frac{9}{16}$ on the favourable report of the manager, while Grand Central have been dealt in at $1\frac{3}{4}$. From the Campana mine advices continue favourable, and a cablegram has just been received stating that in laying the pipe-line a new discovery has been made of very rich alluvial gold. Very tardily, the Directors of the Golden Feather Company have come to the conclusion that the upper part of the river bed has been so thoroughly mined by the old workers that they are not justified in recommending any further outlay in reopening that portion of the claim. Of course, the Directors now propose to acquire another property, and there experiments are to be made by a new Company to be formed. I should think that the shareholders would not throw any more good money after bad.

Persia on the War-Path.

According to a Times cablegram from Teheran, Sir Abdul Kasim Khan, Nasir-ul-Mulk, G.C.M.G., who was last year Ambassador to England on a special mission, has been named Minister of Finance. I suppose this has something to do with the rumours of a coming Persian loan which have recently been current. This time Paris appears to be selected for the operation, and, of course, London will again be appealed to. I hear from Paris that the Imperial Bank of Persia has been trying to get prominent bankers in that city, whose names can easily be guessed, to take up the new loan of about £1,500,000, but that so far no success has crowned these efforts, chiefly because the French Government is throwing cold water upon the scheme, no doubt in order to protect the French public. Be this as it may, the Persian Government have failed in that quarter, and it is just possible, if not highly probable, that in their extremity they may have recourse to the London market. Here they should not have much chance of success until certain outstanding claims have been adjusted. It will be remembered that the Persian Ambassador in London received in 1890 the sum of £40,000 for a concession which the late Shah granted while enjoying England's hospitality, but which was revoked when he returned to his own dominions. That is one of the reasons why, at the time when a loan of £500,000 was offered some years ago, merely £11,000 were taken up here, and why also eighteen months ago when an application was made to the Stock Exchange for a quotation the Committee refused to grant it. That the Stock Exchange is still of the same opinion I make no doubt, and I would certainly caution the public against exchanging hard cash for what will doubtless be, as the Easterns say, worthless Persian paper promises.

New Enterprises and Issues.

The prospectuses of the following new enterprises and issues have been placed before the public during the week:—

The Amazonas Rubber Estates, Limited.—This Company is formed to acquire and develop the India-rubber estate situate in the municipal district of Teffé, in the State of Amazonas, Brazil, covering an area of about 137 English miles, and for the purpose of carrying on the business of rubber growers, manufacturers, shippers, &c. The capital is fixed at £300,000, divided into 150,000 Seven per Cent. Cumulative Preference and 150,000 Ordinary shares of £1 each.

Avondale Hotel and Restaurant and Hatchett's Restaurant, Limited.—With a share capital of £200,000, divided into Six per Cent. Cumulative Preference and Ordinary shares of £5 each, also a Four per Cent. Debenture stock of £125,000, this Company is formed to acquire "The White Horse Cellars," at the corner of Piccadilly and Dover-street, and the well-known "Hatchett's Restaurant." The premises are fitted with all modern improvements for carrying on a first-class hotel and restaurant.

The "De Windt" Exploration Company, Limited.—This Company is formed for the purpose of acquiring, developing, and working gold and other mines, and carrying on general trading businesses in Klondyke, British Columbia, and Alaska, and generally of turning to practical profit the experience gained by Mr. H. De Windt in his explorations in this district, and also of purchasing and taking over the properties, &c., acquired by the Explorers and Travellers, Limited. The capital is £250,000 divided into shares of £1 each.

The "Excel" (British and Colonial) Milk Sterilizing Company, Limited.—With a capital of £100,000 in shares of £1 each of which 60,000 shares are set aside for working capital, this Company has been formed to acquire the patents of the "Excel" Sterilized Milk Company, Limited, of No. 1, Vandon-street, Westminster, and to provide the necessary working capital to develop the increasing business of the said Company.

Cicero and Proviso Street Railway Company.—This is an issue of $1,700,000 Five per Cent. Consolidated Mortgage Gold bonds at par. They are redeemable on May 1, 1915, and the principal and interest are guaranteed by the West Chicago Street Railroad Company.

The objections to these bonds are, firstly, that according to the revenue account for the year ended January 31, 1897, the earnings did not cover the charges, a deficit of $212 being shown; secondly, that no definite statement is made that the West Chicago Company guarantees payment of principal and interest in United States gold coin; thirdly, that the bonds run over too short a period, viz., to May 1, 1915, to be suitable for British investors, while they will not have first mortgage rights upon the property until 1904. This is not, therefore, a bond to be recommended for investment.

Leeds and Batley Breweries, Limited.—This Company is formed to acquire the businesses of R. & H. Sykes & Company, of the Soothill Brewery, Batley, near Leeds, and Cutler's Saville Green Brewery, Leeds, including fifty-one licensed houses, twenty-three licensed hotels, beer-houses, and off-licenses, with a considerable number of shops, cottages, and parcels of building land. The share capital is fixed at £225,000 in £1 shares, of which 125,000 are Five and a Half per Cent. Cumulative Preference shares, and an issue of £200,000 Four and a Half per Cent. Irredeemable First Mortgage Debenture stock at the issue price of £105 for £100 of stock.

Marshall & Snelgrove, Limited.—This Company has been formed to acquire the business of Messrs. Marshall & Snelgrove, which was established in 1837 at Vere-street, Oxford-street, London, and at Scarborough. The share capital is fixed at £550,000, divided into Preference and Ordinary shares, and an issue of £225,000 First Mortgage Four and a Half per Cent. Debenture stock is now made at the price of £106 per cent. The whole of the share capital is held by recent or former members of the firm.

My Letter Box.

The following are replies to inquiries from various correspondents:—

Government, &c., Bonds.

Constant Reader, Hotel Metropole.—I certainly should not advise a purchase of Hungarians as an absolutely safe investment. I should prefer Colonial Government bonds, or the gilt-edged American Railroad bonds of which I gave a list in last week's issue. Twelve-Month Reader.—No such lists of lottery-bonds are available, but you ought to get the information you require from the people through whom you purchased your bonds, if any. E.B.—What you state with regard to Ecuador bonds is ancient history, and I do not look for anything as a result of the efforts of the American-German syndicate mentioned by you. You will find some remarks as regards the position of Ecuador under "Foreigners and South Americans."

Banks, Trusts, and Financial.

L. W. H. T.—With regard to your elderly lady friend, who has been sending large sums of money to a Hamburg lottery agent, I cannot possibly obtain any special information about the person in question. Most of the intermediaries are shady, and if she is badly off, it is altogether unadvisable to speculate in foreign lotteries. Jumper.—You must really tell me what kind of securities you require before I can advise you. Horseshoes.—1. Outside brokers, and not members of the Stock Exchange. 2 and 3. I advise you to deal only through members of the Stock Exchange, and certainly not to deposit securities with outside brokers of whom you know nothing. N. A. T.—You should apply to the Official Receiver with regard to the Amalgamated Syndicates, Limited (Jubilee); so far no distribution appears to have been made. 2. London General Omnibus shares appear to be high enough, in view of the impending competition of electric railways in London. Insurance.—The life offices mentioned are wealthy American institutions. There is nothing to be said against their means, which are ample, but I do not think that they now score as regards terms in comparison with English offices. M. J. B.—I do not approve of the concern mentioned. None of this kind of enterprises fulfil the promises of the prospectus. The certificate is returned.

Home Rails.

Z. A. Y.—Amongst Home Rails the best purchases just now are Dover "A," Caledonian Deferred, and Metropolitan Districts. Jumbo.—No option but to hold, there being no market for these. E. B., Streatham.—I do not think there is any prospect of Vestas having a big rise as the dividends of the Heavy lines have been mostly disappointing. They will probably maintain their present value.

American and Foreign Rails.

J. G.—Erie are in the ascendant. Both the Ordinary and Prefs. are advancing, and are likely to reach a higher level. This also applies to Atchison Prefs., which should be held for a rise, but as you have a big profit on Louisville you might as well take it on any further improvement. Expectant.—There is no chance of the bondholders in question receiving any dividend at present, but prospects are distinctly brightening. Inquirer, Sidmouth.—I think that you have forfeited your holding by not joining the reconstruction. Prospects seem to have somewhat improved. Jumbo, Dublin.—The reorganisation of the Baltimore and Ohio has not yet been actually accomplished, but it is hoped that the scheme will shortly be placed before the holders.

Mining Shares.

Qui Vive.—Amongst the South African mines mentioned by you, Meyer and Charlton and South African Gold Trust are the best purchase. Dunedin.—You should certainly hold the Mining shares Nos. 1 to 5, and 7 and 8 for an improvement. No. 1 might be averaged. Coras should be held. Coffee.—Prospects of this West Australian mine are doubtful, and it is impossible to say whether it will ever prove successful. Highgate.—Hold Lydenburg Estates for a recovery. Thornton.—I do not advise investment in the Sulphide Reduction Company (New Process). J. H., Cambridge.—I cannot, obviously, obtain the information for you which the Secretary, in the interests of the shareholders, declines to give. I should say you might leave the matter in the Directors' hands. Henri.—The West Australian shares, No. 1, should be held for a recovery. You might hold Waihi for the price named. 3. The recent incident was certainly adverse to the Globe Venture Syndicate, and prospects are by no means rosy. Duchess.—Yes, you should average London and Globe now. Amongst the shares mentioned by you, Florence (3), Brownhill Central (2), and British America Corporation (5) are the most promising. Broach.—1. Within the next three months. 2. Yes. 3. Always be satisfied with a moderate profit. 4. There is every prospect of a further rise in Lady Shenton. 5. Good profits ought to be taken. You might sell half. Demos.—I can trace nothing about "The Great Tywarnehaile Mining Company," a Cornish mine, the share certificates of which are dated 1860. It remains to be seen whether any readers of Truth can help you with information. They will doubtless do so, if possible. Ivy.—I am glad you bought Lady Shenton at the time, on my advice. You should hold for a further rise. I do not think much of the other concerns; but please to number your inquiries in future. Clare.—You will do all right with the Lady Shentons, London and Globe, and British America Corporation. Amongst Nos. 1-5, I approve only of No. 2 as a purchase. Fedora.—Hold Lady Shenton, London and Globe, and Hampton Plains. Sell the others when you see a profit. W. W.—You might buy Lady Shentons in the reaction, also Lady Florence. A. O. N.—All your South African shares should be held for a rise. X. Y. Z.—The shares are well selected and should be held for a rise. G. C.—No, I do not consider the Buffelsdoorn Estate as hopeless, and there is every prospect of matters turning out better. The shares should improve, when the present depression in the Kaffir Circus passes off. C. H. E.—No, I do not recommend Fairley's Creek. W.—Prospects of Mawson's Reward appear very doubtful. I do not recommend investment in any of the other shares mentioned. Anti-Humbug.—If you are a shareholder you will see the full reports of the meetings at which the whole matter is being threshed out. The shareholders in meeting assembled will judge of the matter, assisted by a Committee of Inspection, and that should be conclusive. T. P., Hampstead.—These four mining shares (1-4) are by no means promising now, but you should hold for a recovery, which is not impossible. Nemo, Glasgow.—I cannot see any indication of persistent falling away of Lake View Consols. The price is $10\frac{3}{8}$, and that is, I think, full present value. When the price rose to 12 I advised realising. Eventually, when the crushings increase, the price will probably advance. I do not believe the tale about the "Bear" sales. Plunger. The news from the mine appears to be favourable, but take a good profit. C. K. R.—Fair mining risks, especially No. 3. Cork.—No. 1 is preferable to Nos. 2 and 3 just now. Langside.—There is no other reason for the decline and a rise is probable. G., Bath.—1. Prospects of the Florence Mine appear very favourable. 2. £1 shares, 15s paid. 3. Cons. Murchison are 10s. shares paid up. 4. Lady Shenton should be bought on the reaction. Bimbashi.—This may have been the price in the morning. 2. Florence mining shares. Warrington.—Yes, the Waverley Mine (British Columbia) looks promising. Having bought Lady Shenton on my advice at $2\frac{1}{8}$ and sold at $3\frac{11}{16}$, you might now buy again on the reaction. I am afraid I cannot introduce the feature recommended by you; it savours too much of the common tipster. Grumpy.—1. Yes, the exchange would be advisable. 2. Not much chance. M. E. R.—There is no reason why you should not buy W. A. Market Trusts as intended. Trevor.—1. A fair mining risk, the shares are likely to improve. 2. For 1897 the dividends amounted to 16s. per share.

INDUSTRIAL SHARES.

E. Y.—Under the circumstances there is no option but to hold your Bovril shares. J. M., Durham.—I do not think that a special settlement has so far been granted; but, of course, I take it also that you have not yet paid for the shares. The offices of the Company are at 103, Hatton-garden, London, E.C. I cannot reply by letter. Matlock.—1. A fair industrial investment, but very speculative. 2 and 3. Fair investments, but quite high enough. Brown.—I have never been in favour of No. 3; but Nos. 1, 2, 4, and 5 should be held for a rise. J. M.—This Company has been very disappointing, but the shares may recover. Matlock.—The investment No. 2 would undoubtedly be the best. Trutta, Waterloo.—1. I have always warned my readers against buying United Altal's shares. 2 and 3. No catch. 4. A fair industrial investment. T. K.—1. No information available here. 2. Impossible to tell without having the prospectus before me. I cannot reply by letter. A. M.—Yes, the West Australian Timber Companies deserve attention, especially Millar's. C. C., Northumberland.—Cheap enough, but I am not sure that they will recover soon. C. M. Edin.—In time the monopoly will, doubtless, be overthrown, but not yet.

MIXED INVESTMENTS.

Peter.—1. Fair mining risk. 2. Yes. 3. Sell on a further improvement. 4. A fair low-priced share, but no catch. 5. Promising. D. P. H.—1. Outside brokers; deal only through members of the Stock Exchange. 2. Hold for a possible recovery. 3. Take a good profit when you can get it. 4. Certainly hold Ivanhoe for a further rise. X. Y. Z.—No reason to make any change in your investments, Nos. 1 to 10. Hastings.—1. Yes, hold Can. Pacs. as an investment. 2. No reason to sell Mexican Central Four per Cent. Gold bonds. 3. I do not care for this kind of investment. Z. X. Y.—I. A local concern, concerning which I cannot obtain any information here. II. Yes, the Standard Bank of South Africa is a prosperous bank, and the investment is promising. III. and IV. are good securities of the kind. No reason to sell Nos. V., VI., and VII. now. Londonderry Reader.—1. A fair investment. 2. No catch. Klondike.—1. No, these Heavy lines are not doing well just now. 2. Apply to the Secretary. 3. Yes. You can buy them at 3s. premium for special settlement. Sperno.—Hold Nos. 1 to 5 for a possible rise. Don't hold Sewing Cottons (6) too long. I do not like the Tyre shares, Nos. 7 and 8, but they may recover. Grateful.—You will find what you want in my letter, but you should deal only through members of the Stock Exchange. Dubio.—A. Apparently the vendors of the Artificial Silk Spinning Company, Limited, are very anxious to get out, hence they sell their shares below the price of the market shares. This is a very doubtful concern. B. Not yet. Ndjole.—I am glad to hear you have done so well in Lady Shenton on my advice. As regards the shares Nos. 1-5, I should prefer No. 4 (Sons of Gwalia) and No. 5 (Hannan's Props.). Florence shares are very promising. See remarks under "Golden West Australia." Miles.—1. Yes. 2. You are right, prospects are not favourable. 3. Ditto. J. W.—1. Florence. 2. No, I do not recommend the Fish Oil shares. New York. — Yes, I have a favourable opinion of Missouri, Kansas, and Texas Second Mortgage bonds, but it is not a first mortgage. 2. A further rise is expected. I cannot reply by letter. Klondyker.—Hold Associated Southern Gold Mines. I do not think much of Golden Links. Timothy.—My rule is to answer only one letter from any correspondent per week, while you send three. I will reply exceptionally, but must ask you in future to conform to this. I cannot reply by letter. 1. Lady Shenton are expected to further advance. 2. Nothing is known yet as to any coming dividend in Costa Rica Rails. I do not like the Mexican concerns. I do not approve of the gold mine mentioned, neither do I approve of the source whence it is recommended. The circular is returned.

VARIOUS INVESTMENTS.

Money has been in considerable demand during the week in connection with the settlement on the Stock Exchange, and the rate of discount on three months' bank bills has hardened to $2\frac{3}{4}$ per cent. Quite at the last there was a tendency to ease off, partly owing to the view now taken that the Chinese loan will not come off for the present, and for the same reason there has been a rise in Consols, which has also been assisted by purchases of the Government broker, an advance of $\frac{5}{8}$ being established for the week at $113\frac{1}{8}$ for the account. British Corporation stocks have been slightly firmer for similar reasons. Silver has not moved much, and is but slightly lower at $26\frac{15}{16}$d., while Rupee Paper has hardened a little to $63\frac{3}{4}$. The various Chinese loans are lower, the Seven per Cent. Silver Loan at 101, the Six per Cent. Gold Loan at 106, the Five per Cent. Gold Loan at 101. Japanese bonds have risen to $102\frac{1}{2}$, as Japan does not appear to be any more inclined to make warlike demonstrations. The various new Colonial issues have eased off somewhat, notably the West Australian Loan, which has dropped to $1\frac{5}{8}$ premium. The new New South Wales Loan remains at $1\frac{1}{8}$ premium, the new Cape of Good Hope Loan at $2\frac{7}{8}$ premium. In the cycle section Dunlop Deferred have hardened to 15s., while French Dunlops have been firmer at 5s. Humbers have been flat, the Ordinary falling 1s. 9d. to 13s., while the Extensions are 2s. 6d. lower at 7s. 6d. Cycle Components have eased off to $2\frac{5}{16}$, but Swifts are unaltered at $\frac{3}{4}$, while Singers are lower at 13s. 3d., and Amalgamated Tyres have dropped to 5s. 9d. In the Industrial market the Allsopp dividend was announced at the rate of 7 per cent., which was slightly above market estimates, and put up the price of Allsopp Ordinary to 167. The feature has been the improvement in Australian timber shares, Millars' Karri advancing to $2\frac{5}{8}$, Davies' Karri to $1\frac{3}{4}$. The former Company is stated to have concluded a large contract for street paving in Paris. Bovril Deferred have eased off to $\frac{5}{8}$, and Schweppe Deferred have been dull at 14s. 6d. xd., while Harrod's Stores have declined to $4\frac{7}{8}$. Lyons', on the other hand, have hardened to 3. In Spiers & Pond shares a recovery has followed on a relapse, and they are now quoted at 21. At first it was reported that the Company had lost the contract with the Chatham Company, but this they have obtained again, although on higher terms. It is also stated that Spiers & Pond are entering the field of light refreshment depots, and they have acquired thirteen shops from Stevensons. There is, moreover, quite a lively competition for Throgmorton-street custom amongst the leading caterers now. "It was too good to be true:" last week I was under the impression that the outside brokers had relaxed their attempts to beguile the public, but it seems that they had merely been taking a rest, and now a number of circulars have been forwarded to me which are being distributed by J. Edwards & Co., Talbot House, Arundel-street, London, W.C. They are headed respectively, "Continuation of profits," "Continued success," and "Another good profit," and announce the success of an operation in North-Eastern Consols, and a profit of exactly 20 per cent., which is a good deal more modest than the profits the firm used to boast of. The projected deals are to take place in London and North-Western stock, in Louisville and Nashville, and in Midland Preferred, and I should like to hear from any one who really receives a good profit in these operations. Currrie, Sons & Co., of 30, Craven-street, Strand, W.C., are also on the warpath with circulars, in which they boast that their last deal was closed at a profit of £50 on each £10 share. They are now opening another deal, which they say they can confidently recommend to their clients, and which they state they have every reason to believe will produce a profit of £80 to £100 on each £10 share. The circular also contains the notice, "We guarantee our clients against any loss in this operation;" but this seemed rather to refer to a deal then running than the one they are now forming, a quibble to which I may as well draw attention. I need hardly again say that it is quite impossible for Currie, Sons, & Co., or the persons who hide behind this name, to make such profits on the Stock Exchange. If they could, they would make them for themselves, and have retired as millionaires long ago. Some curious information has been vouchsafed to me by a reader of TRUTH, who has lost money with Douglas, Hungerford, & Williams, having unfortunately failed to profit by my warnings. A firm of solicitors, who advertised in the daily Press to the effect that those who invested money with Douglas, Hungerford, & Williams may hear of something to their advantage by communicating with them, told my correspondent that by an order of attachment they had laid their hands on £420 of the money left behind on the flight of the swindlers, and that the High-Sheriff of Devon was in some way or other holding the funds that come in on behalf of the swindled. My correspondent was shown a long list of names of victims, and the solicitors in question expected to pay 4s. or 5s. in the £ to these persons. Their charge was 5 per cent., and on a payment of £1 the name would be entered in the list. This is a very extraordinary story, and I publish it for the purpose of inviting communications from other readers of Truth who may know something about it.—Your affectionate Uncle, MOSES.

P.S.—Tuesday Morning.—Another Cuban scare has taken hold of the Wall-street Market, and a general set-back has occurred. It may be assumed, however, that, like so many other similar scares, the present one will pass away again, and that in due time a recovery will set in, when explanations are forthcoming concerning the Dupuy de Lôme incident, and when the Washington Legislators have closed their "Bears" in New York. QUEER STORY.

A PHASE OF FELICITA.

NOT every woman is a book in herself; some have natural limitations. The compass of a chapter, for instance, is sufficient for me. At least, it seems so, for I do not readily lend myself to getting beyond it. It is the hardest thing in the world to know whether or not one is a genius. To have all the feelings—or to think one has—of acknowledged geniuses is not enough. The difficulty, however, is to discover what is enough.

From the very first I was misunderstood. How well I remember my passion of tears in the nursery one day, at tea! Nurse assumed that I wanted more sugar in my cup. It was quite the contrary. I hated everything sweet. That distaste was, I fancy, the keynote of my character. I was born to the sweets of life, and despised the birthright. Comfort, conventionality, leisure, frivolity, I would have none of them. I had, however, to spend my youth in my parents' house and conform to its way of living. I was hampered by being an only child; furthermore, I loved my parents. Father was a delicious old thing; fussy, good-natured, and imperturbably good-humoured. Mother was simply too sweet for words, and so considerate and dependable. Still they misunderstood me. That is they did not know me as I knew myself. Then there was Cousin Peter—Sir Peter Pontifex. At one time, I had thought that he was the only one in the world who understood me. He used to discuss problems with me by the hour, and show such enlightenment and broad-minded liberality, sympathising in all my views and aspirations. To my bitter disappointment, when I was grown-up and just contemplating the beginning of a real life, founded on all my new ideas, he asked me to marry him. It was a great blow. A proposal from anyone would have annoyed me, but from Peter it was an absolute injury. He would not look at it in that light, however.

"I could not do a more handsome thing than offer you myself," he said calmly, "It is the possession—barring one—I prize most in the world. But anyhow, I can wait. I don't mind so long as there is no other fellow."

That "other fellow" was a downright outrage. No "fellow" of any sort or condition came into my scheme of life. Marriage was the conventional goal of woman's existence, therefore not of mine; as Peter ought to have known, as he did know, well. When I reproached him for his injurious words, he merely lapsed into imbecility.

"And you don't by any chance care for a poor devil whom you have known all your life?" he inquired.

It annoyed me to feel my cheeks grow crimson under his eyes.

"Good-bye, Peter!" I said abruptly, turning to the door. As I was leaving the room a soft "Au révoir, Felicita?" fell on my ear.

Jane P. Dempster was my consolation in this, as in all other worries. She it was who at first understood me—under her I had been consecrated to the "higher life" on which I was about to enter. Not an aspiration, a yearning, a soaring thought of mine, but met with a sympathetic response from her. The same spark seemed to kindle our souls, the same touch to set the chords of our hearts vibrating. Of course I told her about Peter, and of course she understood.

"Sir Peter ought to have known better," she said. "However, he will be sure to marry some one else soon. Men always do. Then you will be quite happy." Jane's rather pale blue eyes scintillated through her glasses. It was a curious way they had. "Meanwhile," she added, after a little pause, "we may look on the incident as closed."

My first step was to join the World's Woman's Association, of which Jane P. Dempster was the secretary and leading spirit. The members were not as numerous as they might have been, considering the magnitude of the work before us, and the enormous field over which it ranged. We made up in enthusiasm what was wanting in numbers, however; the spirit of aggression animating us would have been sufficient to kindle the biggest of battalions. We were bound to free our sex from the galling fetters, the remnants of Orientalism, which still held us in degrading bondage, and to break down one by one the barriers which an effete tyranny still opposed to our progress.

My career had begun in real earnest. The first meeting of the World's Woman's Association, after my enrolment, thrilled me to the core. The latch-key question was brought forward by Cilly (Cecilia) Smithson, one of our greatest speakers. Her impassioned address roused the warmest enthusiasm. Jane spoke, I spoke; in fact, we all spoke, and more or less together at times. It was magnificent, and it was war. Each of us, separately and singly, registered a vow not to rest, not to desist from strenuous effort until each was the possessor of a latch-key.

Who does not know the reaction which follows enthusiasm, the cool of the morning after the evening glow? I awoke next morning to the thought of the solemn pledge of the night before, with a half guilty feeling. I had been second to none in sounding fierce blasts on the trumpet of war. Yet what were the secret whisperings within my breast? Had I not, from the beginning, had misgivings about father and mother? They had been so cheerful about my joining the World's Woman's Association, and shown such a suspicious tendency to object to nothing that I did. It was a most embarrassing attitude, considering our warlike one. The want of opposition paralyzes attack; the prompt and polite removal of the barriers against which one is making a warlike advance takes the very heart out of the onset. I had to endure it, however.

"You want a latch-key, is that all?" mother exclaimed, on my broaching the subject; "a very reasonable desire. It will save Henry's time with regard to opening the hall door. You shall have a latch-key at once, my dear child."

"It is the symbol of emancipation," I said, struggling to bear up against mother's ready acquiescence, and her disconcerting allusion to the footman.

"I wonder what you mean by emancipation, Felicita?"

"Liberty, as young men have. We want freedom from conventionality, and all that sort of rubbish."

"Young men are, in their own way, just as conventional as young women."

"That may be, mother. But it is conventional for them to have absolute liberty. And that makes all the difference in the world."

"It does, indeed!" mother said with a pensive sigh.

I received a perfect ovation at the next meeting of the World's Woman's Association, when I produced the latch-key—the only one forthcoming. I must say that, in my heart, I felt a bit mean. But, I suppose many, under similar circumstances, feel the same. They know the secret of the triumph, which the others do not.

Next on our programme came the abolition of chaperons. Owing to my success in the latch-key business, I was called on to inaugurate the movement. And I was so fond of going about with mother! She was so interesting to be with, so comfortable. It was very awkward; but, of course, one's own weakness could not be allowed to stand in the way of the progress of our sex.

Before I had said anything to mother on the subject, however, she called me into her boudoir one morning.

"Your father and I," she began, "have been discussing your grievances. We regret that you should have any, as your happiness is the chief object of our lives. Henceforth, we mean to do all we can in the way of redressing them. We shall treat you exactly as if you were our son, not our daughter. Would you like to take rooms for yourself and live away from home?"

I gave a little gasp and stared at mother. She made the horrible suggestion in such a matter of fact way.

"Oh! no—no," I stammered. "It is not necessary. I should hate to leave you and father and live by myself."

"Well, I think you are right, especially as your freedom in coming and going does not even meet with the conventional interference of the footman in the matter of opening the door. Another thing," mother went on, "your maid's duties had better be assimilated to those of a valet. Let D'Arcy attend on you, as Gregory does on your father. She will no longer accompany you to shops, and so on. I will not interfere with regard to your going about alone. Now, in the matter of my chaperonage. Of course you want to get rid of it also?"

"Don't, mother, don't," I interrupted, forgetting at the moment the mapped-out work before me. "As if I should ever want to get rid of you! As if——" I stopped short, remembering. My face grew crimson.

"My dear child, I know that the 'advanced' programme abolishes chaperons. So, if ever you do want to abolish me, remember, I shall not stand in your way. A mother can be 'advanced' as well as a daughter. The only difficulty will be in the case of mutual acquaintances. They might happen to want us both, and at the same time."

"They will always want you, mother, and so will I. And you must not talk like that." I threw my arms round the dear thing. Not for me would be the chance of distinction as pioneer in the anti-chaperon movement. Let Jane Dempster, who had no mother, take the lead. I would work some other branch.

I still saw a good deal of Peter. He came about the house as usual. The slight disturbance in our relations with each other had passed. He, like Jane Dempster, evidently looked on the incident as closed.

"I am thinking of joining the 'higher life,'" Peter announced. He had lunched with the family, and was lounging in a chair close by the bureau at which I sat writing. "I like what I hear about it."

"From whom? Who has given you information about what you are pleased to call the 'higher life?'" I inquired.

"Competent authority. I have learned that it includes latch-keys, drinks, and tobacco."

"Did your competent authority use those refined expressions?"

"The expressions are my own; le style c'est l'homme. I am to have an object-lesson in the subject too. I shall be a guest at your next smoking concert."

"I presume that some one has invited you," I said, carefully concealing my surprise at the announcement.

"You are correct. I am going to become a 'higher man.' It was latent in me. I mean to repress the noble yearning no longer. I have met the most charming being in the world; she is a 'higher woman.'"

"Not Nelly Thurston!" I could not help turning round in my chair and looking at him. The idea was so preposterous.

"Why not?"

"I didn't think you liked that kind of girl."

"I think I like all kinds of girls. What kind do you specially allude to?"

"Pink and white doll faced girls, who think of nothing in the world but flirting."

"Oh! it is all right when it's the 'higher' flirting."

"Of course, it's nothing to me who you like or dislike. If you are Nelly Thurston's guest it's no affair of mine."

"Nor of hers. I haven't the pleasure of knowing the young lady."

"Then why did you say it was she?"

"Pardon me; I didn't. You did. I never contradict ladies. Miss Dempster is my friend."

"Not Jane?" I exclaimed, in unmitigated surprise. She had not told me! She to whom I had told everything!

"Is that her adorable name—Jane?"

"Jane P. Dempster is our secretary."

"Jane P. sounds nice." Peter stroked his moustache thoughtfully. "The Dempster spoils it. Fortunately," he added, slowly, "it's not a fixture."

I had never associated Jane Dempster with anything of the kind. Therefore I, naturally, could not help noticing—as others did, too—when she sat out the whole evening with Peter. She looked so different, also. Her eyes—she was not wearing glasses—were quite pretty; especially if one was not near enough to see their washed-out want of colour. She was not really old, either; not older than Peter, probably. I had always known that she could talk, it became evident that she could listen as well. How interesting she seemed to find Peter! It was absurd; but, somehow, I could not help thinking of her sympathy with me and her advice, her eloquence, too, on the subject of the marring of woman's career through philandering and marriage. She was strong even to severity regarding the first; and now—well, I know what I would have called it had it been Nelly Thurston instead of Jane. I did not exchange a single word either with Miss Dempster or Peter. I went home early, having a feeling of malaise—headache, I suppose—and the odious little Socialist poet with the "shock" of pale hair, was bothering me with his triolets; better, however, than the attentions of the scrubby esoteric Buddhist, usually in attendance on Jane, but thrown over that night for Peter.

"You seemed greatly attracted by my cousin, Sir Peter," I remarked to Jane at our next meeting. She had not made the faintest allusion to him, which, all things considered—my confidences and consultations with her—was very strange, a little irritating even. "He is certainly of the worthless, drone class, whom you condemn. He has not and is never likely to come to the front in any way."

"The man in the rear is also necessary to the battle. He has his post to fill," she said gravely.

"Are you aware that Sir Peter is a great flirt?" The very moment the hasty, unworthy remark had escaped me, I would have given worls to recall it.

"No, I know nothing on the subject you mention. Flirting, as you know, is not a method of our world." Jane's glance was cold. She had on her glasses now. And how faded she looked in the morning light!

It was not easy to avoid Peter. Being father's favourite relation, he was always appearing at some meal or other, or in some situation which made avoidance impossible. A glacial manner was my natural recourse. Peter had been very rude to me. We were all hostesses, more or less, at our association entertainments. In common politeness, for the sake of appearances even, he should have spared a moment or two to me out of the hours otherwise devoted.

"Your higher men," Peter began one afternoon, without taking any notice of my manner—I was at the tea-table, mother and a visitor at the far end of the room—"seem to balance their advanced views by some, which on certain subjects are absolutely mediæval. They do not wash nor cut their hair, nor shave in a progressive spirit. I don't think much of their tailors."

"I dare say they don't think much of their tailors either. They have something better to think of."

"The higher woman?"

I did not condescend to reply, but, leaving the tea-table, joined mother and her friend.

I could not, however, allow trifles to engage my mind. Rescued from frivolity, my life had been consecrated to high aims and earnest work. There was so much to be done; the whole world, sitting in darkness, to be illumined. The wideness of choice was in itself a difficulty. Where to begin? Strangely enough no one even suggested a beginning. After the latch-key business and the assertion of the anti-chaperon principle by the establishment of what Peter had called our "smoking concerts," we seemed disposed to rest on our laurels and sink into inglorious ease. No doubt we did as much speaking as ever—even more; but somehow there was nothing to show for it—no particular work. I could not shut my eyes to a change in Jane, our pioneer—the feminine Prince Rupert of our movement. Something had come over her, but what? My feelings regarding our inaction found vent one day. Jane received my outburst with a singular absence of her usual sympathy.

"You want to run before you can walk," she said, coldly.

"But you were always urging me to speed!"

"And now I advise a breathing time. A great deal has been done. We must pull ourselves together. The soldier who rushes unprepared into the battle is not the one who wins."

A familiar ring in the last phrase struck me. What did it suggest? With a sudden flash of memory the "man in the rear" came to my mind; as if Jane were falling back into line with him. I bit my lips hard to prevent any words coming, but from that moment I became aware of a little rift in the sympathy which had been so perfect between me and Jane.

I suppose we had done a great deal. I certainly often felt—as a personal experience—that we had. For instance, when going about alone and shopping without D'Arcy. I had been so accustomed to her assistance; and then people were often rude, staring at me and so on. For the first time it occurred to me that even independence might have, like dependence, its drawbacks. The cigarette, too, that my leading position obliged me to smoke at our association parties was a worry. Unfortunately, I had a natural distaste for tobacco, which opposition had not removed, father and mother making no difficulties about my smoking. Worst, of all, however, was the manner of the men; their unconventionality, their free and easy ways. And yet what miserable weakness to expect from them the old-fashioned deference and politeness based on the effete idea of woman as the weaker sex! Well might I cry shame on myself for the unworthy thought.

About a week or so after my conversation with Jane, mother and I went to a Gymkhana at Ranelagh. Although Peter was—I understood from mother—taking a leading part in the entertainment, we did not come across him. We had not met for some time. He had not of late come to any of the association "evenings," nor to our house. Not that I cast a thought to whether he came or not, but I sometimes heard father and mother wondering what had become of him. We left the ground early—getting bored—and took a short cut to the gate by a secluded walk. At a turn we suddenly came face to face with Peter, sitting under a tree, in earnest conversation with—Jane Dempster! No wonder I nearly gasped; an indescribable feeling came over me. Jane in muslin, chiffon, frills, and a "picture" hat! Jane at a Gymkhana! Or, rather, not at it, but sitting out with Peter!

We did not stop. I think that I quickened my pace, and mother did the same. Peter lightly waved his hand, Jane acknowledged our passing with a bow and a smile that was curiously irritating. Quite a thrill of annoyance passed through me. I thought of the "pulling together" process. Was Jane engaged on it now?

"She wants to marry Peter! That woman, Jane P. Dempster," I blurted out, when mother and I were in the carriage. "You saw her, didn't you?"

"Certainly. And I don't wonder," mother said, calmly. "Anyone might want to marry Peter. I consider him one of the most attractive men in England."

"But you don't know how she used to talk about men and marriage; and the things she said, the advice she gave, when I told her everything about Peter!"

"My dear Felicita, no one ever takes the advice she gives."

"But the deceitfulness, the inconsistency——"

"Not inconsistency," interrupted mother. "Miss Dempster agreed with you that Peter would not suit you; it is quite consistent of her to think that he might suit her."

"No, no, no! It is horrid and deceitful. How can I trust any of her principles? She may change them too. And she was so much to me."

"She will be a relation if she marries Cousin Peter," mother said, with a smile. "You can reproach her to your heart's content."

"Never! Not one word shall I ever speak to her again." I looked steadily out of the window; there was a kind of blur over the streets and houses and the passing vehicles. Something trickled down my nose. I furtively rubbed it away. It was so annoying to be deceived in a person.

Some would think, perhaps, that I was jealous, but I repudiate the idea. What did it matter to me whether Peter married or not? He might marry Jane, or fifty Janes, for all I cared. What mattered, however, was that I had been deceived in Jane; cruelly, bitterly deceived. Mother did not understand. Jane was atrociously inconsistent, and acting in direct contradiction to her professions on the subject of marriage. If false to one principle why not to all? The thought was dreadful; it opened up such awful possibilities. The ground seemed to crumble beneath my feet. Who was true? What was true? When Jane fell away who could stand? Was the hollow ring in all our professions? Were our aims and aspirations only "sound and fury, signifying nothing"? Illusions and disillusions, life is a mere alternating chain of them! Oh, those traitor doubts, too, those whispering within one's own breast!

My frame of mind was very perturbed at our next association meeting. I avoided Jane. There was no exception now, every one misunderstood me. I recklessly accepted Cilly Smithson's suggestion of going to the theatre that night. I neither liked her, nor the proposed entertainment. I liked it less when we met—evidently by arrangement, for Miss Smithson showed no surprise—the pale-haired poet, Auberon, and the Buddhist, Brown, at the door. They joined us, as if it was the most natural thing in the world for them to do. I thought the play would never end; Auberon's manner—he had placed himself beside me—was horrible, and grew more and more familiar and offensive as the evening went on. Cilly Smithson was entirely absorbed in her companion, Brown. My joy and relief were intense when we rose to go away. They did not last long. Miss Smithson either hurried on purposely, or Auberon delayed me, or, it may be, they acted in concert. As I reached the porch she was getting into a hansom. "Brown is coming my way, so we are off together," she called out, "you and Auberon can look after each other." She waved adieu, and was gone before I had recovered my dismay.

Perhaps I ought not to have been appalled, but I was. The self-revelation of the moment was the most complete of all the disillusions; I felt so terrified and absolutely helpless standing in the flaring gaslight with the odious creature beside me, and the hurrying indifferent crowd around. At another time I would have dreaded being alone in that place, at that hour; then I felt that there were far worse things than being alone. My heart almost stood still when Auberon's voice sounded in my ear.

"Here is our cab, jump in, pretty one!"

I suppose that I must have started and recoiled, for he went on in a low tone:

"Come now, don't affect squeamishness. I'm not going to desert you."

His dreadful smile made me shiver. A wild, voiceless cry went up from my heart, "Mother! Peter!" At the moment a step rang on the pavement, the familiar tones of a clear, commanding voice struck my ear. I don't know what the words addressed to Auberon were, nor what exactly happened. I only knew that in an instant I was clinging to Peter's arm, not as a drowning person to a straw, but with the blessed feeling of one who has reached an absolutely safe haven.

We were half way on our homeward drive when I asked Peter,

"How did you know that I was at the theatre?"

"Miss Dempster told me."

I had forgotten Jane until that moment. Her name—I don't know why—came on me like a douche of cold water. Involuntarily I drew further back into my corner of the cab.

"I'm sorry if I took you away from the enjoyment of Miss Dempster's society this evening," I said.

"Well, you ought not to be," he returned calmly. "And for that matter, you did not seem sorry to see me just now."

"I wasn't—but awfully, awfully glad. And I'm not ungrateful. I will try—yes, I will try—to like Jane Dempster again, for your sake, Peter."

"The adorable Jane! I should think any one might like her for her own!"

"I—I—hope—you will be—happy, Peter." For the life of me, I could not have prevented the shake in my voice.

"I intend to be." Peter's voice had a curious sound. And then——

Well, it is hard to remember, and would be still harder to explain what happened. But, it wasn't Jane at all—and it never had been—but always—me.

We were driving up to the door before I again thought of Jane. A sudden compunction entered my breast.

"You know, you acted horribly, Peter. She will be terribly disappointed. Poor Jane!"

"Poor Jane!" echoed Peter, thoughtfully stroking his moustache.

After this I feel bound to say that Jane received the announcement of my engagement to Peter with undisturbed serenity. The scintillation of her eyes even suggested a little smile. I was greatly relieved. She was very good, too, about my backsliding, and accepted my resignation of membership of the World's Woman's Association without any comment.

She and mother have since become great allies. I sometimes find myself wondering. But what nonsense! As if mother, Jane—yes, and Peter, too—were just a set of conspirators!

ART NOTES.

THERE is a picture on view at The Continental Gallery just now which it would be well for all London not to see. I refer to an oil painting by M. Jean Veber called "The Butcher's Shop." If, as rumour asserts, this picture was catalogued for the Paris Salon last Spring but not exhibited, I congratulate the hanging committee on the discretion which prevented what would have been a public scandal. I am not easily shocked, but I am bound to say that M. Veber has succeeded in shocking me. Never have I previously seen in a picture exhibition such a repellent canvas as "The Butcher's Shop." It is sickening, it is nauseating, it is disgusting, it is revolting! That my adjectives may not be considered too strong, let me explain briefly what this abominable picture represents. The butcher standing in the doorway, with coarse, bloated face and heavy bags under his eyes, is Bismarck. All around him is displayed his gruesome stock-in-trade. On hooks on each side of him are hung headless human corpses dressed for the market as the carcases of swine and oxen might be. Human quarters and legs and arms are exposed in serried rows. On the marble slab of the shop is an assortment of distorted human heads, that of Napoleon III. amongst them. This is bad enough, but it is not all. To make the picture still more revolting, the artist has filled up any available space still remaining with human hands and feet, and with gory specimens of the more esoteric details of the human anatomy. These are adorned with laurel leaves and rosettes such as are seen in a butcher's at Christmas. Then on the pavement in front of the shop, to accentuate the brutish horror of the whole scene, are Bismarck's two enormous boarhounds sniffing at their master's loathsome stock-in-trade. I do not think I need say any more. To describe such a picture as this is utterly to condemn it. The fact that M. Jean Veber is a painter of ability only makes the matter worse. I doubt if even the most unblushing of decadents could defend such a prostitution of art as this.

It is much pleasanter to turn to some of the other pictures which are to be seen at the Continental Gallery. M. Jean Veber himself, for instance, has several smaller works, which show how excellent a caricaturist he would be if he could exercise more self-restraint, and were content to be mordant without degenerating into morbidity. His portrait of the German Kaiser crucified upon a cross-hilted sword is already familiar, as it has appeared on the cover of a book published in Paris, with the title of "Guillaume II., Intime." One of the largest pictures in the exhibition—and it almost fills half of one of the walls at the gallery—is Henri Martin's "Vers l'Abîme." It is a new and not particularly convincing presentment of one of the tritest of moral allegories, the pursuit of elusive Pleasure by her infatuated votaries. Pleasure in this particular instance is personated by a light-o'-love damsel, with gauzy garments, and lower limbs that suggest an eccentric anatomical formation, to say the least. She also wears black mittens, and one of those particularly tasteless jewelled belts now in fashion; and is followed by a number of excited old and middle-aged gentlemen, wearing, as a rule, scandalously little clothing, and waving their arms with the unanimity of a well-drilled stage crowd. There is some masterly work in the picture, but it is not so striking and impressive as it is clear its talented artist meant it to be. For the group of works from the brush of M. Henri Evenepoel, inspiration has been sought in the cafés and brasseries of the "Quartier Latin." The result is some characteristic work in the school of Degas. There is an admirable picture by M. Tattegrain, much to be preferred to the repulsive work he exhibited a season or two ago. "A Great Catch of Whiting," as it is called, is on as large a scale as the Pilchard picture of our new Associate, Mr. Napier Hemy, and those who remember the latter will find it most interesting to compare it with M. Tattegrain's canvas. A small room at the Continental Gallery is devoted to the exhibition of a score or so of Mr. Charles Sainton's delicate and graceful "Silver Point" fancies, drawings made with a pencil or stylus of pure silver on paper prepared with a wash of opaque white.

MUSIC.

ORGANISTS' GROWLS FROM BRITAIN AND AMERICA.

IN reference to recent articles concerning the status and pay of cathedral organists, I learn that a committee has been appointed under the chairmanship of Sir Frederick Bridge, to investigate the whole question and to suggest a remedy. Several experts and others have given evidence, and, as indeed the correspondence I have myself printed will have suggested, some startling facts have been disclosed. The chief point, of course, is one of status. So far as salary is concerned, the average cathedral organist has, perhaps, little to complain of. His pay may be much lower than would be expected by the heads of other professions. But he has "pickings." The Guildhall School scheme, which seems to have sounded the death-knell of the medium teacher in London, has not yet generally extended to the provinces. Accordingly, the provincial cathedral organist as a rule gets plenty of teaching. Also, as has been proved in more instances than one of late, the musical Romeo has an excellent chance of meeting with an opulent provincial Juliet, a species of romance which I need hardly say richly gilds the cage of the organ loft.

The Greatest of all Pianofortes.—The Steinway Pianofortes. New York and London.

Indeed, what the Cathedral organist chiefly now needs is some sort of fixity of tenure. In "new foundation" Cathedrals he has it, or, at any rate, legally should have it; for the evidence collected by Sir F. Bridge's committee, I believe, shows that Deans and Chapters, by appointing men at three months' notice, have acted ultra vires. But Sir Frederick has certainly not moved before it is full time, for there is a well organised clerical attempt to take away the rights of organists. In many of the reports of the Cathedral Commission, Deans and Chapters, while safely conserving their own positions, have blithely suggested that the organist should be placed more than ever under the control of the Precentor (usually either a non-musician or, even worse, a specimen of the genus, enthusiastic musical amateur), and should be liable to dismissal at will.

The church organist is supposed to be in a worse position, though I learn from a protest issued by the American Guild of Organists that in the New World matters are no better. There it is the custom to elect annually the organist, the director of the music (who is often not identical with the organist), and the members of the choir. The idea of vested interests is abhorrent to a free Republic, and, accordingly, every Easter there is a vigorous canvas, in which the fair sex take a very prominent part, to oust the present organist in favour of a perhaps better looking new comer. American Church committees, it is bluntly said, often know more of pork packing than organ playing, of whiskey vending than worship music, and bright-eyed canvassers carry the day. British Church organists, however much they may grumble at their lot, would certainly not be willing to change their own status for the American. And yet the American Church choir system has resulted in the formation of a whole race of opera and concert singers. The American Church is not State endowed, and in order to attract paying congregations at all good singing is essential. Hence, as choirs are selected every May, the singers, from their youngest days, are subject to constant criticism and competition, the best mount upwards to better paid churches, and the best of all are sent (often at the expense of wealthy members of the congregation) to study in Europe for the regular profession. Many great vocalists, from Mme. Albani and Mme. Nordica downwards, have started their careers in this way.

Mme. Patti is not going to retire, and the reports which have so persistently been sent to this country from the Continental papers are purely imaginative. Her contract with Messrs. Harrison extends to the next century, and so far as the present year is concerned, she has already arranged to take part in the Crystal Palace Festival on June 25, besides, perhaps, at one or two London concerts, and in October and November to undertake another provincial tour. It is true that the greatest soprano of her time has now just passed fifty-five, and that, in the natural order of things, her public life cannot last for ever. But the first signal of retirement will probably be a farewell American tour, which will be worth to her upwards of £50,000. Then will most decidedly come a farewell Continental tour, and lastly, a farewell tour in this country, and a final adieu possibly at the opera, and certainly at the Albert Hall. But it will not be in the present century.

By the way, a doubt has in some quarters been expressed concerning the exact day of the month of Mme. Patti's birth. Grove's "Dictionary" has, indeed, been called as witness by one enthusiast, although to cite Grove's Dictionary as an authority on dates seems amusing enough. As a matter of fact, Grove corrects his own mistake in an appendix. Mme. Patti's birthday was last Thursday. The following is a translation of the acte de naissance, which it will be of general interest to reproduce:—

Book of Baptisms, No. 42, Folio 153.—In the town and province of Madrid, on April 3, 1843, I, Don Joseph Losada, parish priest of St. Louis, solemnly baptised a girl, born at four o'clock in the afternoon of February 10, of this year, the legitimate child of Salvator Patti, professor of music, born at Catania, in Sicily, and of Catherine Chiesa, born in Rome. The paternal grandparents were Peter Patti and Conception Marino, and the maternal were Jean Chiesa, born at Venice, and Louisa Caselli, born at Marino in the Pontifical States. The child bears the names Adela Jeanne Marie. There assisted at the baptism as godfather, Joseph Sinico, born at Venice, professor of music, and as godmother, his wife, Rosa Monara Sinico, born at Cremona in Lombardy, to whom I have explained the duties they have contracted by this act; and as witnesses Julien Huezal and Casimir Garcia, born at Madrid, sacristans of this parish. In testimony whereof I have written, signed, and delivered the present certificate, April 8, 1843.—Joseph Losada.

I read in Musical News, a paper in which it was once said the staff, on scenting a bogus Mus. Doc., turned out en masse with scalping knives, that at an Eisteddfod, to be held at Pembroke Dock on Easter Monday, one of the adjudicators is described as "Professor B——." The editor, who signs his initials to the paragraph, waxes wroth, and describes this worthy man as giving his name "an unenviable notoriety, attaching to its possessor a suspicion of charlatanism which it does not merit." But there is an ancient proverb about the throwing of stones by those who live in glass houses. Musical News is the organ of the Royal College of Organists, whose hon. sec., in the advertisement of Trinity College, London, in the same number, describes himself as "Professor" E. H. Turpin, the director of studies being "Professor" Bradbury Turner. The sauce prepared for the goose is apparently spared from the gander.

A daily paper which apologises for Signor Randegger in regard to the engagement of an imported band for the Imperial Institute, and to the preference shown at the Norwich Festival for Italian operatic and opera buffa composers, refers to the writer who dares to offer such criticism as showing a "sad lack of knowledge." I suppose I am the culprit, and I have no doubt I ought to have declared Signor Bottesini's "Olivette" the greatest work ever written, Signor Mancinelli's "Isaias" the most popular of oratorios, and his "Ero e Leandro" a masterpiece among cantatas (or is it operas?). As I have not done these things, I must, of course, plead guilty to "sad lack of knowledge." But, perhaps, if the apologist had shown a trifle less zeal, he might more effectively have claimed that Signor Randegger, in favouring the Italians, was acting in a pardonably patriotic manner, and as his consciousness and racial predilections indicated. If I were living in Rome, I very possibly should champion the cause of British music and musicians. No one would, of course, blame me, whatever might be said about the Italian committee who allowed me to air my patriotism. So also nobody blames Signor Randegger, whatever may be thought of the conduct of the management of an "Imperial" Institute in employing him upon such a business.

The freshest excuse for the engagement of an Italian Band for the Imperial Institute is, however, of the lamest. The apologist in question does not for a moment suggest that the imported band is better than a British orchestra. But it is cheap. If, however, it be the same Scala band that appeared here under Faccio, at the representations of "Otello" at the Lyceum, about ten years ago, it is distinctly inferior to, say, the orchestras of the Alhambra or the Empire. But it will, we are told, play "on those terms which alone are possible to the Council of the Institute. The orchestra of the Milan Scala can accept the work because it fills up their off season, and is to them in some sort a holiday." Here, however, we find another instance of "sad lack of knowledge." As the Municipality of Milan have not renewed the subvention, La Scala has not been opened this year at all. Indeed, it has been closed since May, 1897—an "off season" with a vengeance. I believe, however, the imported band is not the opera orchestra of La Scala at all, but a concert enterprise.

But if for our "Imperial" institutions we are bound to import foreigners, because they work for less than the Briton, the matter should logically be carried further. A Lord Chancellor "made in Germany" would, I imagine, come much cheaper than Lord Halsbury, even if, like the ordinary restaurant waiter, he were not willing to pay for his berth in consideration of the pickings appertaining thereto. From France or Italy, too, I expect we could import an Archbishop of Canterbury at a much lower figure than 375,000 francs a year; while I am bound to say that there is many an American millionaire who would pay handsomely to exchange places and titles with the Prince of Wales. Indeed, if the mere question of bare economy be alone considered, a saving might, in the administration itself of the Imperial Institute, be made by engaging foreigners to do the office work. Whether this form of foreign-imported economy should be aimed at in a building erected by British subscription, and kept up by Englishmen, is altogether another matter. And on that point I am bound to say I should not ask the opinion of Signor Randegger, and still less of his newspaper apologists.

The fact that the whole house, from stalls to gallery, for the performances of "Der Ring des Nibelungen" at Covent Garden next June was sold out within three days of the issue of the prospectus is not at all surprising. It, doubtless, is largely due to the co-operation of M. Jean de Reszke. And unless M. de Reszke can be induced in 1899 to go to Bavaria, the present Covent Garden season will probably sound the death knell of Bayreuth. The Elect may still proceed there for "Parsifal." But nobody save a Wagner-maniac would, I should imagine, consent to waste his time and money in travelling to Bayreuth, paying through the nose for indifferent hotels and lodging houses, and giving £4 a seat, when the same opera can be heard in London with an infinitely better cast for 12s. 6d. to £5 5s. The average American will, I fancy, infinitely prefer Jean de Reszke and London to Burgstaller and Bavaria. But unless he hurries up he will have to pay heavily for his seats. There is even now a librarians' "corner" in them, and however much the Elect may declare against this form of speculation, it cannot possibly be prevented.

The Covent Garden doors are, as we know, to be closed before each performance, and, therefore, if "Das Rheingold" be given without break, a lazy cabman may cause the belated one to be shut out during the entire evening. As, however, "Das Rheingold" is the weakest work of the tetralogy, perhaps the philosophical may comfort themselves in the smoking-room. But the proposal to prevent any man going out is quite preposterous. I have no doubt it is also hopelessly illegal, though I do not suppose any ticket holder would provide himself in advance with a habeas corpus. Certain British adjectives, combined with a few stout kicks at the door, will amply suffice for egress for those wearied of grandmotherly Germanism. As to the other operas of the series I have no doubt what will be the result. Society will simply miss the first act, and will arrive after the dinner interval, namely, about half-past eight. Whether this absurd dragooning of audiences, restively tolerated in Germany, will pay in freer London after the first flutter is another matter. Meanwhile, the Bayreuth gentleman who has been over here to give us hints on stage business, has, I hear, solemnly been shown over the theatre by Mr. Morse, who triumphantly paraded a couple of Lowther Arcade goats for Fricka's car. They moved their legs after the manner of the dolls in "La Poupée," and were duly pronounced Kosher by the Teuton. A mechanical goat which moves its legs is a delight to your true Wagnerite.

Last week, so far as concerts were concerned, was the week of Amateur Orchestras. First we had the Stock Exchange band, which I fear has not improved since it lost, through ill-health, its enthusiastic conductor, Mr. George Kitchin. The best thing of the concert was the rendering, by Mr. Douglas Boxall, of Liszt's Hungarian Fantasia. A new piece by Mr. Bantock was only employed to play the audience out. The prophet, so far as musical London is concerned, rarely ever receives honour in his own land. The Royal Amateurs, on the other hand, have immensely improved since Mr. Ernest Ford became conductor, although on Wednesday they tried nothing more important than some overtures, the most difficult being that to "Die Meistersinger." On Thursday we heard the Strolling Players who, under Mr. Norfolk Megone, gave a capital account of several works, including Litolff's curious "Robespierre" overture. I fear, however, that the excellent music disturbed the conversation. For talking during a performance, the audience of the Strolling Players is hard to beat. On Saturday, Mr. Wood at Queen's Hall gave a splendid performance of Mendelssohn's "Italian" symphony and other works, while at the Popular Concerts, where Dr. Joachin is next Monday expected, there have been no novelties. We have also had two pianoforte recitals, the better of the twain being M. Slivinski in an overlong selection from the most interesting works of Chopin.

GIRLS' GOSSIP.

DEAREST AMY,—Now that you are back and settled down again after your wedding trip, you will be wanting to hear all the news about everything. Even a week away from home seems to make one drop the threads, and it is both interesting and amusing to pick them up again. So far as our little parcel of humanity is concerned, we have been amusing ourselves satisfactorily enough since our fleeting glimpse of you on your way through town. How full our beloved London is! And every one seems intent on buying new clothes. One's wardrobe has a knack of being disagreeably unsatisfactory when bright Spring suns begin to shine And, oh dear! How odiously soiled our houses look. Fighting the dust is a daily battle, and one in which many a warrior housemaid is worsted for lack of valour to do doughty deeds with dusters.

We had an excellent chance of learning all about the very newest fashions at the Duke of York's Theatre on Saturday in the new play, "The Dove-cot." As the dresses were made at Jay's they are sure to be well up to date. Miss Ellis Jeffreys has some perfectly delicious toilettes. The first is an afternoon costume of pink net trimmed with many bouillonnés. The sides of the coat are covered with lace and the long rucked sleeves are puffed like the skirt. A sash with long ends floating over the dress is made of black tulle. Another of her dresses is embroidered net with a deep collar and sleeves and a frilled sash of turquoise tulle. The elbow sleeves, with their drooping folds of turquoise tulle, are particularly pretty and becoming, and a telling touch is found in the large chou of black tulle on the left side of the bodice.

Miss Jeffreys' third gown is made of white China silk, with a number of tucks and insertions of Valenciennes sweeping in a lordly curve from the waist downwards and continuing in a deep flounce all round. On the bodice is a deep square collar, with lines of lace and insertion running upwards from the sides to the centre, this being now the orthodox shape of every bodice trimming, as well as of the upper line of low-cut dresses. The sleeves are tucked with lines of Valenciennes insertion. This promises to be a wonderful year for fine needlework of this description. The travelling costume is grey cloth, the skirt and sleeves being trimmed alike with straps of the cloth appliqué on the stuff, and also on the boléro, which is faced with white satin and lace, a little baby ribbon being introduced round the lace. The front is filled in with tulle, held with a large bow of turquoise glacé ribbon. From this description you will gather that the boléro is still represented among the fashions of the day after to-morrow.

Miss Sybil Carlisle's frocks are equally graceful and pretty. One is a white cloth with a deep flounce all round the skirt, opening at the foot in the centre to show a glimpse of white net pleated, and held with satin ribbons. A bow of black velvet ribbon holds the pointed velvet belt fastened with a buckle. The sleeves are trimmed with narrow bands of ribbon round them all the way down to the wrists, where, as well as on the shoulders, they are finished with lace, net, and baby ribbon. Her second dress is green foulard covered with lisse-embroidered white net,

"The Sunny South."—Messrs. Redfern have designed some becoming Costumes for wear along the Riviera, and which are now on view in their Showroom. Very moderate in price. Inspection invited.—Redfern, 26, Conduit-street, London, W.

and over this again a lace skirt with a lovely trimming of green chiffon roses embroidered with silver. The sleeves match the skirt, and there is a collar of paler green chiffon. A glorious bunch of Maréchal Niel roses forms a sweet finish to this lovely gown. Here, again, the belt is pointed, so you may draw your own conclusions.

In the third act Miss Carlisle wears yellow cashmere, with plissé cashmere sleeves. A collar and scarf of white chiffon, trimmed with lace and frilled with chiffon, are held with choux of white satin ribbon. Miss Desmond's pale green cloth gown is flounced round the skirt, the flounce being headed with two stitched bands of cloth. The bodice is finished with three little basques at the back, and a large collar of white satin, with a wonderful trimming of batiste, tucks, lace, and bands of cloth. The fastenings are steel buckles at the left side, the front being filled in with white tulle. Her second dress is a cream satin foulard, the skirt of which fastens up the left side. The bodice is a most deft arrangement of satin, bands of silver trimming, and the finest possible little puffings of snowy lisse massed together. A perfect La France rose nestles in the bodice.

So now you will know exactly what details of the mode you will be obliged to live up to in your character of bride exploiting her trousseau gowns after a week spent in Paris. If you fail to rise to the height of the occasion, it will not be my fault.

Miss Carlotta Addison wears some charming gowns in her character of Mrs. Brindle. One is a black moiré silk, the skirt of which opens down the front. The folded bodice is trimmed with a fichu-shaped collar finished with jet roses. From the elbow sleeves is a fall of pleated lace, a band of jet roses surrounding the arms below the elbows.

So much for dresses on the stage, which now reflect with fidelity the forthcoming fashions. Christabel, too, sends descriptions of stage dresses worn in a new play in Paris, so you cannot say that we have not done our duty by chiffons for you.

I hear that the Duchess of Devonshire, overwhelmed by the Court duties that devolve upon her owing to the illness of the Marchioness of Salisbury, is about to inaugurate a new departure in the matter of visiting cards. If the report be true, she does not intend to reciprocate by leaving cards in the usual fashion. The wives of our Prime Ministers have hitherto managed to combine pretty comfortably their social and political duties without indulging in the immunities till now reserved for Royalty. But then the Duchess of Devonshire is German, and therefore privileged. We might devise a new proverb to suit the occasion: "A German may do what an Englishman dare not, and a Scotchman may freely venture where even a German must not."

Now that the season will so soon be beginning, some one ought to evolve some original and powerfully-compelling plan of inducing the irresponsible butterflies of fashion to order their gowns in good time, and not to change their minds about their unimportant little trimmings at the last moment. Handsome prizes are given to the persons who wear the best fancy dresses, and would it not be a good idea to give prizes to the good souls who are considerate of the convenience of others, even of the poor workgirl and the harassed Court milliner, who is driven nearly wild, very often, by the silly vacillation of vain women, and their dilatoriness in giving their orders? Suppose a cinematograph were got up, showing the pale, tired girls at work in the long and sultry days of June. I should like one of the scenes to deal with the dinner-hour of the workgirls and that of the customers. What a contrast the two would form! I remember telling you some years ago of a visit I paid to some West-End workrooms, and I have never forgotten, and never shall forget, the poor little pitiful dinners that some of the young women had brought for the kindly housekeeper to cook for them. Among the two dozen meals laid out on the long table, ready for cooking, very few were of the sort to sustain a girl throughout a long day's work. A rasher of bacon with a couple of potatoes seemed the favourite menu, and a neatly trimmed, though not phenomenally large, chop looked quite lordly among the others. One meal, if so it can be called, consisted of a thick slice of dry bread and the thinnest slice of cheese I ever saw. The housekeeper told me that this was the usual fare of a girl who was earning a good wage, but had a crippled mother to support, and a "fast" brother, who would always keep the family poor. Fancy the contrast of this picture and of that. But the people to be impressed would be the very ones who would stay away. The prize scheme would be the better of the two.

There should be prizes, too, for those who pay their debts in decent time instead of keeping their unfortunate creditors waiting for their money in the usual fashion. It is so dreadfully mean to borrow money from one's tradespeople—and that is practically what these people do, and without any interest. A very great foreign lady owes no less than £2,000 to one milliner alone, and some of our own leaders of the fashion would be quite willing to emulate her if they could get the chance.

The matinée to be given at the Grafton Galleries on Friday of next week promises to be an amusing one. It is in aid of the Benevolent Fund of the Society of Women Journalists, and the best musical and dramatic talent in London has enlisted itself in the gentle cause.

What a pity it seems that our arrangements for laughing and our apparatus for coughing should be so mixed up with each other. At the Strand Theatre, where we enjoyed "A Brace of Partridges," the funniest play we have seen for a long time, whenever there was a roar of laughter there was also a synchronous chorus of coughing, one seeming to be inseparable from the other. We lost some of the good things of the dialogue owing to this. Would it not be nice if we could disentangle the two sets of machinery, which appear to have got mixed up? The first night's performance of a new play is always interesting, apart from the play itself. It is pleasant to study the critics who assemble in force on such occasions. We were interested to observe that directly the curtain fell after each act these gentlemen with one consent precipitately left their seats and rushed out, presumably to imbibe inspiration at some Pierian spring. We amused ourselves in their absence by speculating as to whether its limpid waters were bottled or merely on draught. We noticed Mr. Penley enjoying the fun with his well-known lateral laugh.

Miss Branson wears a pretty cycling costume in the first act. The skirt and Eton coat are dark-blue serge, and the front is filled in with the most extensive tie I have ever seen. The scarlet Tam o' Shanter on the top of the white wig is highly becoming. So is the bright red-currant coloured glacé silk in the second act, the trimming of which is well worthy a description. The pointed waist line is marked by a narrow band of black chiffon run through diamond slides, and a long, frilled black chiffon sash floats at the back of the skirt. At the neck a black chiffon frill finishes the collar at the back and sides, being deeper in the centre than elsewhere. In the last act Miss Branson wears a thyme-green cashmere skirt and sleeves with a bodice of brocade in paler tones of green, and relieved with green velvet, matching that in the toque, which is trimmed with shaded roses. Miss Aumonier looks very charming in her simple rural frocks, and on her wedding day dons a white muslin of the most fascinating kind, though still simple enough. The bodice is finished with a fichu, and the sleeves come to the elbows with a becoming fall of transparent muslin. In the first scene this young lady wears a most fascinating sunbonnet, but the colour is one that would not stand the sun for half an hour—a soft, pale heliotrope. This does not matter, however, for it is so becoming.

The popular Harry Steigert, whose skating it is always a delight to witness, is to have a benefit performance at New Niagara on Thursday afternoon. M. Steigert has such a host of admirers that there is certain to be a large attendance to see the exhibition of fancy skating which he and M. Charles Kurlin are to give.

Stooping.—A remedy should be immediately sought for a young lady inclined to round shoulders and a contracted chest. Consult Mesdames Sykes, Josephine, & Co., The Celebrated Anatomical Corsetières, 280, Regent-street, Oxford-circus, London.

Christabel writes from Paris:—

I now send you a description of some of the dresses worn by the actresses in the new piece at the Variétés called "Nouveau Jeu," played for the first time on Tuesday. The daily papers will, doubtless, have mentioned the plot and the new trick of the turning scene, so I will only say it is beautifully put on the stage, but I think in London the Lord Chamberlain would have some observations to make, and girls of the period would prefer leaving their mothers at home, for fear of their propriety being shocked, for in one of the scenes there is very slight clothing, and still less morality!

Jeanne Granier takes the leading part very cleverly. In the first scene, or tableau she wears a ball dress of pale grey China crêpe embroidered with silver and chenille, and small puffings of grey chiffon on the bodice, with a bunch of roses in the front, and a waistband of turquoise velvet. The opera cloak is turquoise velvet, the hood trimmed inside with silk muslin and lace, and round it frills of white lace spangled with silver.

Another dress is of prune velvet, with a deep flounce round the hem of cloth in the same shade, with velvet appliqué. On the bodice is a collarette of finely-pleated white muslin. The long cloak is prune cloth, rather drawn in at the waist, and lined throughout with ermine. In the fourth tableau her dress, a sort of tea-gown, is embroidered net over pink Liberty silk; at the top of the bodice is a large collar of the same, fastened in front with a bow of pink ribbon.

In the last tableau, before the magistrate, or juge d'instruction, she is soberly dressed in dark blue cloth embroidered with steel, and a black silk waistcoat.

Marguerite Caron wears in the second scene a very pretty gown of Nile green cloth. The flounce at the edge of the skirt and also the sleeves are embroidered in the Louis XVI. style, the black silk revers on the bodice being also embroidered. A fichu of white silk muslin passes under the revers and fastens at the side with a rose. In her next appearance she has on a brown cloth dress, the bodice made with a yoke of sky-blue velvet surrounded with white guipure forming a collar. Over this is worn a walking jacket of brown velvet trimmed with fox. In the last scene her dress is cloth of the shade of Parma violets, the bodice forming a short jacket, and embroidered. Mlle. Dieterle appears in the first scene in a very pretty gown of cream-coloured cloth, having a flounce with black cashmere laid on in a pattern and worked with gold. The walking cape matches it, and is embroidered in a similar fashion. In the next scene she wears geranium-coloured silk covered with black net handsomely worked with chenille and steel.

The costumes worn by Jeanne Granier and Marguerite Caron were made at Paquin's, also the rich, but thin and transparent, lingerie in the sixth tableau, which may be summed up with the words—morality at zero, and clothing very little above it.

Clare sends me the following from Dublin:—

Dearest Madge,—Humanity in general has a taste for climax; for getting to the top of a hill, though it be only—like the King of France and his forty thousand men—in order to march down again. Society—the small world which thinks itself great—rushes through life, but varies the monotony of the perpetual rushing by making special rushes to special places at special times. Thus "seasons" are made—climax after climax is reached. Every self-respecting place, on which Society condescends to bestow even a small degree of its favour, has its yearly climacteric, otherwise "season." Dublin is going through that period now, and with a most respectable degree of liveliness. One wonders why the world which amuses itself does not come more to the Irish capital—that is, on an independent basis, not as guests. It has attractions which other winter resorts cannot boast. Hunting to content the keenest craving for the noble pastime, and dancing by night. One has only to settle the matter with one's constitution and staying powers—whether one can stand flying across country by day and round ballrooms by night. It is wonderful what youthful enthusiasm can do in that connection, and still more so the capabilities of the quality even when no longer young. The elderly who frequent society with the zeal of youth are always a wonder to me, how they have managed to retain the "talent for living." Do you remember A. de Musset's marquise who says, "I am beginning to be thirty"—it takes a long time to quite reach it, however—"and I am losing the talent for living."

Society has had a good deal of opportunity for exercising that talent during this week in Dublin. The first State Ball of the season was given at the Castle on Tuesday evening, most of those who attended the Levee and Drawing-Room being invited to it. Two ball-rooms gave sufficient room for dancing. The portrait gallery was an extensive supper-room for the general company, whilst a smaller one was provided for the Viceregal party and the elect. How curiously ill-bred a division of one's guests into the select and unselect would seem to be. It is, of course, a Royal idea, like most things of the kind, and Viceroyalty must do likewise. What a subversal of the manners taught to us are those of Royalty and Viceroyalty. The best for one's self, and second best for the others. The Viceregal procession entered St. Patrick's Hall shortly after ten o'clock. The visitors and household made a goodly show, quite a bevy of girls being included amongst the former. The Ladies Mary and Victoria Innes-Ker, with their mother, the Duchess of Roxburghe, who was often to be seen at Dublin Castle in the time of her father's, the Duke of Marlborough's, reign, Ladies Kathleen and Florence Cole, Evelyn Crichton, A. Acheson, May Brabazon, Miss Corkran, and Miss Farquharson. Lady Cadogan must be very popular with her young friends, for no doubt a visit to the Castle during the season must be popular with girls, and give them a very good time. Also amongst the visitors were Lord and Lady Dartrey, Lord and Lady Gosford, Lord and Lady Castletown, and Lord and Lady Erne. Lady Cadogan was, as always, beautifully and richly dressed, in white, and with marvellous lace and wonderful jewels. Lady Lurgan is always amongst the best dressers, in a style peculiarly her own. White was much worn by the young girls, with much trimming of silver and other embroideries. Nothing looks so well, especially at a ball where uniforms prevail. The crowd was considerable, and, as usual, there were a good many wallflowers, very sweet ones too, such as have lately been a remarkable feature at Dublin Castle. In contrast to the State Ball, there was on the following night a tiny dance in the Throne Room, to which only a few young people, in addition to the "house party," were invited.

On Thursday night, mostly with the same company, the scene of the dancing was changed to Kilmainham, where Lord and Lady Roberts gave a ball in the big oak panelled hall of the Royal Hospital, "To have the honour to meet their Excellencies." Lady Cadogan and the Viceregal party were, on the following evening, at Lord and Lady Ashbourne's ball at their residence in Merrion-square. The house is a fine one, which used to belong to the Gort family, in the days when Lord Ashbourne's father, who was a solicitor, used to live in a smaller house quite near. What chances and changes there are in life! All ups and downs. And how little memory flourishes in the higher altitudes. How readily the "ups" forget that there were ever any "downs." The waters of Lethe are not for those who are down, however; the keen remembrance of better days completes the unhappy position. No doubt the English-speaking world is a world of snobs. How few there are who rise in the world that do not anxiously draw a veil over even a respectable, and probably happier, though lowlier, past.—Your ever, Clare.

Chestnuts and caramel make a lovely dish. This recipe is quite original. The spun sugar may be dispensed with, but it adds greatly to its charming appearance:—

Scald and remove the husks from 18 large chestnuts, boil them in sweetened milk until they will easily mash. Drain the chestnuts thoroughly and rub them through a wire sieve. Mix the purée thus obtained with a very little whipped cream, to which a little sugar and a dessertspoonful of maraschino have been added. Form the mixture into balls and leave them to get firm. Boil 8 oz. of sugar in half a pint of water until it turns to caramel; test it by dipping a skewer first in the caramel, then into cold water, and if the sugar snaps easily it is ready. Now dip the chestnut balls one at a time in the caramel, placing them on an oiled baking sheet as you do so. When the balls are set, proceed to arrange them in a pyramid on a dish, dipping them again in a very little caramel to make them keep in position.

For Mosquito Bites nothing allays the irritation so quickly as Scrubb's Cloudy Fluid Ammonia, and it is an immediate remedy for Wasp or Bee Stings.

Type-writers and Cycles, all makes, for Sale, Hire, or Exchange, at half makers' prices. MS. Type-written.—Taylor's 74, Chancery-lane, London. Established 1884.

Garnish between each with whipped cream, sweetened and flavoured with maraschino, and cover them with a cloud of spun sugar.

You will find this pineapple cream a delicious confection :—

Drain the juice from a tinned pineapple, cut the fruit into tiny square pieces and pour a liqueur glass of rum over them. Make half a pint of good custard, dissolve ½ oz. of sheet gelatine in it and strain it into a basin to cool. When the custard is quite cold mix it with a gill and a half of stiffly whipped cream. Decorate a mould with halves of cherries and leaves of green angelica, put a layer of the cream at the bottom of the mould, then a layer of the pineapple. Fill the mould in this way, fruit and cream alternately, and leave it to set. When required for table the cream must be turned out on a dish and the sauce poured round it.

To make the sauce :—Boil the juice of the pineapple until it is getting thick, then mix it with the beaten yolks of 3 eggs, and whisk it until it is cold ; add a dessertspoonful of rum and two tablespoonfuls of whipped cream.

Artichoke bottoms dressed with eggs and fish in this way make an excellent savoury :—

Open a bottle of preserved artichoke bottoms, drain and season them with pepper, salt, oil, and vinegar. Place each one on a round of fried bread that is spread with a thin coating of Montpelier butter. Fill the artichokes with the egg preparation, sprinkle the top with coralline pepper, and arrange them on a dish-paper garnished tastefully with mustard and cress or any other small salad.

To prepare the egg mixture :—Boil 4 or 5 eggs for ten minutes, plunge them into cold water and remove the shells. Cut the eggs into fine dice-shaped pieces, and mix it with some stiff green mayonnaise sauce, and any cold minced fish that is convenient, preferably sole or turbot.

The green mayonnaise is easily made by blanching a handful of parsley, a sprig of thyme, and one or two chives in salted water. Drain them, squeeze them dry in a cloth, and pound them in a mortar, adding a little salad oil. Rub the preparation through a hair sieve and mix it lightly with mayonnaise sauce, which is made in the usual way.

Ever, dear, your loving cousin, MADGE.

Now ready. Demy 8vo, cloth extra, 16s.

THROUGH THE GOLD-FIELDS OF ALASKA TO BERING STRAITS.

By HARRY DE WINDT. With Map and 33 Full-page Illustrations.

"He is inclined to suggest 'The Record of a Failure,' as an alternative title for his new volume; but it is a failure on which he has better reason to congratulate himself than many another man on his success: for the opening stage of his journey led him straight across the gold-fields of the Yukon. . . . The story of his rescue at half-past the eleventh hour by a belated whaler, is one of the most dramatic and thrilling bits of romance in real life I have read for some time."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"Mr. De Windt's book gives, for the first time, a connected and graphic account of a country to which attention must of necessity be more and more directed. . . . It is pleasantly written, and fully illustrated by reproductions of photographs taken on the spot. . . Can hardly fail to be welcome to all who love a volume of adventurous travel."—Times.

"Mr. De Windt describes this book as the record of a failure. . . So interesting a record is it that not many recent successes in the way of adventurous travel equal it in grim human interest. Certainly, Mr. De Windt has behind him one of the most painful experiences that we have read of since many years."—Daily Chronicle.

"Mr. De Windt has many a graphic narrative and personal experience, and to the prospector the painstaking technical detail should prove eminently useful. . . . Mr. De Windt's book is sure to be voted one of the most enjoyable travel-books of the year. It deals with a remarkable climate, novel natural appearances, and with a horribly fascinating, if repulsive, people, the Tchuktchis."—Morning Leader.

THE LIFE OF NAPOLEON III.

With Photogravure Frontispiece and 36 Full-page Illustrations.

"Written with a vigour which we expect in the work of the famous war correspondent."—World.

"An extremely interesting sketch of one of the most extraordinary of careers. . . . The mere chronicle of the events with which he was connected suffices to engross the reader. . . . Mr. Forbes's book is uniformly interesting."—Literature.

"Mr. Archibald Forbes's 'Life of Napoleon III.' adds to the accuracy of an historical annal the charm of romance. . . . He has compiled a stirring narrative. With the first blast of the trumpet of war the pluckiest, most resourceful, and most successful war correspondent of the century is at his best again. The story of the campaign is a brilliant piece of writing. It carries the reader breathless to the closing scene at Chislehurst."—Punch.

TALES IN PROSE AND VERSE.

By D. CHRISTIE MURRAY, Author of "Joseph's Coat." Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

"Amongst the few novelists of a really high order we to-day possess, Mr. Christie Murray holds a foremost place. His right to that place he puts more and more beyond dispute in every work that comes from his hand, as in the present volume."—Lloyd's News.

THIS LITTLE WORLD.

By D. CHRISTIE MURRAY. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 6s.

"Mr. Murray has never done anything better than this fine story. The incidents are presented with wonderful force and freshness, the action never drags, and in vividness and power of characterisation the story is masterly. . . . It is a book that will add to Mr. Murray's reputation."—Birmingham Post.

MORE TRAMPS ABROAD.

By MARK TWAIN. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 6s.

"Mr. Clemens's new book is a really admirable piece of craftsmanship. . . . Even if the book had no other side than its serious one, it would be well worth reading; but being by Mark Twain it is needless to say that it has plenty of humour as well. . . . We must confess to having read it through at a sitting; and we can remember no other work from his pen which we have found so attractive."—Guardian.

By K. WALISZEWSKI. Translated by Lady MARY LOYD.

With Portrait. New Edition, 1 vol., 6s. Library Edition, 2 vols., 28s.

St. James's Gazette.—"In every way a brilliant piece of work—succinct, lucid, well-arranged, clear-sighted, and judicial. The author of this biography recalls something of the qualities of Carlyle."

THE

PRINCESS AND THE BUTTERFLY.

A Comedy in Five Acts.

By ARTHUR W. PINERO.

Cloth, 2s. 6d.; paper covers, 1s. 6d.

FICTION.

THE WAR OF THE WORLDS.

By H. G. WELLS,

Author of "The Time Machine." 1 vol., 6s.

The Spectator.—"As a writer of scientific romance, Mr. Wells has never been surpassed. Even when he is most awful there is always something human about his characters. Both Poe and Mr. Wells are followers of Swift, but Mr. Wells keeps nearest to the human side of the author of Gulliver."

The Outlook.—"Mr. Wells has achieved a triumph. We have here one of the supreme sensations of literature, comparable to the master effects in Poe's 'Tales,' in Sheridan Le Fanu's 'As in a Glass Darkly,' and to three or four scenes in Defoe."

THE BETH BOOK.

By SARAH GRAND, Author of "The Heavenly Twins." 1 vol., 6s.

Punch.—"The heroine of 'The Beth Book' is one of Sarah Grand's most fascinating creations. The story is absorbing; the truth to nature in the characters every reader will recognise."

THE TRIUMPH OF DEATH.

By GABRIELE D'ANNUNZIO. 1 vol., 6s.

The Pall Mall Gazette.—"A masterpiece. The story holds and haunts one. . . . A great prose poem that cannot be surpassed. The work of a master—a master whose genius is beyond dispute."

THE BROOM OF THE WAR GOD.

By H. N. BRAILSFORD. 1 vol., 6s.

CLEO THE MAGNIFICENT.

By Z. Z., Author of "A Drama in Dutch." 1 vol., 6s.

GOD'S FOUNDLING.

By A. J. DAWSON, Author of "In the Bight of Benin." 1 vol., 6s.

The Outlook.—"The book has really subtle qualities of thought and observation. Mr. Dawson has chosen an interesting theme, and he works it out with a genuine sense of the natural evolution of his subject."

THE NIGGER of the 'NARCISSUS.'

By JOSEPH CONRAD. 1 vol., 6s.

MR. JAMES PAYN says:—"It does not seem too much to say that Mr. Conrad has in this book introduced us to the British merchant seaman as Rudyard Kipling introduced us to the British soldier."

THE GADFLY.

By E. L. VOYNICH. 1 vol., 6s.

The St. James's Gazette.—"Exciting, sinister, even terrifying, we must avow it to be a work of real genius."

THE CHRISTIAN.

By HALL CAINE. 1 vol., 6s.

The Sketch.—"It quivers and palpitates with passion, for even Mr. Caine's bitterest detractors cannot deny that he is the possessor of that rarest of all gifts—genius."

THE FOURTH NAPOLEON.

By CHARLES BENHAM. 1 vol., 6s.

The Pall Mall Gazette.—"Mr. Benham has maintained throughout a very creditable level of dramatic interest. 'The Fourth Napoleon' is a very remarkable work."

A MAN WITH A MAID.

THE TWO DUCHESSES:

Family Correspondence of, and relating to, Georgiana, Duchess of Devonshire; Elizabeth, Duchess of Devonshire; the Earl of Bristol (Bishop of Derry) and Countess of Bristol; Lord and Lady Byron; the Earl of Aberdeen; Sir Augustus Foster, Bart.; and many eminent personages of the period 1777-1859.

Edited by VERE FOSTER.

From the TIMES.—"For the rest we have from various pens, pictures and glimpses of a host of famous personages, whose names live in the history of politics, letters, art, and society at the end of last century and the beginning of the present. We cannot but be grateful to Mr. Vere Foster for the treat he has given us."

From the DAILY TELEGRAPH.—"The latter portion of the book bristles with sparkling characterisations and entertaining anecdotes, for the most part new to the reading public, and in all cases indisputably authentic."

From the PALL MALL GAZETTE.—"This very interesting book. . . . Wellington and Nelson, and, above all, Napoleon, figure largely in these pages, and many characteristic anecdotes and letters are for the first time given to the world."

THE BUILDING OF THE EMPIRE: The Story of England's Growth from Elizabeth to Victoria. By ALFRED THOMAS STORY, Author of "The Life of John Linnell," &c. With Portraits of Queens Elizabeth and Victoria in Photogravure, and upwards of 100 Portraits and Illustrations. 2 vols. large crown 8vo, 14s.

The World says:—"An important and interesting historical work is published by Messrs. Chapman & Hall, under the title 'The Building of the Empire.' The author traces the growth and development of the Empire from the time when England, shut off from dominion of the European continent, began to extend her power over the wider seas. The book is not due to the inspiration of the Diamond Jubilee, for it has occupied Mr. Story for several years, and the collecting of the portraits and illustrations from contemporary prints has entailed long and laborious research. The two volumes cover the period from Elizabeth to Victoria."

The SPEAKER.—"It is dangerous to describe any work of fiction in these days of a prolific press as a masterpiece, yet there cannot be any doubt that the word is strictly applicable to Mr. Conan Doyle's 'Tragedy of the Korosko.' . . . . The book though it is, as we have said, one of thrilling excitement, is at the same time, a volume which breathes forth the spirit of religion from every page, and we heartily congratulate Mr. Conan Doyle upon having produced a work of such remarkable power and distinction."

CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND, AND PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY.
To the Holders of
CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND, AND PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY FIVE PER CENT. FIRST MORTGAGE, EXTENSION, AND COLLATERAL BONDS,
FIVE PER CENT. DEBENTURE BONDS.

This Company has entered into an agreement with Messrs. Speyer & Co., New York, for the sale of about $52,000,000 New General Mortgage Four per Cent. Ninety Year Gold Bonds, Interest payable January 1st and July 1st, to be issued for the purpose of retiring the following issues:—
$40,712,000 Five per Cent. First Mortgage, Extension, and Collateral Bonds.
$4,500,000 Five per Cent. Debenture Bonds.
$5,000,000 Seven per Cent. Chicago and South-Western Railway Company First Mortgage Bonds, due November 1st, 1899.

Upon ratification of the new mortgage by the stockholders at a meeting called for February 15th, 1898, the Chicago, Rock Island, and Pacific Railway Company intends to exercise its privilege of redemption at 105 and accrued interest, New York terms, as follows: The Five per Cent. First Mortgage, Extension, and Collateral Bonds to be paid on or before July 1st, 1898.

The Five per Cent. Debenture Bonds to be paid on September 1st, 1898.

The following particulars are taken from a statement by R. R. Cable, Esq., the President of the Chicago, Rock Island, and Pacific Railway Company:—

The New Mortgage provides that none of the existing Bonds shall be extended at maturity, but that they shall be retired, so that thereafter the New Bonds will be secured by a First Mortgage on all the railroad property and real estate of the Chicago, Rock Island, and Pacific Railway Company, including its railroad, terminals at Chicago and other points and equipment; and also its leases, all as is more fully specified in the mortgage.

The Capital Stock of the Company on March 31st, 1897, was	$46,156,000
The Bonded Debt	62,712,000
(This amount includes $12,500,000 Six per Cent. Chicago, Rock Island, and Pacific Railway First Mortgage Bonds due 1917.)
The net income of the Company for the fiscal year ending March 31st, 1897, after deduction of rentals and all other charges, was	$4,765,121.27
The interest on the bonded debt was	3,321,525
The surplus income for the year was	$1,443,596.27

By the proposed plan of refunding, the annual interest charges will be reduced, upon the retirement of the Five per Cent. First Mortgage, Extension, and Collateral Bonds, the Five per Cent. Debenture Bonds, and the Chicago and South-Western Railway Seven per Cent. Bonds, from $3,321,525 to $2,824,904, an annual SAVING of $496,321.

The net earnings for the nine months ending December 31st, 1897 (December estimated), show an increase of $1,525,198.24 over the corresponding period in 1896.

The Chicago, Rock Island, and Pacific Railway Company has regularly paid cash dividends in each year since the organisation of the Company in 1880, amounting in the aggregate to $38,938,465.

Subject to the ratification of the New Mortgage by the Stockholders,

The undersigned hereby OFFER, until February 17th, 1898 (unless the amount available for this purpose is exhausted earlier), $25,000,000 of the New General Mortgage Four per Cent. Gold Bonds

To the holders of the FIVE PER CENT. FIRST MORTGAGE, EXTENSION, and COLLATERAL BONDS, and the FIVE PER CENT. DEBENTURE BONDS, in exchange for their existing Bonds at the price of 103½ per cent. and accrued interest, New York terms, the computation to be made as of May 1st next, and the difference of interest between 4 per cent. and 5 per cent. to be allowed to the Bondholder.

Receipts will be issued for the Bonds deposited, to be exchanged free of charge to the Bondholders against new definitive Bonds when ready.

Applications will be made to have the new General Mortgage Four Per Cent. Gold Bonds officially quoted in New York, London, and Frankfort.

Full particulars as to the terms and conditions of the exchange may be obtained at the offices of the undersigned:

ABRIDGED PROSPECTUS.

This Company is formed to acquire and develop the extensive India Rubber Estate situate in the State of Amazonas, Brazil, and covering an area of 364,542,500 square mètres, equal to about 137 English square miles, and to carry on the business of Rubber Growers, Manufacturers, Shippers, &c.

There being direct water communication with Manáos, the Rubber can be easily conveyed to that City, and shipped by the regular lines of steamers direct to Europe and the United States.

A thorough examination of the property has been made by Mr. H. C. F. Rohe. He reports that the estate "abounds with untapped India Rubber trees of many years' growth. These comprise various species of Hevea, of which the most numerous has been identified as Hevea brasiliensis, producing the most valuable Rubber of the genus. The trees are of the best quality, and immediately available for tapping."

Senhors H. J. MOERS & RAYMUNDO NERY.—Senhor H. J. Moers, Government Engineer for the State of Amazonas, who has made a survey of the estate, and Senhor Raymundo Nery, Director of Public Lands, have certified that the property "contains 'Seringaes' (workable forests) of India Rubber trees of the best quality, and also large quantities of hardwood and oleiferous timber."

Dr. J. BACH, states that he visited the property acquired by this Company, and that he found there an enormous quantity of India Rubber trees, as well as a great number of other valuable trees of various kinds.

Dr. Bach counted an average of 11,971 per square mile, and he states that the forests are of such great extent that enormous quantities of India Rubber may be extracted for very many years to come, without the slightest need of planting a single tree.

The Rubber produced in the States of Amazonas and Para is recognised to be the best and most valuable of all Rubbers, the market price for "Fine" being 3s. 6d. to 3s. 7d. per lb. on December 31st, 1897.

Since May, 1896, the lowest price recorded is 3s. 4d., and the highest 3s. 9½d.

According to the British Consul's Reports, the total quantity exported from Brazil during the year 1895 amounted to 20,769,581 kilos equal to over 45,500,000lb. while in 1896 the exports amounted to nearly 48,000,000lb. The value of the imports of all kinds of Rubber into the United Kingdom alone amounted in the latter year to about £5,000,000 sterling.

In consequence of the extraordinary development of the cycle and other industries in which Rubber is used, the consumption, already so important, is still increasing as shown by the following particulars obtained from the Board of Trade Returns:—In 1894 the United Kingdom imported 304,451 cwt. of raw India Rubber of all kinds, the average value being 216s. per cwt. In 1895 the imports rose to 341,543 cwts., and the average price to 220s. per cwt. In 1896 the imports into the United Kingdom amounted to no less a quantity than 431,164 cwts., and the average value rose to 232s. per cwt.

From the property a minimum annual production of 1,500,000 lb. of Rubber may be estimated, and, in order to arrive at this production, it would only be necessary to work a small portion of the Company's Estate of 137 square miles in each year.

1,500,000 lb. of "Fine" Rubber, at the average price of 3s. 6d. per lb., would realise	£262,500 0 0
From this should be deducted the expenses of collecting and curing the Rubber, transport from the River Teffé to the City of Manáos, boxing, packing, shipping, export duties, local taxes, loss in weight, freight to Liverpool, insurance, landing, storing, brokerage, &c., calculated at 60 per cent.	157,500 0 0
Leaving a net profit of	£105,000 0 0
The dividend of 7 per cent. on £150,000 Preference Shares will amount to	10,500 0 0
Leaving the sum of	£94,500 0 0

to provide for administration expenses, &c., and a dividend of 10 per cent. (=£15,000) on the £150,000 Ordinary Shares. The balance of net profits after provision, if considered necessary, for a reserve, will be divided in the proportion of one-fourth for the Preference Shares, and three-fourths for the Ordinary Shares.

The foregoing estimate is for Rubber of the best quality only, and exclusive of "Entrefine" and "Negro Head" Rubbers, the sale of which should yield additional revenue to the Company, the price on December 31st. 1897, of the former being 3s. 4½d. to 3s. 5d. per lb., and of the latter from 2s. 4d. to 2s. 7d. per lb.

In addition to the production of Rubber, a reference to the reports will show that there are other important sources of revenue from the estate, which should be of great advantage in the future.

CONTRACT, &c.

The Vendors have fixed the purchase price at the sum of £250,000, payable as to £50,000 in fully-paid Ordinary Shares, £50,000, in fully-paid Preference Shares, and the balance in cash or Shares, or partly in both, at the option of the Directors. 50,000 Shares, which form part of the present issue, are reserved for working capital.

Prospectuses and Forms of Application for Shares may be obtained from the Bankers, Brokers, Solicitors, or at the Offices of the Company.

ABRIDGED PROSPECTUS.

This Company is formed to acquire, as going concerns, and to carry on under one management, the businesses of R. H. Sykes & Company, Limited, at the Soothill Brewery, Batley, near Leeds (with which was recently incorporated the Atlas Brewery, Batley), and Cutler's Saville-green Brewery, Leeds, including 51 licensed houses held therewith; and, in addition, to acquire 23 licensed hotels, beerhouses, and off-licenses, with a considerable number of shops, cottages, and parcels of building land. With one exception, the whole of these additional properties are situate in Leeds, and are entirely freehold. They comprise some of the best licensed properties in the City, and have been most carefully selected under skilled advice. The Soothill Brewery is of modern construction. The business has been in existence upwards of 20 years, and is steadily increasing. The site affords ample space for all necessary extensions for an output up to 100,000 barrels per annum. The present trade is nearly all tied.

The total number of licensed properties acquired by the Company, in addition to the two Breweries, is 74, of which 61 are freehold.

Messrs. Armitage & Norton, Chartered Accountants, Huddersfield, Dewsbury, and Bradford, have examined the books and accounts of R. H. Sykes & Company, Limited, and of Mr. G. C. Cutler for three years, and their certificate shows increasing profits for each year. "The Trading profits for the year ending 1897, together with the rentals of the new properties to be acquired, amount to £15,031." (Extract from Certificate).

The properties and assets have been valued by Messrs. E. Belfield & Co., Brewery Valuers and Chartered Accountants, at £341,397 (without considering goodwill of the business), and they certify that a net additional profit of at least £11,450 per annum will be earned from the 23 new houses acquired by the Company, exclusive of rentals.

To the above valuation must be added £11,000 additional working capital provided by this issue.

The profits as set out in the foregoing Certificates amount to per annum:

No. 1.	£15,031 0 0
No. 2.	11,450 0 0
		£26,481 0 0

The sum required to pay:—

Interest on £200,000 Debenture Stock at 4½ per cent. is	9,000 0 0
Interest on £125,000 Five-and-a-Half per Cent. Cumulative Preference Shares is	6,875 0 0
		15,875 0 0

At various dates during the last twelve months R. H. Sykes & Co., Limited, Mr. G. C. Cutler have expended upwards of £10,000 in the purchase of licensed properties. The profits from these houses, as included in the Auditors' certificates, are only for a portion of the year, and future profits ought necessarily to be larger.

It will be seen from the above Certificates that the profits of the Company are sufficient to pay the interest on the Debenture Stock nearly three times over; the surplus profits, after paying the Debenture interest, are more than sufficient to pay the interest on the Preference Shares two and a half times.

The purchase price for the breweries, properties, and assets, as set out in Messrs. Belfield's valuation and Report, has been fixed by the Vendors, the undermentioned Syndicate (who are the promoters and are selling at a profit) of four hundred and fourteen thousand pounds. In addition, the Vendors take premiums on the Debenture Stock. The Vendors and their friends will apply for at least £100,000 of Debenture Stock and Preference and Ordinary Shares. The Vendors will pay all the expenses of forming the Company up to the allotment of capital, and costs, including stamps, of vesting the above-mentioned properties and assets in the Company. Mr. Sykes and Cutler being interested as Vendors, and Mr. Beaumont being a Director of R. H. Sykes & Co. Limited, will not vote on the allotment.

Mr. Sykes has agreed to act as Managing Director for a period of at least three years.

For Contracts see full Prospectus.

Applications for Debenture Stock and Preference and Ordinary Shares should be made on the accompanying Forms, and forwarded to the Company's Bankers, or to any of their Branches, together with a remittance for the amount payable on application. Prospectuses, with Forms of Application, may be obtained from the Solicitors, Bankers, Brokers, or at the Offices of the Company.

PROSPECTUS.

This Company has been formed to acquire the well-known business of Messrs. MARSHALL & SNELGROVE which was established in the year 1837, and has since been carried on among the very best class of customers and with much success at Vere-street and Oxford-street, London, and at Scarborough.

The lease of the premises hitherto held at Leeds being about to expire, the business carried on there will shortly be transferred to the Scarborough branch.

In addition to the retail business, known all over the world, Messrs. Marshall & Snelgrove have also a large wholesale business in the United Kingdom and abroad.

The main London premises are situate on the Portland Marylebone Estate, and are held under Ground Leases and Underleases and Contracts for Leases for terms of sixty years from Ladyday, 1898; and the buildings erected thereon are of the highest class, and have been specially designed for the purposes of the business. The Scarborough premises are held under lease on favourable terms, and the buildings there are also especially adapted to the trade.

For family reasons the business has been turned into a private Limited Company, the whole of the Issued Capital—£500,000—being taken by the late and former partners. No part of this is offered for public or private subscription.

There will be no change in the Management, the Board consisting of the late Partners and their Head Managers in London and Scarborough.

It is now proposed to offer to the public Debenture Stock to the extent of £225,000, being part of the total of £300,000 authorised by the Company's Articles of Association, mainly for the purpose of paying-out capital of former partners and existing deposits.

The price of the Debenture Stock has been fixed at £106 for each £100 subscribed, carrying interest at the rate of 4¼ per cent. per annum, which will afford a net return of almost exactly 4 per cent. It will be repayable at par on the 20th February, 1948. The Company, however, retains the right to repay the Stock on and after the 20th February, 1911, on six months' notice at the price of £110 per cent.; and on any distribution of assets on a reconstruction or amalgamation of the Company's undertakings with that of another Company at any time (prior to 20th February, 1948) the Stock shall be repayable at £110 per cent.

The Debenture Stock will be secured by a Trust Deed, vesting in the Trustees the Leasehold Property of the Company, which has been valued (as will be seen below) by Messrs. Lofts & Warner at £130,000, and by a floating charge on all the remaining property of the Company. The security for the Debenture Stock will be as follows, exclusive of Goodwill:—

Leases—London and Scarborough	£130,000 0 0
Horses, Carts, Furniture, Fittings, and Equipment of Shops	32,596 14 1
Stock	283,086 14 0
Debtors, Cash and Bills Receivable	318,195 5 0
	£763,878 13 1
Deduct—Trade and other Creditors	101,823 6 7
	£662,055 6 6

There is therefore a total value of tangible Assets to the extent of £660,000 and upwards, to secure a charge thereon of only £300,000; while the proceeds of the last £75,000 if and when issued will have the effect of increasing the security to that extent.

The above Assets and the Goodwill of the business are acquired as a going concern by the Company at the price of £625,000, payable as to £500,000 in fully-paid Shares of the Company, and the balance in Cash.

The Contract for Sale is dated the 9th February, 1898, and is made between James Charles Marshall and Herbert Charles Marshall of the one part, and Edmund Read for and on behalf of the Company of the other part.

The Company covenants with the Trustees for the Debenture Holders to effect and maintain in the names of the Trustees a policy or policies of Assurance with the Law Life Assurance Society or other Assurance Company approved by the Trustees, to repay the amount of the Debenture Stock for the time being outstanding at the expiration of fifty years, when the Debenture Stock falls due.

As the whole of the Share Capital is held by recent or former members of the Firm, it is not necessary to disclose the figures of the profits: but the following certificate will show the confidence with which the holders of Debenture Stock may rely upon the payment of their interest:—

"58, Coleman-street, London, E.C.
"February 4th, 1898.

"Gentlemen,

"We have continuously audited the Accounts of Messrs. Marshall & Snelgrove for nineteen years past; and we certify that in each of these years, the Net Profits of the business, after making due provision for Bad Debts, have been sufficient to pay the Interest upon the proposed issue of Debenture Stock to the extent of £225,000 more than four times over.

"The figures relating to property set out in the Prospectus as security for the Capital of the Debenture Stock (other than the leases valued independently) are those of the Balance Sheet at the close of the last financial year of the firm; and were prepared in the usual way, without reference to the conversion of the business into a Company.

"JACKSON, PIXLEY, BROWNING, HUSEY, & CO.,
"Chartered Accountants."

The Report of Messrs. Lofts & Warner on the value of the Leases is as follows:—

"February 2nd, 1898.

"We have inspected the premises in London and Scarborough occupied by Messrs. Marshall & Snelgrove for the purpose of their business, comprising the magnificent block of buildings facing Oxford-street, and bounded by Marylebone-lane, Henrietta-street, and Vere-street, which are most substantially built and well arranged and especially well lighted and adapted for a business of this kind; also other premises in Henrietta-street, connected by Subway, a large double shop and houses in Oxford-street adjacent, and extensive Stabling in Stratford-mews, held upon Leases, Underleases and Contracts for Leases for terms of upwards of sixty years, and other detached premises in London held on shorter terms, together with the fine Block of premises in St. Nicholas-street, Scarborough, occupied by the firm.

"We value the above properties at the sum of £130,000 (one hundred and thirty thousand pounds), exclusive of the fixtures and fittings therein.

"LOFTS & WARNER."

Application will be made in due course for an official quotation of the Debenture Stock on the Stock Exchange.

No part of this issue has been underwritten or guaranteed.

Application for the Debenture Stock must be made on the form accompanying the Prospectus, and forwarded with a remittance for the amount of the application money, to the Union Bank of London, Limited, Princes-street, E.C., or Argyll-place, W.

If the full amount applied for be not allotted, the surplus paid on deposit will be applied towards payment of the amount due on allotment, where no allotment is made, the deposit will be returned in full. Non-payment of the amount due on allotment will render the application money liable to forfeiture.

A print of the Memorandum and Articles of Association, the original valuation of Messrs. Lofts & Warner, the original certificate of the Auditors, and a draft of the trust deed for securing the Debenture Stock, may be seen at the Offices of Messrs. Baileys, Shaw, & Gillett, 5, Berners-street, W.; and copies thereof can also be seen at the Offices of the Auditors, and of Messrs. Paines, Blyth, & Huxtable, 14, St. Helen's-place, E.C.

Prospectuses and Forms of Application can be obtained from Messrs. Brunton, Bourke, & Co., 18, Finch-lane, E.C.; Messrs. Jackson, Pixley, & Co., 58, Coleman-street, E.C.; and from the Union Bank of London, Limited, Princes-street, E.C. and Branches.

THE HOMACOUSTIC.

WHAT IS THE HOMACOUSTIC?

THE HOMACOUSTIC is a contrivance connected with Speaking Tubes, which entirely supersedes for indoor purposes not only the Telephone, but all other existing arrangements for indoor inter-communication.

THE HOMACOUSTIC

Is Automatic, not Mechanical. Once fixed always in Working Order. Its first cost is its last cost.

WITH THE HOMACOUSTIC

There is no blowing into pipes. The automatic whistle is always in position. One speaks and listens at the same time. The tube is closed when not in actual use. Ordinary speaking tubes can be utilised.

ONE (No. 4) HOMACOUSTIC

Places the speaker in communication with any Number of Rooms.

THE HOMACOUSTIC

Is of special value and inestimable convenience not only in business establishments, but in all Private Houses.

TESTIMONIALS.

Atlas Assurance Company, Fire and Life, 92, Cheapside, London, E.C.

Dear Sir,—I have pleasure in stating that I have had one of your Homacoustic Speaking Tube Commutators and Instruments in my room, communicating with seven departments in this office, and that I find the same to work admirably. It is a vast improvement on the old method of a separate mouthpiece for each tube, and it is an invention which I think needs only to be known to command very wide adoption.—I am, dear sir, yours faithfully,

SAML. J. PIPKIN Secretary.

The Central London Throat and Ear Hospital,
Gray's Inn-road, W.C.,
December 14, 1891.

I have much pleasure in testifying to the excellence of the principle of the Homacoustic Speaking Tube Instruments, as well as to the perfect workmanship of the tubes fitted at this Hospital.

Quite independently of sanitary reasons it is decidedly more agreeable to have a Speaking Tube by which all blowing and breathing into the face are avoided. There is no difficulty whatever in its employment.

As no Prospectuses are being circulated through the post in connection with this issue, intending Applicants for Shares are requested to apply on the annexed form. Prospectus and Application Forms can be obtained from the Bankers, Brokers, Solicitors, and of the Secretary at the Offices of the Company.

The Company will proceed to allotment immediately on the closing of the lists, a sufficient amount of the Capital of the Company having already been guaranteed.

The Subscription List is now OPEN, and will CLOSE on or before FRIDAY, the 18th, for Town and Country.

"The germs of cholera, typhus, diphtheria, tuberculosis, erysipelas, and the germs which produce curdling of milk, are all without exception destroyed by this process." (See Report). The spread of virulent diseases can therefore be minimised by the use of milk sterilized under these patents. The nourishing properties remain intact.

The milk is absolutely pure, with nothing abstracted and nothing added. See Press and medical opinions. Bottles can be seen at the offices of the Company containing milk sterilized by this process two years ago.

ABRIDGED PROSPECTUS.

This Company has been formed to acquire inter alia the patents of the "Excel" Sterilized Milk Company, Limited, whose factory is situated at No. 1, Vandon-street, Westminster, and to provide the necessary working capital to develop the increasing business of the said Company.

The Company will also acquire the stock-in-trade, lease of premises, goodwill, trade marks, and business generally of the "Excel" Sterilized Milk Company, Limited, as from January 1st. 1898, together with the afore-mentioned valuable patents for the process of Neuhauss, Gronwald, and Oehlmann, relating to the sterilization of milk, &c., for Great Britain and Ireland. The patents have been submitted to the well-known patent agents, Messrs. Haslctine, Lake, & Co., who have reported favourably thereon.

The number of customers on the books of the Company now exceeds 350, including a large number of the co-operative stores and wholesale houses, among which may be mentioned the following:—Spiers & Ponds, Army & Navy Stores, William Whiteley, Civil Service Supply Association, Harrod's Stores, Junior Army & Navy Stores, J. Lyons & Co., &c.

The following steamship companies, amongst others, are also being supplied with "Excel" Milk:—Union Steamship Company, Royal Mail Steam Packet Company, Messrs. Rennie, Sons, & Co.

The Superintendent of Stores of the Union Steamship Company writes, under date 4th November, 1896:—"You now supply all the milk we require for our ships."

The existing factory of the "Excel" Sterilized Milk Company, Limited, is in complete working order, and is equipped with patent sterilizing machines capable of treating about 1,500 gallons per week (in quart bottles), together with cooling tanks, filtering apparatus, testing room, boiler, apparatus for cleansing and sterilizing india-rubber rings, and other utensils, plant, and apparatus, but owing to the large increase in the demand, the storage capacity of the London factory is now inadequate, and it is proposed in the first instance to erect a plant capable of sterilizing at least 10,000 gallons of milk per week at Eastleigh.

The directors have acquired the option to purchase, at a low rental, the long leasehold interest in a factory situated at Eastleigh. It is in every way suited for meeting the requirements of this Company, particularly as regards storage space, and is substantially built and recently erected.

Owing to the fact that under this process a stock of milk can be stored without risk of loss from the milk turning sour, and owing to the saving in the cost of distribution in the "Excel" system of milk supply, the Company will be enabled to fix the retail price per quart, including delivery and collection of empties in London and suburbs, at a figure not exceeding that at which ordinary milk of equal quality is now sold in London.

A provisional licence has been granted on very favourable terms for the purpose of developing the trade in milk sterilized by the above mentioned improved process, for which patent rights are being applied for in Canada and the United States. The benefit of this licence is included in the option above referred to.

The "Excel" Sterilized Milk Company, Limited, have received several applications for sole licences to trade in "Excel" Milk in South Africa. A provisional monopoly of the sale of "Excel" Milk for three months has been granted to a substantial firm for the district covered by the charter of the British South Africa Company.

The directors anticipate that a considerable saving will be effected in many directions by sterilising milk at Eastleigh, and that a reduction in the price of "Excel" Milk would result in an immediate increase in the orders received from the steamship companies now supplied, and would also enable the directors to introduce "Excel" Milk on many of the other lines of steamships sailing from Southampton and other ports. The directors consider that there should be little difficulty in working up the output of the new factory to 1,500 gallons per working day, and the following estimate of profits is worked out on this basis.

Sale of 1,800,000 quarts per annum at 4d. per quart (this price to include delivery to the steamers at Southampton Docks, collection of empties and dock dues).....		£30,000
Estimated cost of milk per annum at 6½d. per gallon	£12,187
Estimated cost of production, including rent of factories, London offices, wages, coal, management and incidental expenses	4,780
Carriage and dock charges	2,498
		19,465
Net profit		£10,535

Or sufficient to pay 10 per cent. on the present issue of shares.

The purchase consideration for all the property acquired by the Company is fixed at £40,000, as to £7,500 in cash and £32,500 in cash or fully paid shares. All expenses up to allotment (except the cost of registration and legal expenses) will be borne by the vendors. The business will be taken over subject to all existing contracts, which are of the ordinary trade character.

For contracts, &c., see full prospectus.

Copies of the contracts, and of the memorandum and articles of association, together with copies of the complete certificates and reports referred to above, or from which extracts have been taken, can be seen at the offices of the solicitors.

It is intended to apply for a Stock Exchange quotation in due course.

Applications for Shares should be made on the form accompanying this prospectus, and forwarded to the Bankers of the Company, with remittance of 2s. 6d. per Share.

Prospectuses and Forms of Application may be obtained from the Bankers, Brokers, and Solicitors, and of the Secretary at the Offices of the Company.

RULES.

1. The sum of £2. 2s. will be given every week for the best Epigram, Conundrum, Lipogram, Bouts-Rimés, or whatever the announced subject of the competition for the week may be.
2. The Puzzle Editor reserves the right, however, of dividing the above sum between two or more competitors, or of withholding the prize, should exceptional circumstances render such a course desirable.
3. The decision and award of the Puzzle Editor must be considered final and irrevocable, and, for obvious reasons, no appeal from his critical judgments can be entertained.
4. In every instance the prize will be given in money, subject to no condition whatever, except the publication of the winner's real name and address in this journal.
5. Competitors will be allowed eleven days for the composition and despatch of their efforts; but all such communications must, at the latest, be received at the Truth Office by the first post on the morning of the second Monday succeeding the publication of the subject for competition.
6. Not more than one Prize will be given a Quarter to the same competitor.
7. All New Contributors are Required to Forward with their First Answers their Real Names and Addresses for Registration; such names and addresses will not be published except in the case of Prize-winners.
8. The nom-de-plume chosen by competitors should not exceed 12, and must under no circumstances consist of more than 14, letters.
9. Competitors must on no account change their noms-de-plume they have once assumed.
10. On the announcement of the Prize-winner's nom-de-plume, the successful competitor must write and make formal application for the Prize, stating the address to which the cheque must be sent. Any competitor failing to do so within three months of winning the Prize will forfeit all claim to the same.
11. No communications can be received on post-cards, by telegraph, or by hand. They must all be sent by the time named above. All post letters addressed—

PUZZLE EDITOR OF "TRUTH," Carteret-street, Queen Anne's-gate, S.W.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 988.

The Prize in this competition has been awarded to Ludwig B. for the following Original Conundrum:—

Why did Ranjitsinhji, in continuing his celebrated innings after a surgical operation, do no more than might be expected?

Because, when his tonsils were cut, he could do nothing else but stick to the stumps.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 995.

The usual Prize of Two Guineas is offered this week to the competitor who proves most successful

In Completing the Following Imperfect Stanzas:—

Down — — — her name — traced
— the — — sand;
The — — jealous —,— — kissed it — — —.

I breathed — — — — breeze
That — — — sea;
And lo — dawn — — —
Whispered — — to —.

In the above stanzas each — stands for a word, and competitors are asked to supply it in every case. The word at the end of line three in verse one must rhyme with "traced"; and that at the end of line four with "sand." So, in verse two, the words at the ends of lines three and four must rhyme with "breeze" and "sea" respectively. Competitors must only send in one completed version of the stanzas; and all answers must reach me by the morning of Monday, February 28.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 990.

I am not yet in a position to announce the name of the Prize winner in this competition.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 991.

The winner of the Prize in this competition for answering fifty Original Conundrums is Dandelion. The competitors who followed him most closely are (in order of merit) Woodlands, R. Martin, Bredon, Beginner, Conkie, Crock, Felsberg, Wildcat, and Pteris.

Answers to Correspondents.

 The real name, with the address, of Pendarley, winner of Prize No. 977, is Mrs. Frank Dingle, The Chestnuts, Great Malvern.

 By an error the name of the winner of a half of Prize No. 987 was printed last week as "E. M. Lashbrooke, Esq."; it should have appeared as Miss Emily M Lashbrooke.

Apostrophe.—No, there is no such unwritten law as you suppose. I regret to say that your "Parody" arrived too late to be printed, but it will, in the circumstances, be admitted to the competition.

Qu'Appelle.—Many thanks for your letter. It must not be supposed that all the quotations printed have been approved by me. I shall have more to say about this competition next week.

Cortex.—I am much obliged to you for your letter, and let me hope you are now convalescent.

Etak.—The correction has been made.

Meg.—The competition you suggest would, I think, interest but a very limited number of competitors.

Rose of Devon.—I fail to see the point of your objection.

Starlight.—See Rule 10.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE NO. 992.—ASSORTED SPECIMENS—GOOD AND OTHERWISE.

UP-TO-DATE PARODIES OF BRET HARTE'S "HEATHEN CHINEE."

Which you may, if you hark
To this whimsical strain,
Perceive 'neath the bark
Round the Chinese chicane,
That the heathen Chinee has, most truly, a
Decidedly strong business vein.

It was Li who first came,
Unassuming and shy,
Belying his name
By an absence of "I;"
But his questions were pointed, though mild-like,
As we often observed, by the bye.

Many things we have heard
Since this visit of Li's;
Now a game has occurred
Where the Heathen One trics
Going partners with Nich'las and William,
To take Johnny Bull by surprise.

It is square; and for name
(Like all games which are planned)
It has Luere. The same
Which we played in the Rand,
And at which certain folks are so able
When posing as patriots grand.

John a loan card essayed,
Which he reckoned worth "three,"
When a mailed fist displayed
What was trumps to a "T,"
And William put down Kiao-Chau-er,
Of which same he is now the lessee.

Then the Heathen looked sly,
As he said to John B.,
"For his piece of my pie
William pays rent to me;
But he sends you his German cheap labour,
While I'll have your loan, p'r'aps, at 'three.'

"And my soft air has long
Raised the wind and worked sales,
But if that goes wrong
(And my smile seldom fails),
By reversing my head, I turn up, John,
What's common to heads—that is 'taels.'"

Which is why, if you hark
To this whimsical strain,
You'll perceive 'neath the bark
Round the Chinese chicane,
That the Heathen Chinee has, most truly, a
Cunning I've tried to explain.

Oom Paul.

PLAIN LANGUAGE FROM TRUTHFUL JOHN (BULL).

Which I wish to remark,
In the style of Bret Harte,
That for ways that are dark,
And for tricks that are smart,
The heathen Chinee, tho' peculiar,
Finds the Russian can give him a start

Grabovitch was his name,
And I shall not deny,
In regard to the same,
What that name might imply;
But his smile it was kind and protecting,
And his humour decidedly dry.

It was in the Far East,
Not a cloud in the skies,
That a harbour he leased,
Which a friend did likewise;
And they played it out there, he and William,
In a way that was bound to surprise.

I saw thro' their game,
And at once took a hand;
It was Euchre, the same
That we all understand.
And the Muscovite smiled at Port Arthur
With a smile that was childlike and bland.

His cards they were stocked
In a way that I grieve,
And my feelings were shocked
As I spied up his sleeve
A card that denoted Partition,
Which was held with intent to deceive.

Then the hands that were played
For the heathen Chinee,
And the points that were made,
Were quite pretty to see,
Till he showed his trump card and said China
Should not borrow millions from me.

Then I looked at Wai-hai,
And Japan looked at me,
As I winked with one eye,
And we said "Can this be?
He'll be ruined by Russian protection
To a cert. will the heathen Chinee."

In the game that comes next
I must needs take a hand,
With Free Ports as my text,
For my people won't stand
Too much interference with China
If it shuts out their trade from that land.

Which is why I remark,
In the style of Bret Harte,
That for ways that are dark,
And for tricks that are smart,
The heathen Chinee, though peculiar,
Finds the Russian can give him a start.

Norfolk.

Which I wish to remark
It's a very great shame,
That for ways that are dark
And deserving of blame,
The heathen Chinee in particular
Is considered legitimate game.

Ah! since defeat came
(And I shall not deny
That he gained neither fame
Nor advantage thereby)
He perforce has been pensive and mild-like,
Which the Kaiser was quick to espy.

Now, some preachers inferred
He was soft as the skies,
But they fatally erred,
For it proved otherwise;
And their deaths formed a pretext for William
To act in a way I despise.

Which he played the old game,
And the Czar took a hand,
And the game was the same
That we all understand.
Since the poor old Chinee wasn't able
To resist, he was mild-like and bland.

Yes, his ports were annexed
Without asking his leave,
And, although he felt vexed,
He could do naught but grieve;
For it seemed as though all the Great Powers
Had the self-same intention—to thieve.

But a hand was then played
By that heathen Chinee,
And the point that he made
They were staggered to see—
For he called to his aid a Great Power,
Which the same had a charm—£ s. d.

Then the Czar looked awry,
And to William said he,
As he heaved a great sigh,
"Alas! can this be?
We are balked by Great Britain's behaviour
In our plans 'gainst that heathen Chinee."

In the game that ensued,
Johnny Bull took a hand,
And, though late in the feud,
He soon held the command.
For the "Loan" card that he had been hiding
Was a trump that they could not withstand.

Though the strife may be long,
Yet I do not surmise
That those wreakers of wrong
Will get much of a prize.
Though we doubtless shall read in their papers
What is frequent in papers—that's lies.

Which I therefore remark,
And my language is plain,
That in ways that are dark,
And in tricks that are vain,
The heathen Chinee in particular
Is quite able his own to maintain.

Vox.

Which I wish to remark—
And my language is sane—
That for making his mark,
And for speech that is vain,
The Emperor William's peculiar—
Which the same I would sit to explain.

"Holy Will" is his name,
And I shall not deny
In regard to the same
What that name must imply,
For his smile is extensive and godlike,
Which I frequent remarked to Chung Li.

And august was his word,
And quite big were his cries,
Which they might be absurd
And as foolish likewise;
Yet he played it that day upon China
And me in a way I despise.

Which we had a big game,
And our Will took a hand;
It was "Luere," the same
He did quite understand;
But he smiled as he worked at the exble,
With a smile that was godlike and grand.

Yet his yards they were stooked
In a way that I grieve,
And our Bourses were shocked
When the Deutschland did leave,
Which was sent to displace the Great Powers,
And the same with intent to relieve.

But the land that he made
Quite his own property,
And the plans that he laid,
Were quite frightful to see;
For he thought his "mailed fist" had the power
To break treaties which Li made with me.

When I looked up at Li,
And he gazed upon me,
And he rose with a sigh,
And said, "Can this be?"
We are ruined by German cheap labour,
And we went for that godlike Bilee.

In the scene that ensued,
I did take a high hand;
But the shore it was strewed,
Like the leaves on the strand,
With the guns Holy Will has been landing,
In the game he did quite understand.

In the forts, which were strong,
There were many more stacks,
Which was coming it strong;
Yet I state but the facts,
And we found the mailed fist, which the paper
Had told us was sent to give whacks!

Which is why I remark—
And my language is sane—
That for making his mark,
And for speech that is vain,
The Emperor William's peculiar,
Which the same I am bound to maintain.

THAT MUSCULAR SHE.

(Being truthful language from Jones, Major.)

Which I wish to retort—
And my language is plain—
That for temper that's short,
And for ways that aren't vain,
The Muscular She is a caution,
And the same (it's no rise) I'll explain.

Miss New was her name;
And I shall not deny,
With regard to the same,
What it may not imply!
But my smile it is pensive and child-like,
As you'll see if you wink t'other eye.

'Twas December the third,
And quite soft were the skies;
Which it might be inferred
That Miss New was likewise;
But she played it that day with a hockey-stick
Upon me in a way I despise.

For we had a small game,
And Miss New with us ran:
It was hockey. The same
She could "play like a man"? . . .
Well, I smiled as I stood near the goal-posts,
With a smile that was short-lived and wan.

Yet her boots they were thick,
In a way that I cringe . . .
And my feelings were sick,
At her hat with a dinge,
Which was tumbling right on to her eyebrows—
And the same with regard to her fringe.

Oh! the game that was played
By that Muscular She!
Oh! the misses she made!
They were frightful to see—
Till at last she brought down a stout ashplant
On the head that belongeth to me.

Then at her looked down I,
And on me looked down she;
And I bowed with a sigh,
And said, "I'm but a he!
'Game is ruined by timid precautious"—
And the Muscular She went for me!

In the scene that ensued
I did not say my say;
For my face was imbrued—
And my hockey-array—
With the blood that Miss New had been shedding,
At the game that "she knew how to play."

In her speech—which was cheap—
There were twenty-four crams;
Which may sound a bit steep,
But it's true as the Psalms;
And we found in her words like a torrent,
What is frequent in torrents, that's ——!

So at last I retort—
And my language is plain—
That for temper that's short,
And for ways that aren't vain,
The Muscular She is a caution,
And the same I intend to maintain.

Kooràli.

Which I wish to remark, in a critical strain,
That for secret courts-martial whose findings are vain,
Republican France is peculiar;
Which the same I would like to explain.

Billot was his name, and I shall not deny
In regard to that name what that name might imply;
And his ways were a long chalk from childlike,
Which friend Zola was quick to espy.

Though 'twas late in December, quite bright were the skies,
And, it might be inferred, Billot's honour likewise;
But for all that he played it on Dreyfus,
The Jew, in a way I despise.

Which there was a small game, and Billot took a hand—
'Twas "Court-Martial," the same he did not understand,
But he smiled as he glanced at the judges,
With a smile that was meaning and bland.

Now the tricks that were played by the General bold,
And the points that he scored were most sad to behold;
For, to whitewash his friend, Esterhazy,
French justice and honour he sold.

Then I gazed upon Zola, and he gazed on me,
And he took up his pen, and wrote, "Can such things be?
We are made the derision of Europe!"
And he went for old Billot et Cie.

In the game to ensue I shall not take a hand,
But I wish it came off over here in the Strand,
Where the ruse of from prisoners hiding
The charge, we do not understand!

To secure the right verdict courts-martial he packs
And, to come it still stronger, suppresses the facts;
And when hard pressed for this or that paper,
He gets in a thundering wax.

Which is why I remark, and my language is plain,
That for making the findings of courts-martial vain
War Minister Billot 's peculiar;
Which the same I am free to maintain.

THE BRITISH RAILWAY.

(Plain language from suffering Tom.)

Sir, I wish to remark—
And my language is plain—
That for scenes that are dark
And for rules most insane,
The British rail*way* is peculiar,
Which the same, I will try to explain.

N.E.R. is its name,
And I need not supply,
In regard to the same,
What these letters imply.
But in form it was honest and handsome,
As I often remarked to Nelly.

'Twas December the third,
Clear and kind were the skies,
Which it might be inferred,
N.E.R. was likewise;
But it served it that day upon Nelly
And me in a way I despise.

Which we had a small dip,
N.E.R. took our hand,
'Twas to Yorkshire, a trip
It did not understand.
But they smiled as we sat on the platform
And waited with patience so bland.

Well, the train came at last,
Nelly clung to my sleeve,
And at length we pushed past,
In a way that I grieve.
For the shouting was fumbled and deafening,
And the same with intent to deceive.

Then the tricks we were served
By that rail's companee,
And the way the train swerved
Was quite frightful to see,
Till at last I was pitched on my neighbour
And Nelly was shoved on to me.

Then I looked down on Nell
And she gazed up at me,
And I rose with a yell
And said "Need this be?
We have paid quite enough for our tickets;
I must write about this to Labbee."

In the scene that ensued
I did take a full hand,
And our words they were rude,
You will well understand.
To think that such muddles were frequent
In this our o'er-civilised land!

For our journey was long
And our feet they were cold,
For the draught it was strong
And the carriages old;
And ourselves, when at last we were landed,
Was really a sight to behold.

Which is why I remark—
And my language is plain—
That for ways that are dark
And for rules most insane,
The British rail*way* is peculiar,
Which the same I shall always maintain.

A Great Public Boon!

LIPTON

Has commenced making EXTRACT of BEEF and FLUID BEEF, and is now offering to the Public, at his Branches and Agencies, the Finest Quality

EXTRACT OF BEEF

EXTRACT OF BEEF & FLUID BEEF At prices which will place these most valuable articles of food WITHIN THE REACH OF ALL.

LIPTON'S EXTRACT OF BEEF and FLUID BEEF Are made from the finest quality of Fresh Ox Beef, under the most skilful, scientific, and practical supervision, by a process entirely his own, unquestionably making his EXTRACT OF BEEF and FLUID BEEF

FLUID BEEF

The Finest Quality ever offered to the Public, and SAVING PURCHASERS from 25 to 35 PER CENT.

THE DAYS OF HUGE PROFITS ARE OVER!

It is admitted by everyone that LIPTON caused a revolution in the Tea Trade, and forced Tea Dealers and Merchants to REDUCE THEIR PRICES. Before LIPTON introduced his celebrated Teas, THE PUBLIC HAD TO PAY nearly double the price they are now charged by LIPTON for the Finest Teas the World can produce.

WHAT LIPTON HAS DONE IN THE TEA TRADE, LIPTON WILL DO IN THE EXTRACT OF BEEF TRADE.

LIPTON'S FLUID BEEF contains the three principal properties of meat, viz., ALBUMEN, FIBRINE, and ESSENCE OF BEEF, in equal proportions, thus making A PERFECT BEEF FOOD, and as there are no condiments nor preservatives of a foreign nature used, it will be found that THE NATURAL FLAVOUR OF THE BEEF IS RETAINED.

LIPTON'S EXTRACT OF BEEF or FLUID BEEF makes the richest Beef Tea.

They are also invaluable in the domestic economy, and will be found by all good cooks the most economical and the best for flavouring Soups, Gravies, Sauces, Entrées, &c.

UPON THE PUBLIC VERDICT Lipton will rely. One trial of his Extract of Beef and Fluid Beef, he is confident, will ensure their being used in future IN EVERY HOME.

Lipton's Extract of Beef and Fluid Beef can be obtained from Lipton's Markets and Agencies throughout the World.

COCOA-NIB EXTRACT.
(TEA-LIKE.)

The choicest roasted nibs (broken-up beans) of the natural Cocoa on being subjected to powerful hydraulic pressure, give forth their excess of oil, leaving for use a finely-flavoured powder—"Cocoaine," a product which, when prepared with boiling water, has the consistence of tea, of which it is now, with many beneficially taking the place. Its active principle being a gentle nerve stimulant, supplies the needed energy without unduly exciting the system.

ENTRE NOUS.

THE Queen is to leave Windsor Castle for the Riviera on either Tuesday, March 8, or Wednesday, the 9th, and her Majesty will arrive at Cimiez on the afternoon of Friday, the 11th. The Queen will be accompanied to Cimiez by Princess Beatrice and Princess Louis of Battenberg. Her Majesty is to stay on the Continent between six and seven weeks, returning to Windsor Castle about Thursday, April 28. The Queen will both go and return by the Portsmouth and Cherbourg route. Her Majesty's large double saloon, which she uses on all her Continental journeys, and which is her own private property, is being overhauled and renovated at the Gare du Nord, Brussels, where it is always kept when not in use.

Her Majesty has consented to come up to Buckingham Palace to-morrow (Thursday) morning for two nights, in order that she may receive the Diplomatic Corps at the Drawing Room on Friday, as it causes much inconvenience for this annual function to be postponed until May, as was intended. The Queen will remain in the Throne Room on Friday only until the entrée is over, and, so far as the general company are concerned, the Drawing Room will be held by the Princess of Wales. The Queen does not now join in the Royal procession from the Sovereign's closet to the Throne Room, but she is wheeled in a chair direct from her own apartments to her seat.

A ridiculous statement has appeared in some papers that the Queen is going to grant the privilege of the entrée to the daughters of Lord Rosebery at the Drawing Room in July, "in order that these two débutantes may be received by her Majesty in person." As a matter of fact, the unmarried daughters of an ex-Cabinet Minister have the entrée at Court as a right, so there could be no question of the Queen making any special arrangement for the Ladies Primrose. It might just as well be stated that the Queen was considering whether she would grant the entrée to one of the Ambassadors.

The Queen was exceedingly annoyed at the publicity which had been given to her proposed visit to Netley, which was intended to be kept a profound secret until it was over. Just before her Majesty left Osborne to embark on board the Alberta at East Cowes, she directed Sir Henry Byng, the Equerry-in-Waiting, to telegraph a peremptory order to Netley that all reporters were to be entirely excluded from the hospital during the Queen's visit. Of course, this order was strictly carried out, and therefore the circumstantial account of the Queen's pathetic conversation with the sick and wounded soldiers was simply evolved by the reporters out of their own fertile and ingenious imaginations.

The Prince of Wales will leave London for Paris and Cannes either on Saturday night or else early next week, and H.R.H. intends to stay on the Continent until a few days before Easter, when he will be at Sandringham, where there is to be a small party for the West Norfolk Hunt Steeplechase. The Princess of Wales and Princess Victoria are not going to Copenhagen until after the second Drawing Room, on March 11. They will stay in Denmark until the end of April, returning to London about the 28th of that month, accompanied by Princess Charles of Denmark, who is coming to England on a long visit, as her husband is going on a cruise to Ceylon and Siam in the man-of-war which is commanded by his uncle, Prince Waldemar. The Princess of Wales is to stay at Copenhagen, with the King and Queen, at the Amalienborg Palace, where the Empress Dowager of Russia will also be lodged. Princess Victoria is to be the guest of her sister, Princess Charles, at her flat in the immense new palace of the King of the Hellenes.

The marriage of Princess Feodore of Saxe-Meiningen, only child of the Hereditary Prince, and granddaughter of the Empress Frederick, with Prince Henry XXX. of Reuss, has been postponed until September, when it will take place at Cronburg, from Friedrichshof, the residence of the Empress Frederick in the Taunus Hills. The Hereditary Princess Charlotte and Princess Feodore are coming to England at the end of June on a visit to the Queen at Windsor Castle.

The King and Queen of Italy have offered to place the Royal apartments in the Pitti Palace at the disposal of Princess Beatrice, if she wishes to visit Florence during the Queen's stay on the Riviera.

Colonel Carrington and Colonel Davidson are to be the Equerries in Waiting on the Queen during March, replacing Sir Henry Byng and Major Legge. The Lords in Waiting next month will be, successively, Lords Bridport, Denbigh, and Bagot; while Sir Edmund Commerell, Lord William Cecil, and Major Harbord are to be the Grooms in Waiting.

The St James's Gazette printed some remarkable information about "some of the débutantes" of next season, which is "gleaned" from an American contemporary. It is a pity that such insane nonsense should be thought worthy of being quoted by any rational journal. Lady Mary Hamilton, who, it is stated, "is to be brought out with her fortune of $8,000,000," happens to be not yet fifteen, so that she is not likely to be "brought out" for the next three years. Lady Margaret Crichton Stuart, who "will make her first appearance in the social throng," has been out for nearly three years. Lady Cromartie has also been out for some time, and although she possesses large farming estates in the North of Scotland, yet it is absurd to describe her as having a "great fortune."

It is droll to see how some of the American papers are revelling in the saturnalia of snobbishness for which the creation of the Order of the Crown has afforded so favourable an opening. One Republican journal devotes a whole page to extolling the feminine vanities of this egregious society, and flaunting in the faces of a plebeian community the Royal pedigrees of the members. Only women who are descended from one of the Kings of England, Scotland, France, or Germany are eligible for admission to this very select Order. Thus, Mrs. C. C. Harrison traces her ancestry—so the papers say—to Hugh Capet, King of France; Mrs. John Jacob Astor to Edward I. of England; Mrs. S. F. Leib to the Emperor Charlemagne; Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt to Alfred the Great; and Mrs. J. T. Spencer to Robert Bruce. I like best, however, the modest claim of the Lady Anna Von Rydingsvard (of Boston). Her ladyship is a descendant of "the entire roll of monarchs of England and France before the Tudor Ascension!"

The pedigree-making industry does not yet seem to have been properly developed in the United States, inasmuch as it is said that less than a hundred women have qualified for membership of the Order of the Crown. In London, as some of my readers may remember, there is an enterprising genealogist who is ready to work up a Royal pedigree for anybody prepared to pay ten guineas for the luxury. He would evidently find a great demand for his services in America; and the pedigrees he produces are, I am sure, quite as authentic as those of the exalted dames who constitute the Order of the Crown.

Amongst the visitors who stayed with Lord and Lady Cadogan last week, when the second Levee and Drawing Room of the season were held at Dublin Castle, were Lord and Lady Ormonde, Ladies Beatrice and Constance Butler, Lord and Lady Mayo, the Hon. Harry and Mrs. Bourke, Lord and Lady Rossmore, Lord Dunraven, Lady Lucy Hicks-Beach and her daughter, Mr. and Lady Sarah Wilson, and Sir Charles and Lady Barrington. The attendance at the Levee and Drawing Room was small compared to the previous occasions, most of those who intend to "do" the Castle season taking it from the beginning. Unlike these ceremonials at the Royal Court, they are, at the Irish Viceregal Court, chiefly viewed—and attended accordingly—as the prelude to a series of dances and other entertainments. Every one of a certain—or, possibly, also of an uncertain—position who attends a Levee or Drawing Room is profoundly aggrieved if no invitations follow.

Cycling on the footpaths may fitly be called, if not a burning, at least a scorching, question in Ireland at present. The sacrifice of one poor cripple does not seem to have quite satisfied Dublin Castle. The Viceregal decree abolishing the humble pedestrian has not yet been revoked. The Queen of France wondered why people should starve for want of bread when there were cakes to be had; no doubt the Lord Lieutenant and Chief Secretary wonder why any one should walk when there are carriages and bicycles. Fortunately, the High Court of Justice, and the magistrates, in many cases, have come to the assistance of the lowly. The Castle "tyred wheel" has not been allowed, as yet, to play the part of the "mailed fist" in Ireland.

The landlords also have been grumbling over the fashion in which justice in Ireland is administered, and perhaps with more reason than usual, apropos of the fortieth section of the last Land Act. Apart from the judicial decision itself, certain circumstances attending it were unsatisfactory, and hardly in keeping with a blindfold justice holding an even balance. Lord Ashbourne, who had the casting voice amongst the seven judges in giving judgment on the Act, was partly its author, and the decision he upheld was that of his brother-in-law, Sir E. Bewley.

The annual exhibition of the Water Colour Society of Ireland was opened in Dublin on Friday. This Society, though comparatively in its youth, has produced many members who are well-known exhibitors in the London galleries—Miss Rose Barton and Miss Mildred Butler—both associates of the R.W.S—Miss Helen O'Hara, Mr. Bingham McGuinness, R.H.A., Miss Fanny Currey, Mr. A. Williams, R.H.A. Lady Cadogan, with Lord and Lady Ormonde, Lady Mayo, and a Viceregal suite were present on the opening day, being received by Miss H. R. Lynch, Mr. P. Chevenix Trench, and Mr. Clayton Brown, members of the Committee. The exhibition is a good one, some excellent work of artists from "across the water" being exhibited as well as that of Irish artists.

A happily rare, if not an unprecedented event in University history has just taken place at Durham, in the shape of a meeting of Convocation in order to deprive a graduate, who had been convicted of felony, of his degrees in arts, medicine, and surgery. There was no discussion whatever, the painful proceedings being purely formal, and the sitting occupied less than a quarter of an hour.

Mr. Carrick Moore, of Corsewall, who died last week at the age of ninety-three, owned large estates in Wigtownshire and Kirkcudbrightshire, and also in various parts of England. He was a very clever man, with strong literary and scientific tastes, and he had a great reputation as a geologist. Mr. Carrick Moore had been for many years a constant habitué of the Athenæum, where he will be much missed by the older members. His talk was remarkably good, and he had the fine manners of the old school. He was a most liberal and considerate landlord, and for generous kindness his name was a household word throughout the wide district of Kirkcoln, in which the Corsewall estate is situated. This property, which was purchased by Mr. Robert Carrick, a well-known and very rich banker at Glasgow, from whom it came to the Moores, will now pass under the entail to Sir David Carrick Buchanan, of Drumpellier. Mr. Carrick Moore was a nephew of Sir John, the hero of Corunna, and at his place in Surrey there is an oak in the grounds which was planted by the General the day before he left England for Spain.

It was lately proposed that the Pope should be approached on the subject of the priestly precepts in reference to animals which are responsible for so much barbarous cruelty in Southern Italy. One of my Italian readers makes the further suggestion that any representation to the Pope in favour of more humanitarian teaching will be most likely to succeed if it comes from prominent English Catholics whose opinion carries great weight owing to his Holiness's intense desire for the "conversion of England." There is an innuendo in this which I by no means endorse. At the same time I repeat the suggestion itself, in the hope that some influential English Catholic, like the Duke of Norfolk, will bear it in mind the next time he is at the Vatican.

Apropos of a reference in TRUTH the other day to the perils incidental to the practice of putting boots outside doors at hotels, I have been asked by a traveller why this primitive arrangement cannot be improved upon by providing each room with a small cupboard, having one door opening out into the passage and another into the room, in which boots might be placed. The answer to this is that the thing not only can be done, but has been done. I can mention the Hôtel Métropole, London, as one house where such an arrangement has been adopted. The outer door of the cupboard has a key, which is kept by the chambermaid, while the inner door can be bolted on the inside, so as to ensure the occupant of the room against any breach of his or her privacy. Seeing how freely money and thought are expended on adding to the comforts of modern hotels, it is rather strange that this contrivance has not been more widely adopted. Besides the protection which it affords to boots, the arrangement has another advantage which will be specially appreciated by ladies, for it obviates the necessity of visitors appearing at their doors in déshabille to take in their hot water or tea.

THE PASSING OF ALFRED.

Literature announces that the Poet Laureate has severed his connection with the Standard, in order to have more time to devote to the Muses.

When first this piece of news is read,
Which Literature diffuses,
The reader his remark thereon
With difficulty chooses:
Ought he to "Happy Standard!" cry,
Or moan "Alas! poor Muses"?

We seem to have come now to the beginning of the end of the Imperial Institute. The crisis is marked by the official intimation of the desire of the Government of Victoria to drop its contribution. There is a possibility, of course, that the Victorian Government may reconsider its position; there is also a possibility that other Colonies may remain faithful while Victoria secedes. But the probabilities are all the other way. If Victoria is not getting value for its money, and feels that the money, if spent at all, should be spent in the City rather than at South Kensington, other Colonies are not likely to be long in arriving at the same conclusions. From certain recent utterances of Sir Walter Peace, Natal seems already on the road.

What is happening does not surprise me, and will not surprise any one who read the articles on the management of the Institute which appeared in TRUTH last spring. The Imperial Institute can do nothing for the Colonies commensurate with the contribution which they are making. The site is a fatal difficulty, even if the management were in better hands, and the plan of operations were drawn on more practical lines. No sane person could suppose that the Colonies would continue much longer to contribute to the up-keep of the forlorn and deserted galleries at Kensington, and the only wonder is that they have paid tribute so long as they have. The last straw has, I suppose, been the discovery that the Institute has only been able to keep open its Imperial doors by importing Continental bands to amuse the London public with foreign music. At contributing to that they not unnaturally draw the line.

A correspondent of mine, who was at the recent morning performance of "Much Ado About Nothing," at the St. James's, sends on a copy of the earnest appeal Mr. George Alexander made to the ladies present to remove their matinée hats. "Scarcely a lady in the theatre," he adds, "complied with the lessee's request." My correspondent has been induced, in his indignation, to pen a verse or two on the subject, which I publish with pleasure, as I, too, know to my sorrow what a nuisance the matinée hat is :—

SCHULZ-CURTIUS JUMPS INTO THE GULF.

There was once in the past a renowned Alexander
Who did in his time many wonderful things ;
Who defeated in turn this and that great commander,
And made but short work of a number of kings.
You may read in your "Grote" his remarkable story ;
But I very much doubt, notwithstanding all that,
Whether he—even he—in the height of his glory,
Could ever have vanquished the Matinée Hat.

So let not his namesake who runs the St. James's,
His recent repulse take too sadly to heart.
We know he a protégé favoured of Fame's is,
We've seen him with credit play many a part ;
But, oh ! 'twas too much he was boldly essaying,
When down at his desk he defiantly sat,
And penned—(thus incredible rashness displaying)
His "notice" concerning the Matinée Hat.

'Tis true that in much he has found the Fates lenient,
But he should have had a suspicion inbred,
That to many a dame 'twould be most inconvenient
To suddenly doff what is pinned on her head.
He ought to have known, too, how very much hinges
(For particulars—vide each week's "Toilet Chat")—
On the puffs and the pads, and the fronts, and the fringes
That some ladies wear 'neath the Matinée Hat.

But fortune, we know, is exceedingly fickle,
And the ladies, if wise, for defeat will prepare ;
For the daring Schulz-Curtius a rod has in pickle,
And already strange rumours are filling the air ;
At last one lessee has determined to harden
His heart, and has made his arrangements all pat—
When Opera next occupies Covent Garden—
For finally crushing the Matinée Hat.

It is clear that the ladies won't listen to reason ;
Pleas, prayers, and petitions have nothing availed ;
Satirical sallies and stanzas in season
Alike to secure their attention have failed.
So now 'tis resolved that a more drastic measure
Shall cure what the playgoer sadly deplores—
Schulz-Curtius has thought out a plan at his leisure
For stopping the Matinée Hat at the doors !

A new departure in journalism has been made by the proprietor of the Lincolnshire Echo and the Lincoln Gazette. He states that as he received "many appeals from delinquents (usually drunken cases) to keep their names out of his papers," it occurred to him that "in doing a merciful act he ought also to assist local charity" ; and to begin with he has charged one delinquent 4s. for suppressing his name, and sent that sum to a hospital as "an inebriate's penance-money." This seems to mean that in future offenders can have their names omitted from the papers if they are able and willing to pay for the privilege. Merciful and charitable though the motive may be, it appears to me to be a very ill-advised scheme. In the public interest it is not desirable that offenders should be allowed to escape the penalty of publicity by payment of a donation to a charity, and for the credit of the Press it is assuredly undignified, to say the least, for a paper to allow itself to be thus vicariously "squared."

The Daily News was very funny in its comments on Mr. Wallace's speech in the Catholic University debate, insisting that "the people of Scotland do not desire that the Universities shall be sectarian." As a matter of fact, every Scotch University is a thoroughly sectarian establishment, always including a Presbyterian Theological Faculty, which is the Divinity Hall of the Kirk. Mr. Wallace, moreover, is the very last man in the House of Commons to need correction on any point connected with the Universities of Scotland, considering that for many years he was a prominent member of the Edinburgh Theological Faculty, and held the Chair of Ecclesiastical History, being at the same time minister of the historic Greyfriars Church.

The death of Bishop Selwyn makes a vacancy among the Queen's Chaplains-in-Ordinary. Dr. Selwyn was appointed on the recommendation of Lord Carrington, who was then Lord Chamberlain. Prebendary Turner, the well-known Vicar of Whitechapel, is to be the new Chaplain-in-Ordinary.

The special Lent sermons at St. Paul's during the midday (1.15) services this week are to be preached by the Bishop of St. Andrew's, late of Truro. During the third week in Lent (March 14 to 18), the pulpit will be occupied by the Rev. J. A. V. Magee, vicar of Gargrave-in-Craven, who is a son of the late Archbishop of York, and a most admirable preacher. Canon Knox-Little will be heard from March 28 to April 1, and the Bishop of London is to preach from April 4 to April 7, Dr. Creighton also taking the Three Hours' Service on Good Friday.

Archdeacon Sinclair is to be the Canon in residence and Sunday afternoon preacher at St. Paul's Cathedral during March, replacing the Bishop of Stepney ; while at Westminster Abbey, Archdeacon Furse is to be succeeded by Canon Gore, who will be on duty for two months.

A short time since the Vicar of East Ardsley was issuing appeals broadcast for contributions towards the cost of the "Jubilee wing" which has been added to the church schools. In his "Parish Magazine" the Vicar has now explained that the "primary cause" of the enlargement of the school, upon which £900 has been expended, was "the removal of three church workers" from the St. Gabriel's Mission Church and "his inability to fill their vacant places." St. Gabriel's was built to supply the needs of an outlying part of the parish ; but because three workers cannot now be obtained on the spot the further sum of £900 has been spent in order that the children may be taken from their own district, and accommodated at the parish school a mile or so away! Such is the genesis of the remarkable enterprise which people in all parts of the country have been asked to support. I do not wonder that the necessary funds were not forthcoming from the parishioners.

A somewhat perplexing communication in reference to the sale of the American Cemetery at Jerusalem has just reached me. It has been sent on behalf of a small religious community, whose deceased members have been buried in this cemetery. Some months ago one of their number died, and application was made, as usual, to the United States Consul for the key of the cemetery. It was then discovered, for the first time, that the cemetery had been sold, and the remains of the dead exhumed and removed in wooden boxes to the English cemetery. The land was vested in the American Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, and it is alleged that it was to replenish the depleted coffers of the Board that the sale was effected. Secrecy was observed because the transaction was contrary to Turkish law.

My informants say that they have addressed protests against the outrage to the State Department at Washington, to the American Ambassador at Constantinople, and also to the British Foreign Office, at least two of the bodies disinterred being those of Englishmen. The Foreign Office here was the most attentive and sympathetic; but from no quarter have they been able to obtain any redress for the wrong they consider they have suffered, or any assistance in recovering the remains which were so unceremoniously dealt with. Now they ask me what else they can do. I really do not know—unless they like to seek the advice of the Kaiser on his approaching visit to the Holy Land. He is a friend of Abdul Hamid, and Abdul Hamid is apparently the party to put the matter right.

One or two inquiries have reached me lately respecting the begging-letters of the Rev. S. S. Browne, Rector of North Cove, Beccles. I therefore take the opportunity of repeating the advice that I have already given to my readers to turn a deaf ear to the voice of this clerical charmer. Mr. Browne has several times come under notice in Truth. He is an old man, and has been begging for cash on every conceivable pretext for the last twenty years, first as a curate, and afterwards as an incumbent. When I last referred to him, about a year ago, his sacristan had dropped a valuable flagon, and four pounds was required to purchase a new one. Immediately after that he wanted money to restore a series of precious thirteenth-century frescoes in the parish church at North Cove. Lately, he seems to have reverted to the original tack, and begs frankly for himself, on the strength of a long story about the poverty of his living. There are hundreds of men in the Church, I regret to say, quite as badly off as he is, and most of them far more deserving, though they do not thrust their necessities upon the public.

Talking of the poor clergy, I had a letter the other day on the subject of clerical appeals which is well deserving of attention. The writer was struck by the fact that his alms were asked for the relief of the poor clergy by a society numbering among its patrons and organisers numbers of exalted ecclesiastics, all well endowed with this world's goods. There are, he remarks, quite as many poverty-stricken commercial clerks as there are destitute clerks in Holy Orders. But what would be thought of an association of bankers and merchants who put forth general appeals to the public to subscribe to a fund for supplementing the incomes of their own employees? The two cases, of course, are not precisely on all fours, because the higher clergy do not pay the lower clergy. But there is a certain amount of point in the argument.

The Church possesses in the aggregate enormous wealth, and many of its higher dignitaries draw princely salaries. If the whole revenue of the Church were equitably divided, there would be enough to keep all in such comfort and dignity as befits their sacred calling. The proper and reasonable way to relieve clerical distress is to redistribute the ecclesiastical funds on an equitable basis; and if the higher clergy felt sincerely for the sufferings of their humbler brethren, they would be the first to advocate this redistribution. Until they are prepared to do so, they have no business to appeal to the public. There is something offensive in the position of a bishop, living in a palace on £5,000 a year, passing round his episcopal hat for the benefit of struggling incumbents on a pound a week; and I do not think the position is materially improved by the fact that his Lordship puts a sovereign into the hat himself by way of ground-bait.

I wish all who are interested in the playground question, which was discussed in these columns a few months ago, would read the record of the work of the Metropolitan Public Gardens Association which is set forth in its recently-issued annual report. The result would be, I am sure, a very considerable addition to the income of this admirable Association. In a letter I published some time ago, Lord Meath, the chairman, said his ideal was that there should be a playground within a quarter of a mile of every working man's house in London. I sympathise with that ideal, but its attainment will have to wait, I fear, until the dim and distant future. In the meantime the Association is doing a great amount of good work. To do more, it requires more money, and I hope its present appeal for funds will meet with a liberal response.

The traffic in live poultry between Ireland and England, referred to in last week's Truth, is carried on by more than one route. I hear from Dover that large numbers of crates packed with fowls are landed there, having been shipped from Waterford or other Irish ports. I suppose that on a voyage from Waterford to Dover some provision must necessarily be made for feeding the birds, if they are to reach their destination alive; but from the account given of their appearance on reaching Dover, it might be well for the R.S.P.C.A. to inquire what that provision really amounts to. The whole trade wants carefully watching.

The Gurkha has been a good deal before the British public of late. I trust, therefore, that I may be excused for calling the attention of my charitable readers, especially those interested in the Army and in India, to the fact that a movement is on foot for establishing an asylum for the orphans of Gurkha soldiers. Colonel Ridgeway, V.C., late Commandant 44th Gurkhas, is President of the Association which has the undertaking in hand. It is only desired to raise sufficient funds to open the building clear of debt, and after that it will be supported by contributions from the Gurkha regiments. Contributions towards the asylum may be sent to Messrs. Grindlay & Co., 55, Parliament-street. It may be asked why a special provision should be made for the children of Gurkhas. The answer is that the Gurkhas are natives of Nepaul, which is across the frontier, and that they are nearly all married men and bring their wives with them, so that in the event of the husband's death the family are left helpless in a foreign land; whereas the native Indian Sepoy may trust to his wife and children being looked after by their own friends and countrymen in the event of anything happening to him.

Respecting the value of the Gurkhas as soldiers, Lieutenant Wilson, Adjutant 44th Gurkhas, writing to me on behalf of the asylum, says "There is no better soldier in the world than the Gurkha; brave, loyal, devoted to his officers, fond of any game or sport, well behaved in barracks, and trustworthy and patient under all circumstances. From every point of view it is a pity that his children, born more or less in our service, should be neglected, when a little trouble and expense would turn them into first-rate soldiers and excellent fighting material, by instilling into them from childhood habits of obedience and discipline."

The 1st Battalion The Queen's has furnished during the Frontier campaign an interesting illustration of the value of the confidential report system. During the last fifteen months Major Hanford-Flood of The Queen's has been twice passed over for promotion, one of his juniors having been appointed to the command of the 1st Battalion, and the other second in command of the 2nd Battalion. It is understood that this is in consequence of an unfavourable report on Major Hanford-Flood by a former Commanding Officer. During the Frontier campaign, however, owing to the fact that the present C.O. has been for some time on the sick list, and that the second in command was on the Staff, the battalion has been on several occasions commanded by Major Hanford-Flood. One of the occasions was the taking of the Sampagha Pass, one of the few really creditable incidents in the campaign, and one in which The Queen's greatly distinguished themselves. It is not likely that General Gaselee would have quietly submitted to the command of a battalion of his brigade being held, during a critical period on active service, by an officer of whose competency he had any doubt, and his confidence in Major Hanford-Flood seems to have been amply justified by the results. Can anything be more unjust than that an officer, who is thoroughly popular with all ranks in the regiment, and has proved his fitness for command in the face of the enemy, should be debarred from promotion through some fad or prejudice of a Colonel under whom he is no longer serving?

"It would be interesting to know," remarks a military acquaintance of mine (and I entirely agree with him) "whether there is any foundation for the current belief that the stoppage of promotion among the Colonels of the Royal Artillery is due to one of the clerks in the Finance Branch at the War Office." A vacancy on the list of Major-Generals occurred on October 1 last, and a second on January 4 of this year. Neither has been filled up, and it is understood that the clerk above referred to, who is looked upon as a high authority, is unable to decide whether he will allow the promotions to take place or not.

Here is another example of the straining at gnats in Army medical examinations. A young Militia officer, a highly promising man in every respect, was recently rejected on account of an insignificant deformity, due to his having been accidentally shot in one foot. The accident was no impediment to his marching, or his gait, or to his performance of any of his duties, as proved by the fact that he had been for some months attached to a Line regiment at Aldershot. It was simply a question of appearances; but that was enough to settle the case with the medical board. We shall hear next that some man has been rejected on account of an unduly conspicuous pimple on the nose.

Of course it is true enough, as an Army surgeon points out in a letter just received, that if the medical examiners pass doubtful men they are not doing their duty to the Service, or to the taxpayers. But the answer to that is that they frequently do pass doubtful men. While they are straining at the gnats, they are continually swallowing camels. The camels are simply the candidates who have influence at the War Office. I have particulars of two cases before me now, together with the opinion of an Army medical officer that neither man ought ever to have been passed. One of the two has been continually absent from duty since he joined, and has been home from a Mediterranean station and back, at the public expense, to undergo an operation. This man was let into the Army entirely through private influence. Medical boards are habitually unfair under pressure, and they frequently make glaring mistakes even when they have a free hand.

Messrs. Sampson Low & Co., Limited, send me a promising-looking little "Handbook to British Military Stations Abroad," edited by Mr. C. R. Duncombe-Jewell. The book gives all particulars relating to such stations which are likely to be of use to officers or others who have to visit them, including the situation, clothing required, hotels, clubs, amusements, sporting facilities in the neighbourhood, and railway and postal information. So far as I can judge, it is certainly calculated to supply a want.

A lady writes to me as follows:—

I think you have been hammering away at "Tommy's" grievances long enough. What say you now to turn your attention to the officers, who, believe me as an officer's wife, have by far the worst of it, only they are ready to accept the inevitable, while "Tommy" growls away till he gets what he wants. . . . .

My dear lady, I am always ready to turn my attention to officers' grievances, especially when their wives bring them personally before me, and I do not think it can fairly be said that the commissioned ranks do not get a fair share of the space which TRUTH can give them. When, however, I am asked, even by an officers' wife, to take up as the first grievance the payment of income tax on officers' salaries, I must point out that I have already given on more than one occasion my reasons for not regarding this liability as a grievance. I cannot see any reason why an Army man should not pay the same taxes as a civilian. Please try another grievance.

Many a grievance of Tommy Atkins has been reported at one time and another from Hamilton Depot. Now the tale is varied by a growl from Mrs. A. It seems that the wives of soldiers at Hamilton get no work in the shape of shirtmaking for the soldiers. There are plenty of women with large families on their hands who would be glad of the work, and, as a good many shillings per week are earned by such work at other places, it ought not to be difficult to make similar arrangements at Hamilton.

Judging by the Army Estimates and the accompanying Memorandum, the next instalment of Army Reform is to be a thing of shreds and patches. So far as the present announcement goes, it entirely falsifies any hopes of a comprehensive scheme of reorganisation which Lord Lansdowne's recent utterances have held out. "Tommy" is to get his shilling at last, but what is given with one hand is taken away with the other by the substitution of a gratuity of a pound a year for the present deferred pay. The new three years' service infantry-men are not even to get this concession, which may probably be taken to indicate the objection to the new term of enlistment entertained in certain high quarters. Nor is the shilling to be given before nineteen years of age—a partial and ineffectual recognition of the principle that the soldier's pay should increase as he improves his professional qualification.

For the rest, additional money to the tune of about two millions a year—the exact figure is almost impossible to calculate owing to the tangled confusion in which the votes are presented—is to be spent in merely adding so many men to cavalry, infantry, and artillery; and the number we shall get for the money within the year will inevitably turn out far below the number promised on paper. Beyond this, the Secretary of State's Memorandum promises nothing. The outcome of all that has been written and said in the last few months on the shortcomings of the Army is simply a demand for so many more millions in cash, so many more men on paper, with a few trifling concessions to the rank and file, obviously designed merely to stimulate recruiting, and bring up the extra men needed to meet the demand. Of any general scheme of reorganisation, of any serious administrative reform, of any attempt to place on an efficient footing the hundreds of thousands of ill-equipped and ill-organised troops constituting our auxiliary forces, there is not a hint. It is a hand-to-mouth proposal, merely designed to patch up and perpetuate a system that has broken down. As to the duty of every Radical to resist an increase of ten per cent. in our Army expenditure on such terms, there can be no question.

On Friday last the Daily Chronicle published a full account of a complete revolution in the Field Artillery of the German and French armies, which has been carried out with complete secrecy within a few months. The statements made, whether accurate in every detail or not, can hardly be untrue in the main. Unless they are, a similar revolution must follow in our own Artillery within the next year or two. Not a penny ought to be voted towards increasing our present Artillery until the Government has made a full statement as to what has been done in this direction in France and Germany, and what is intended in England.

It may interest the War Office to know that I have received from many quarters proof of what was said in last week's TRUTH as to the readiness of many retired Army doctors and chaplains to return to duty if the opportunity of doing so were given to them. This applies more especially to retired Army Medical Staff men, and as all of them are already liable to further service, it seems only fair that if the strength of the Staff is to be increased in order to meet the increased strength of the Army such men should at least have an opportunity of rejoining before fresh men are enrolled.

The latest intelligence from Fort Carlisle brings to light a characteristic performance of the Royal Engineers. An electric light installation is now being carried out at that station by the Army Works Department, in the course of which a tunnel has had to be constructed. The Royal Engineer officers who have the work in hand seem to have assumed that they were going to cut through hard rock, but it has turned out that they had a mere shell of rock between the tunnel and the clay overhead, the result being that the roof has twice collapsed. I suppose that the cost of the work will be largely increased in consequence, and although no one has been injured by the slips that have taken place, that is clearly not the fault of the Royal Engineers.

I commend to the consideration of the War Office the following extract from a private letter received the other day from a man serving with the Buffs on the Indian Frontier :—

> One hundred and thirty time-expired men and forty invalids are just leaving the battalion. They will be in Kent in a few weeks, and they hope to succeed in making the next recruiting returns of the regiment the lowest on record.

What is the meaning of this seditious utterance? The recent record of the regiment will, I think, show. In 1895 the Buffs went up to Chitral, and bore a fair share in all the hardships of the campaign, besides doing a lot of heavy work at roadmaking. During 1896 the married women were at Cherat for six months without their husbands. The regiment followed to the same place in 1897, and there experienced a severe epidemic of enteric fever, thirty men, women, and children dying in three months. At the end of July last they went to Malakand, the women being sent off to Murree, and from that time to the end of the campaign they were constantly engaged, first in fighting and afterwards in roadmaking. Finally, after three years on the Frontier in work of this kind, while several other regiments have been sent back to healthy stations, the Buffs have now been selected, for an indefinite period, to form part of the Swat Valley garrison. It is this last straw which has prompted the sentence quoted above, and I think no one can deny that the regiment has cause to complain. It has acquitted itself admirably on all occasions; I believe there has not been a single court-martial during the whole of the three years on the Frontier; and another fact which speaks well for the smartness of the regiment is that during the whole time only four rifles have been lost, one of which has since been recovered.

There was a reference in last week's TRUTH to the charge made against Militiamen for kit marking, which was given as eightpence—fourpence on completion of recruit's drill, and another fourpence when the man comes up for his annual training. I wrote this on the strength of a case where these charges were said to have been levied, but, if the statement was correct, the case would seem to have been exceptional, for I hear from several quarters that the ordinary charge only amounts to twopence, and that it is only levied once. If, therefore, any Militiaman has really been charged as much as eightpence, somebody must have been robbing him.

Here is a little hint for Militia officers when their regiments are next coming up for training. A man who formerly served in a certain battalion of Irish Militia states that on coming up for training last year he was charged a shilling or two for having returned his rifle in a dirty condition at the close of the previous year's training. The reason that his rifle was in this condition was simply that he had been unable to obtain any material to clean it with. A quantity of cleaning material was issued to certain N.C.O.s, but very little of it ever came into the hands of the men. What became of it is not certain, but an inspection of the under-garments of some of the N.C.O.s' families might possibly throw light upon the mystery.

Why should the Malta Sporting and Jockey Club be allowed to employ soldiers as waiters at its race meetings without paying for their services? At the last meeting held by the Club in December, a number of officers' servants and mess waiters went down to assist in serving the lunch and tea, besides a regimental cook to make sandwiches, and a fatigue party to wash up. They had to be on duty from 2.30 until it was time to hurry back and get ready for mess, but up to the present time they have received no pay for this work. It seems that the picket which is in attendance on the course are paid one shilling a day for their services, and that servants and waiters have been paid on some previous occasions. It may be by an oversight that they have not been paid this time, in which case I hope that this mention of the matter will have the desired result.

According to the Aberdeen Journal the Duke of Richmond has just refused the Elgin Volunteers a highly eligible site for a range at Fochabers-on-Spey. The corps in question is one of the many that are now without ranges, owing to their old ones having been condemned as unsafe for shooting with the Lee-Metford rifle. The Duke of Richmond's land at Fochabers is a wide stretch of waste, where rifle practice could have been indulged in without inconvenience to the Duke or any other living soul. It seems to have been expected in the neighbourhood that a distinguished ornament of the Party which contains all the patriots, and which is so anxious to improve the Army, would have rejoiced at a chance of putting his land to such good use. But such expectations are generally fallacious.

Among the batch of Tommy's grievances pilloried below will be found a further example of the erratic way in which time-expired men are shipped home from India. Is it not about time that the War Office reorganised the whole system on some definite and regular plan, which will ensure men being brought home in the order of seniority, to say nothing of securing that every man shall be back in England by the time when he is legally entitled to his discharge?

2nd Battalion, Royal Scots, Mandalay.—About 200 time-expired men of this battalion ought by rights to have been brought home by steamers leaving Burma in November last. For some reason, however, only about forty of them were taken, while room was found for the whole of the time-expired men from the Suffolk Regiment—more than double the number of the Royal Scots. The whole of the Scotsmen left England with the battalion in December, 1890, so that they have been a full seven years abroad, and have practically completed the whole of their colour service in India. Many of the Suffolk men, on the other hand, have come out at considerably later dates.

2nd Somersetshire Light Infantry, Aldershot.—Certain companies of this battalion, a wing of which was recently stationed at Alderney, have a grievance in regard to the refuse which was used during that time for keeping pigs for the use of the wing. The pigs seem to have been the property of the regiment, and those that were still alive when the wing left Alderney were sold.

For the best means of FURNISHING throughout in most tasteful manner, at lowest cost, see HAMPTON & SONS' extensive and unrivalled selection of all the latest productions in artistic Furniture, Carpets, Fabrics, &c. Catalogue free.—Pall Mall East, S.W.

Out of the proceeds the refuse which had been supplied by the sergeants' mess was paid for, but the company messes received nothing, although apparently they had an equal right to payment, and an equal property in the pigs. If this statement of facts is correct, perhaps some arrangement might be made for putting the account right, as there is nothing which causes "Tommy" more dissatisfaction than to feel that he has been defrauded of his just rights over the mess accounts.

New Barracks, Scarborough.—Some dissatisfaction prevails among the N.C.O.s here at the fact of a set of married quarters being occupied by a corporal and his wife, who are married without leave and not on the strength, while at least one married couple on the strength are living out of barracks. The corporal's wife happens to be the mistress of the infant school, and it is understood that, unless she is allowed to live in barracks, she will not undertake the work. But surely there is nothing in her position which entitles her husband to be favoured at the expense of several men who have a better right to the privilege. Besides that, the fact of married people on the strength having to live out of barracks and draw lodging, fuel, and light allowances, involves an expense to the taxpayer which ought not to be incurred.

3rd Battalion, Manchester Regiment, Ashton-under-Lyne.—Here are two cases which seem to indicate that justice is meted out in a somewhat free and easy fashion at this Depot:—(1) A Militia recruit whose boots were not laced to the entire satisfaction of a certain officer, was brought up for being "improperly dressed on guard-mounting," and was sentenced to seven days' C.B., and to attend every parade in marching order for a week. The parades which this man would have to attend are, running drill, 7 a.m.; defaulters' fatigue, 8.15 to 8.45; parade, 9 to 10 and 11 to 12; defaulters' fatigue, 12.15 to 12.45; parade, 2 to 3; defaulters' fatigue or drill, 3.25 to 4.45; defaulters' roll-call, every half-hour from 6 p.m. to 9 p.m. A pretty stiff dose for a little mistake in the matter of lacing a boot. (2) Two men, A and B, were absent from kit inspection. A is groom to the Officer Commanding the district, B ditto to the Adjutant of the 3rd Battalion. B has to go nearly two miles to his master's stables, while the C.O.'s stables are at the barracks. A has 5½ years' service, B 9½ years, and has had no entry for eight years. B was brought up before the Commanding Officer and given five days' C.B.; A's offence passed unnoticed.

9th Lancers, Ladysmith, Natal.—Here is a clothing grievance of a kind which is very common in the Army. The regiment has just received a new issue of cloth trousers. Numbers of the men, having worn out the previous issue, have obtained new trousers at their own expense during the last two or three months. Their new garments having been only worn a few times, they ask to be allowed cash compensation in place of a new issue of further clothing. But this is refused. Many of the men will be transferred to the Reserve before the present stock of garments is worn out, and their clothing could then only be sold at a fraction of its value. There ought to be no difficulty in a case of this kind about allowing the men a cash payment, instead of forcing them to take new clothing which they do not want.

Station Hospital, Barbados.—The Medical Staff Corps at this hospital are very badly off for canteen accommodation. The only European canteen is a mile distant, and none of the M.S.C. detachment are allowed to leave hospital before 5 p.m., so that they are unable to make use of the canteen during the day. Is there any reason why a canteen for the use of the M.S.C. should not be opened inside the hospital boundary, as is done in nearly every other headquarters station?

In reference to the complaints noticed in TRUTH the other day about the feeding of the troops on board the hired transport Spartan, I have received the following very interesting memorandum from the Union Steamship Company:—

1. The Union Company have nothing to do with the victualling of the troops. This is entirely in the hands of the Government officials.
2. The Union Company victual only the officers in the saloon, and the company has received very satisfactory and complimentary reports regarding the officers' mess from the officers commanding the troops.
3. The canteen was erected and stocked under the direction of the transport officers.
4. The canteen prices are fixed by the Government regulations.
5. The Union Company do not benefit in any way by the sale of the canteen stores, the profit being handed over to the authorities. Nor do they derive any benefit from the victualling of the troops; nor did the company supply the troop stores.
6. The Union Company have no control over the provision or issue of beer, spirits, &c., to the troops.
7. The bread was made from flour supplied by the Government. The tea is not the Union Company's tea.

These statements entirely exonerate the company from all blame for any shortcomings in the service, and throw the whole blame upon the Government representatives. Some official inquiry ought, therefore, to be made into the allegations noticed in TRUTH of the 10th inst. I am told that when the Union Company have themselves undertaken the victualling of the troops there has been no complaint; and unless the complaints that have been made in regard to the Spartan are entirely unfounded, it would seem desirable that the company should take the job in hand in future.

In regard to the question of recruiting for the Navy in the Colonies, I have had an interesting letter from Dr. Alfred Mattei, of Malta, who states that if the opportunity were given them, large numbers of Maltese British subjects would gladly join the Navy at any moment. Having made inquiries on the subject, he has been promised 1,000 young men of good physique, trained in seamanship, as well as in carpentering and other handicrafts. Dr. Mattei is anxious to send a number of young men, from eighteen to twenty-five years of age, to be trained on the Hibernia, so as to form a naval reserve at Malta. Surely any such offer ought to be accepted.

A correspondent, who signs his letter with the name of Bateman, but gives no address, has written to inform me that I am entirely in error in what I have said about the case of Lieutenant Allenby. If I am, I shall be delighted to admit as much. He invites me to obtain the opinion of any officers of the ship in which the assault took place—"except the Captain." I do not see how I am to do this, and the exception is a somewhat singular one. If any one personally cognisant of the facts desires to correct any statement that has appeared in TRUTH, his correction will have full consideration and such publicity as it merits. But at present the position is that I have followed information received from witnesses who are in a position to speak as to the facts, and that not a word of contradiction has been offered, except from a gentleman whom I do not know, and who does not profess to be personally acquainted with the circumstances.

An extraordinary statement is made in a Portsmouth paper respecting the Duke of Coburg's recent journey from Malta to Alexandria in the Surprise. His Royal Highness is said to have gone on board in the uniform of an Admiral of the Fleet, which necessitated the hoisting of the Jack at the mainmast head, and the saluting of the Admiral by the Fleet, and constituted the Duke for the time being the senior officer on the station, although presumably he was in no way under the orders of the Admiralty. Such a state of things is very irregular, and might possibly prove highly inconvenient, and steps ought to be taken to prevent its recurrence. What would be thought if the Czar, or the Kaiser, or some other foreign potentate holding an honorary colonelcy, were one of these days to appear uninvited at Aldershot, and come on parade in uniform to take command of his regiment?

MAJOR HOWE & CO.—Fashionable BOOTS and SHOES.—16, Coventry-st., W. (also 60, Strand), and City, London. "Note Addresses." (Repairs.)

The Post Office has just issued an order to the Parcel Post depots in London (and presumably to other departments) requiring men who have had more than eighteen days' sick leave during two years to submit to a medical examination as to their fitness for further service. The order is retrospective, and a considerable number of men are threatened with dismissal. As all of them passed a stringent medical examination before their admission to the Service, it is to be hoped they will not be turned off without due consideration of the question whether their impaired health is attributable in any way to their hours and conditions of employment.

There are establishments belonging to the Post Office in which the work is carried on—as was admitted before the Tweedmouth Committee—under most insanitary conditions. As to the hours, there is at least one depot—that at London Bridge—in which the recommendation of the Committee that day duties should begin at 6 a.m. and end at 10 p.m. is still ignored. It would be a simple matter to arrange the day and night shifts in accordance with this recommendation. But the authorities persist in bringing one lot of men on duty at 5 a.m., with the consequence that, as there are no trains, trams, or 'buses available in time, they have to walk to their work, whatever the state of the weather. The men necessarily have to live at a distance from the depot, and it is easy to see that this arrangement, which often causes them to arrive wet through, after a walk of several miles, may be in itself responsible for a good deal of illness.

The following letter, recently addressed to a gentleman in Scotland, is interesting as showing the frank way in which the Post Office authorities admit that the promised universal house-to-house delivery of letters is not yet an accomplished fact:—

General Post-office, Edinburgh,
January 24, 1898.

Sir,—With reference to correspondence addressed by you to the Postmaster of Greenock during last year, and to your letter of the 3rd ultimo addressed to this office, I beg leave to inform you that authority has been given for the extension to Whistlefield of the Coyht Rural Post on six days a week all the year round.

I regret it is not practicable to effect the delivery of your letters at your residence, but the postman will place them in the box which you have erected on the Coyht side of Loch Eck.—I am, sir, your obedient servant, (Signed) H. L. Cresswell, Secretary.

True, the case here referred to is a somewhat exceptional one, the house being in a very remote district, and being only directly approached by a ferry across the loch. But the refusal to deliver letters is not by any means confined to houses in isolated situations, as is shown by many other cases previously given in Truth. Once again I ask, what became of the money which, according to last year's Budget, was to be devoted to securing a delivery of letters at every house in the United Kingdom? The Chancellor of the Exchequer should be interrogated on this point.

I am pleased to see that the editor of The News is agitating for a reform of the Post Office regulation, under which he was called upon to pay extra postage for his Christmas number, on the ground that it did not contain a sufficient proportion of "news matter." The regulation is ridiculous in itself, and it is sometimes enforced and sometimes ignored in the most absurd and inconsistent manner, the question whether the matter published comes within the designation of news being evidently left to the capricious judgment of some official who is utterly unqualified for the job. Since I last referred to the matter my Church contemporary has made further attempts to obtain some information as to what is and what is not reckoned as "news," but the authorities at the Post Office prudently decline to be drawn. It is now proposed to bring Parliamentary pressure to bear upon the Postmaster-General for the purpose of getting the regulation—which affects the whole of the Press—abolished or put upon a more satisfactory basis.

In connection with the boarding-out case in the Lincoln Union, which was mentioned in last week's Truth, I have received a long letter in explanation of the action of the Guardians who opposed the removal of the children from their present home at Fiskerton. The gist of it is that the objection to the foster-mother is really traceable to personal animosity, the outcome of a squabble some years ago when the woman took the children from the Church school. How far this is correct I cannot pretend to say, nor is it necessary to discuss the question. My point was that the Guardians incurred a very serious and unusual responsibility in rejecting the recommendation of the committee appointed under the regulations of the Local Government Board to look after the boarded-out children. It is now suggested that the ladies who dealt with the case were prejudiced against the foster-mother; but if this be true, why did the Guardians appoint these biassed judges? If they could not choose a committee upon whose fairness and judgment they could rely, it would have been better to do without any committee at all.

Carnarvon must be a regular hot-bed of Puritanical fanaticism, judging from the furious fulminations the Mayor has evoked, first, by giving a juvenile fancy dress party at which children danced—yes, actually danced; and, secondly, by voting with a minority of the Town Council in favour of allowing a sacred concert to be held on a Sunday in the Guildhall. For these acts the Mayor has been denounced from the pulpit and in the papers as though he had been guilty of the most abominable wickedness. The choicest display of intolerance and self-righteousness is made by a reverend gentleman named Hugh Hughes. I have been favoured with a translation of a letter he has written in Welsh to a local journal "to convey his sincerest thanks to the Lord of Heaven and the majority of the Carnarvon Town Council for taking their stand so bravely against allowing Sunday concerts to enter the Guildhall." Observe the gracious way in which Mr. Hughes expresses his approbation of the part the Almighty (he presumes) played in the matter. He goes on to assert that "those who advocate concerts on the Sabbath-day and dances on other days have not a whole heart before God," and to indulge in the the most bitter, bigoted, and uncharitable reflections upon all who disagree with him. Perhaps the most amazing passage in his letter is one on dancing, which I should be sorry to reproduce. It shows how prurient the mind of a Puritan may be.

The Nonconformist Council of a small town in Wales have actually requested the School Board to prohibit the game of football in the playgrounds, because, forsooth, "it is a pastime which incites evil passions and is dangerous to health." The School Board, however, unanimously decided to refuse this silly request, and it is a pity that any public body should be brought into just contempt by indulging in such idiotic cant.

It is unfortunate that the advocacy of temperance in drinking is so often associated with intemperance in speaking. At a conference of teetotallers at Leeds last week a discussion took place upon the question "ought licensed liquor sellers to be office-bearers in Christian Churches," and strong opinions were expressed in favour of the excommunication of all who are engaged in the trade. One gentleman argued that a person who sells intoxicants must be "necessarily debased," and the Rev. J. S. Balmer declared that if he had his way he would keep such persons "not only out of office but out of membership of the Church." It is encouraging to see, however, that for once in a way fanatical utterances of this kind were not allowed to pass without a protest from more broad-minded temperance workers. The most effective rebuke to the extremists came from the Rev. Edward Wilcox, who suggested that "if Christians were more Christ-like" they would not use such language as had been used on that occasion.

Having once or twice referred in TRUTH to the excellent programme of the Edinburgh School of Cookery and Domestic Economy, I have been asked to say a good word for a similar institution at Glasgow. I do not know very much about the Glasgow school, but I see that it is issuing an excellent series of cheap handbooks on domestic economy, including one on laundry work and a book of plain cookery recipes, each published at the price of one penny. I should uncommonly like to see a few similar schools at work in London and other towns this side of the Tweed.

THE BOOK OF DEATH.

The mouldy old Court had been freed from its taint
By a lavish, though tardy, anointment of paint;
The walls had been whitewashed, the metal-work rubbed,
The barrister's bench had been thoroughly scrubbed;
The solicitors' table recovered with leather,
The moth-eaten curtains renewed altogether;
Whilst the magistrate's chair, inked and broken and stained,
Had been smartly french-polished and wholly re-caned.

To the eye there was nought that seemed tainted or tarnished.
The seats for the public had all been revarnished;
The dock was a picture, the windows a sight,
The ceiling a pure and immaculate white;
In short, the whole building, both outside and in,
Shone as spick and as span as a newly-made pin;
And all who beheld it were glad to agree
That the Court was as spotless as Justice should be.

Then came the first sitting—a case was called on,
And the first of the witnesses stepped up anon.
The usher came forward (his gown was brand-new),
And he did what 'tis usual for ushers to do,
That is, from its place of concealment he took
A sacred, an honoured, a much-revered Book,
And, holding it up, till no eye there could miss it,
Severely requested the witness to kiss it!

But no wonder the witness drew back in disgust,
As near to his nostrils that volume was thrust;
For 'twas foul, it was filthy, its covers were cased
In a sort of a damp oleaginous paste.
No wonder his nose he should quickly avert
From that pestilent centre of microbes and dirt.
No wonder he started, excessively pained,
To see such a volume so grossly profaned.

But in vain his disgust; for no Hebrew was he,
No Scotchman, no Quaker, no Heathen Chince,
His fear of infection was greeted with "Stuff!
The custom's an old one, and that is enough."
So the magistrate bade him his protests to cease,
And to kiss that grimed cover encrusted with grease.
So he kissed it; and passed from the court by and bye
To, probably, suffer; to, possibly, die!

* * * * *

Yet there's very good cause to believe the report
That that germ-reeking book is still kissed in that Court,
More, there's reason to know that, in Courts by the score,
A similar scandal we've still to deplore.
Yes, we paint and we whitewash, we polish and rub,
We scour and we fumigate, launder and scrub;
Yet we cling, notwithstanding, by hook and by crook,
To the nasty old custom of kissing the book.

How long do we mean in this plan to persist?
How long is a death-dealing book to be kissed?
Already a constable down in the West*
Has died of the kiss that upon it he press'd.
Then how many more, let us ask, are to die
Before we this pestilent fetish defy,
And resolve, once for all, 'gainst a course to rebel
That is not only dirty, but deadly as well?

A libel action of a somewhat peculiar character has just been heard at Winchester Assizes, the plaintiff being the Assistant Overseer of the parish of Ryde and the defendants Mr. Ellery, a member of the Ryde Corporation, and Mr. O. G. Vincent, the Town Clerk of Ryde. It appeared that a dispute arose as to whether the plaintiff was entitled under the terms of his appointment to receive certain payments in connection with the registration of voters, and that the defendants sought the opinion of a legal journal upon the subject. The question they put was published, and, though no names were mentioned, it was seen that it applied to the plaintiff, and that it implied —quite erroneously—that he was claiming money to which he had no right. He consequently sued Messrs. Ellery and Vincent for libel, and the result was a verdict in his favour by consent for twenty-five pounds and costs. The Judge and the Bar seem to have been filled with surprise and indignation at the conduct of the defendants—one of them a professional man—in seeking the gratuitous advice of a legal paper when counsel's opinion might have been obtained for a fee; and certainly on this occasion cheap law proved in the long run rather expensive.

* The Medical Officer of the Wareham Rural District Council has reported the death of a police-constable which he has every reason to attribute to the dangerous practice of "kissing the book." The deceased had been seized with acute ulceration of the throat within a few hours of giving evidence at a local Petty Sessions Court.

Lord William Nevill received, I believe, the maximum punishment assigned by the law to the offence of which he was convicted. There can be no question that he deserved the full penalty, and the learned judge deserves the congratulations which have been offered to him from so many quarters on having dealt with a peer's son as if he had been an ordinary mortal. At the same time, without in any way extenuating Lord William's offence, I must say that some measure of blame for his downfall seems to me to rest on Mr. Spender Clay. It is a noble thing, no doubt, to have perfect confidence in your friend up to a point, but beyond a certain point confidence degenerates into culpable simplicity.

The first essential of the "confidence trick," as played in the humbler ranks of society, is that between gentlemen there must be confidence on both sides. When Lord William Nevill asked his friend to sign a document through a hole in the historical sheet of blotting-paper, he plainly showed that he at any rate had only a limited confidence in his friend, and did not care to trust him with what could hardly have been a very momentous secret. The friend would obviously have been justified in replying that if Lord William had so little confidence in him, he did not feel called upon to repose any more confidence in Lord William. I confess that, had I been on the jury which tried the civil action against Mr. Clay, I should not have acquitted that gentleman of negligence. To sign a document without knowing its contents is primâ facie an act of extreme folly; and the flimsy excuse given by Lord William in this case for concealing the contents scarcely makes Mr. Clay's act the wiser. At any rate, it can hardly be a pleasant reflection for that gentleman now that if he had shown a trifle less confidence in his friend he would have saved him from five years' penal servitude—to say nothing of saving Mr. Sam Lewis from the loss of £11,000. After this demonstration of the consequences of undue confidence in a friend, the next confiding youth who signs a document through a hole in a sheet of blotting paper will deserve to bear the consequences himself.

On Saturday last Edwin Whitley was discharged from Shrewsbury Gaol after serving fourteen days' imprisonment in default of paying a fine and costs amounting to £1 0s. 3d. Edwin is a small boy only eleven years of age, and the crime for which he received this punishment at the hands of the Wrexham magistrates was the theft of two pennyworth of coal. I am told that his father, being out of work, was quite unable to pay the heavy fine, and so save him from the gaol. However that may be, it is scandalous in the extreme that this child should have been imprisoned upon such a trumpery charge, and the magistrates who convicted him must be hard-hearted as well as wooden-headed.

Two answers have been offered to the question asked in last week's Truth as to the rights of a tenant who has paid his landlord's income tax, and omitted to deduct it from the next quarter's rent. Unfortunately, the two are directly at variance. Mr. Roger N. Carter, of Manchester, joint author of "A Guide to Income Tax Practice," refers me to that book, where it is laid down, on the strength of several cases, that the tenant has no right to claim repayment under such circumstances, unless he has made application to the landlord for the deduction, or arranged with him that it shall be temporarily waived. On the other hand, Mr. Chapman, of the Income Tax Repayment Agency, confidently expresses the opposite view, on the strength of a judgment of his Honour Judge Collier, from which he sends me extracts. He does not give the place or date of this judgment, nor state the facts, but from the language of the Judge it would seem that his Honour managed somehow to give judgment in favour of a tenant in a case of this kind, notwithstanding the cases cited in Mr. Carter's book. Neither of my correspondents being lawyers, it is possible that a legal intellect may be able to reconcile the apparent contradiction. All that I can myself say is that the point still seems involved in hopeless doubt.

A dispute is going on at Newark respecting the right of the Duke of Newcastle to demand the payment of market tolls from persons selling produce not only in the market-place but in the streets of the town. Lately, a carrier offering a hamper of apples for sale in the street was called upon to pay his Grace the sum of one penny. The carrier refused, and took no notice of the proceedings which were instituted in the local Court of Record, the consequence being that judgment went against him by default, and an execution was last week levied on his goods for the original toll of one penny, damages to the amount of £2, and £3 1s. 7d. for costs. It is unfortunate that the defendant failed to enter an appearance and fight out the case—a course in which he would have had the assistance of many other interested parties—for it would have provided a good opportunity for testing the validity of the claim to levy tolls on sales in the streets, about which there is, to say the least, considerable doubt. The Duke is understood, however, to be as anxious as the towns-people that the matter should be settled, so there ought to be no difficulty in getting another case before the Court.

In my Legal Pillory this week the most astounding exhibition of misapplied lenity is made by Mr. Wall, one of the Dublin Stipendiaries. Within the jurisdiction of this indulgent magistrate the unnatural ruffian who breaks the fifth commandment and the law of the land by thrashing and kicking his mother or his father is simply called upon to find a surety for his future good behaviour. Brutality towards a parent in the northern division of Dublin is, indeed, even cheaper than wife-beating at Blackburn or Horsham, where so much as five or ten shillings is charged for knocking a woman down and then kicking her. The quality of Justices's justice can be very well gauged from a comparison of the penalties imposed in these and other cases on the same side of the following list with those inflicted in the parallel column, for trivial thefts, offences against the Game Laws, and vagrancy by "sleeping out." The committal of the boy Rolph to a reformatory from the West Ham Union Schools appears to be a particularly cruel and senseless proceeding. The excuse was that the Poor-law authorities could not allow the lad to leave the school and earn his own livelihood, as he was anxious and able to do, on account of "the backward state of his education." What muttonheads they must be if they suppose that four years in a reformatory —an institution for the reform of young criminals, not for the instruction of young dunces—will make him a more useful member of society :—

Belper Petty Sessions. Before Mr. J. H. Woolley, Sir J. G. N. Alleyne, Messrs. H. V. Mellor, and J. Smedley. Herbert Jackson, charged with assaulting Annie Morton. As complainant was going home with her sister, defendant used offensive language, and committed what the Bench characterised as an unprovoked assault. It was not the first time he had annoyed her. Fined £1 and costs.

Dublin Northern Divisional Police-court. Before Mr. Wall. Thomas Beatman, labourer, charged with assaulting his mother. He threw her down stairs, caught hold of her by the neck, endeavouring to throttle her, hit her about the head, and while she was on the ground kicked her several times about the body. Ordered to find bail in £10 for his future good behaviour.

Michael Connolly, charged with assaulting his father by knocking him down and kicking him. Ordered to find bail in £5 for his future good behaviour.

Doncaster Police-court. James Grant, convicted of assaulting Thomas Gallagher. Defendant kicked complainant under the chin and on the face and head, inflicting serious injuries. Fined 10s. and costs.

Blackburn Police-court. Before Messrs. G. Green, H. Higson, R. Leeming, and E. Cooper. James Crossland, charged with assaulting his wife, who was living apart from him. He struck her twice in the face, knocked her down, and kicked her in the back. Fined 5s. and costs.

Belper Petty Sessions. Before the same magistrates. Wm. Cowlishaw, charged with setting snares for the purpose of taking game. Fined £1 and costs.

Alresford Petty Sessions. Before Mr. C. Stone, Colonel S. Bates, Colonel Aubertin, and Mr. J. C. Christy. Mary Ann King, an elderly woman, charged with sleeping out. Seven days.

Barnsley Police-court. Before the Mayor, Messrs. T. Wilkinson, W. Jackson, and other magistrates. Charles Henry Cawthorne, and Frederick Allen, both seventeen years of age, charged with stealing an empty pint glass bottle. One month each.

Stratford Police-court. Fredk. Rolph, aged 13, charged with absconding from the West Ham Workhouse Schools. He "wanted to go to work," and ran away and obtained a situation, but the authorities had him arrested. Sent to a reformatory for four years.

Forfar Sheriff-court. Before Sheriff Lee. David Lowson, labourer, charged with trespassing in pursuit of game. Fined £2 and £1 12s. 6d. costs, or thirty days.

Malvern Police-court. Before Colonel Heywood. Two youths, named Perry and Murray, charged with obstructing a footpath, and with begging. They were exhibiting some crayon drawings on the footpath. Fined 5s. each; in default fourteen days.

Horsham Police-court. Before Mr. R. H. Hurst and Mr. E. I. Bostock. Walter Buckman, charged with assaulting his wife. He struck her with his fist, knocked her down, and kicked her. He subsequently again struck her several times and knocked her down, though she was carrying her baby in her arms. Ordered to pay 10s. costs and bound over.

Douglas (Isle of Man) Police-court. Before the Stipendiary. Robert Kelly Quillian, farmer, charged with cruelty by starving a horse. The animal was found in a terribly emaciated condition. Fined £1 and costs.

Shrewsbury Borough Police-court. Before Messrs. J. Cock, T. Corbett, J. E. Jones, T. P. Deakin, and J. Oliver. Frederick Heath, charged with assaulting Fanny Roberts. Without any provocation defendant struck her across the face with something which he held in his hand, blackening both her eyes and the bridge of her nose. Fined 10s., including costs.

Heanor Petty Sessions. Before Messrs. R. S. W. Sitwell, J. J. A. Woolley, T. N. Turner, J. K. Fletcher, and T. Smith. Wm. Matthews charged with causing a horse to be worked whilst in an unfit state. The animal was in a wretched condition, completely worn out, its body being a mass of raw wounds. Fined £2 10s. and costs.

Stamford Borough Police-court. Before Aldermen Hayes, Betts, and Simpson, Messrs. J. S. Lowell, C. Chapman, and C. Gray. Thomas Mountain, charged under the Poaching Prevention Act with coming from land where he had been trespassing in search of game. Fined £3 and costs, or one month.

Swindon Police-court. Before Mr. A. D. Hussey Freke and other magistrates. John Fletcher and Herbert Turner, charged with sleeping out and being without visible means of subsistence, Seven days each.

Maidenhead Police-court. Before the Mayor, Messrs. R. Silver, H. R. Burrows, A. Playne, and E. R. Lovegrove. James Egan, charged with stealing a pair of boots. One month.

Brackley Borough Petty Sessions. Before Messrs. J. L. Stratton, T. Farmer, and E. Hopcraft. Nathaniel Seckington, charged with trespassing in pursuit of game. Fined £1 11s., including costs.

Roborough Police-court. Before Mr. R. Risdon and Colonel Briggs. John Martin convicted of poaching. Three months.

East Grinstead Police-court. Before Mr. C. H. Everard. Emily Freeman, an elderly woman, pleaded guilty to sleep-out under a railway arch. Five days.

With reference to a monstrous sentence for the crime of sleeping out at Tunbridge Wells which I pilloried last week, Mr. R. Pelton, J.P., asks me to mention that he was not on the Bench nor in the Court when the case was dealt with. My list of magistrates present was taken from a local newspaper report; and the explanation of the mistake is, I presume, that Mr. Pelton either arrived after the Court opened or went away before the business was finished.

I shall be curious to see whether the local coroner will consider it necessary to hold an inquiry in the case of the recent disastrous fire which has entailed such a serious loss upon Sir Henry Irving. If not, I should strongly advise the inhabitants of Southwark to agitate with all their power. There will be but little use in spending an enormous sum of money to increase the Fire Brigade, both in men and appliances, if the one great necessity of an instant and unfailing supply of water is allowed to be wanting. There is no saying how much of the loss might have been prevented had this not been the case in the present instance; and whilst on this subject I might suggest that the Brigade should carry the necessary implements for turning on the water, and thus do away with avoidable delay in searching for a turncock and waiting for his arrival with his tools.

Recently the police of the Wimborne Division proposed to hold a supper, and subscriptions towards the entertainment were received from the gentry and tradesmen of the town and neighbourhood. The Chief Constable gave his sanction, but certain magistrates interfered, and at their instance the supper has been prohibited and the subscriptions returned. The result is much soreness and disappointment, and I have been asked to express my opinion of the conduct of the magistrates. To be perfectly frank, my opinion is that these gentlemen only did what the Chief Constable himself ought to have done. I am sorry that the policemen have been deprived of a supper. But it is clearly undesirable that they should be in the position of receiving favours from some and rebuffs from others of the community among whom they have to discharge their duties, and that would inevitably happen in connection with the promotion of such a subscription list. It is much better that the police should be kept free from the shadow of a suspicion of personal influence or feeling in anything they do or leave undone.

To the long catalogue of things that we get made in Germany, the juvenile criminal must now be added. Young Herman Hagenburg took a situation as page at a Dartford hotel, stole about fifty pounds, and went to Amsterdam, whence he transmitted the bulk of his plunder to his native Düsseldorf. Then he returned to London and the police arrested him. The German Consul was asked to send him back to Germany. "No, thank you," was the effect of the Consul's reply; "the lad's character is so very unsatisfactory that we prefer to leave him in England." Here he accordingly remains, and at the end of the three weeks' imprisonment, which he is now serving, he will be free to repeat his ingenious trick for spoiling the English. So successful an exploit—three weeks' hard labour being, after all, a cheap price to pay for fifty pounds—is almost certain to be emulated by others, and there is, indeed, nothing to prevent the systematic shipment of youthful thieves to this hospitable country. It has long been a dumping ground for pauper aliens, and this case shows that it is equally open to criminal aliens.

Some of the magisterial decisions that are given distinctly encourage the pernicious idea that any cruelty can be legally inflicted in killing or attempting to kill an animal. At Stafford the other day two defendants were charged with ill-treating a dog. One of them was paid threepence to take the dog to the sanitary depôt so that it might be destroyed. Instead of doing so he tied the animal's hind legs to its neck, placed it in the river, and threw stones at it. As he could not kill it in this way he went for the other defendant, who brought a gun and fired three shots at the dog. Next morning the poor brute was found on the bank of the river wounded from the shots, but still alive. The Bench dismissed the summonses, holding that there was no intentional cruelty on the part of the defendants, though "it was a bungling business." No doubt the intention of the defendants was to kill, not to ill-treat, the animal, but surely the end did not justify the barbarous means which they employed.

Fully a year ago a friend laid before me certain particulars relating to what has since become known as "the Grosvenor Hotel Scandal." From what I could see of the case I concluded that it was too big and complicated a matter for a newspaper to deal with effectually, more especially as it was then already in train to be threshed out by an official inquiry. After the trial that has just concluded, I do not regret having come to that decision. Never within my recollection has a more ingenious and comprehensive system of frauds on that long-suffering creature, the British shareholder, been brought to light. Mr. Spokes deserves the thanks of the public for the pertinacity and skill with which he has hunted down the Drew family and its various satellites. Only an instalment of justice, however, has yet been done; and it now rests with the Public Prosecutor to deal with the balance still unsettled.

Once or twice I have heard surprise expressed that while the Gordon Hotels, and one or two other modern establishments and groups, pay their shareholders fairly well, so many old-established London hotels, though apparently doing a good business, have long been unprofitable. The exploits of Mr. Drew and his colleagues go a long way towards explaining the mystery. During the next few weeks many hotel shareholders will probably be seeking anxiously for information as to who all their brother shareholders are, and whether the butcher, the baker, and the wine merchant, not to mention the laundryman, the coal-man, and the picture-dealer, have any place on the list.

How much gold there may be in the soil of Klondike I do not know. But there can be no doubt that the place has already proved a rich gold mine to swindlers of all classes, from the company-promoting fraternity downwards. Some time ago an individual, signing himself W. J. Mitchell, and dating from 150, Leadenhall-street, was offering to people who answered his advertisements a fortnightly circular on "Mining at Klondyke," containing the fullest and latest information respecting the goldfields, together with hints for intending emigrants. For this valuable production, Mitchell asked £1 1s., paid in advance, and I am sorry to say that he got the guinea in more than one case. Needless to say, those who paid the money have heard nothing since of Mr. Mitchell or his promised periodical. The address on his circulars was 150, Leadenhall-street, E.C., "and at Dawson City, N.W.T." His envelopes, however, bore the Brighton post-mark. It seems that he merely occupied an office in Leadenhall-street in conjunction with other tenants, and that they all left about the time of the issue of the circular, leaving nothing behind them but debts. A brass plate remains on the door bearing the inscription, "W. J. Mitchell, Accountant and Auditor. And at Central Chambers, Brighton." If any one can give any further information about Mitchell, it may conduce to the ends of justice.

Here is a still more impudent swindle. A Mr. J. Williamson, of 1, Tuscan-street, London, E., has been advertising in the newspapers in the character of the Secretary to the "Anglo-American Clondyke Goldmining Company." Some of his advertisements have been inserted as far off as the Glasgow papers, no doubt with a view of catching thrifty and ambitious Scotch working men who have got their eye on the Klondike Goldfields. Those who replied to his advertisement received the following circular:—

THE ANGLO-AMERICAN CLONDYKE GOLDMINING CO.,
London

In reply to your application, we communicate you that we will employ you as miner in our Gold Mines in the Youkon district at the rate of £3 wages per day, if you subject yourself to the rules of the company, and sign the enclosed agreement, in case you wish to be employed in our comp. you must subject yourself to be examined through a Phisician who has to examine your health whether you are fit to become a miner in that northern regions, this examination will take place either in the native place of th applicant or in the surrounding next town, the Phisician will be delegated from our comp. to summon you and you have to present yourself to him to investigate your bodily condition, this certificate will be re-examind from our cheef doctor here, no certificate from other phisician as that one delegated from our company will be accepted.

Every miner has to pay in advance one pound for his medical examination. When you are willing to become our miner and you feel yourself healthy and hardy enough for that regions and climate you have to sign the enclosed agreement send to snd in the asked for money to Mr. J. Williamson, Secretary, 1, Tuscan Street, London E. As soon we have accepted all the miners we wanted we will send you a free ticket to Southampton and there you have to join our expedition.

We request you not to molest us with questions about food, voyage etc.

J. Williamson,
Secrtary

This promising-looking document bears the notice, "Money for medical examination to be sent in postal orders registered." The agreement enclosed is a document in a style similar to that of the covering letter. From the grammar, spelling, and printing, it may be inferred that the Anglo-American Clondyke Goldmining Company is made in Germany, and that its printing is done in that country. On inquiry I learn that No. 1, Tuscan-street—a back alley in the Bethnal Green district—has lately been rented by a middle-aged foreigner of Semitic aspect, who is out all day, but appears to sleep on the premises. He has been seen taking in letters, and if the letters have contained fees for medical examination by the company's "Phisician," it is probable that he has also taken in the writers. If so, they had better communicate at once with the police.

It seems that the price of a personal advertisement through Messrs. Klene & Co., of Great Russell-street, has fallen considerably of late. A place in their most recent publication, to which I referred last week, has recently been offered at £2 10s., that being the price of the work in which any one can have a biographical notice by taking one copy. A gentleman who has seen the book in question estimates that it would be dear at 7s. 6d. So I should think.

Owing to certain steps taken by the French Post Office, whose regulations he had violated, Mr. Leigh Sampson, in his character of "Henry Travers," has thought it desirable to depart from No. 20, Rue Leuliette, Boulogne-sur-Mer, leaving no address. It is not very likely under the circumstances that he will seek any fresh residence in French territory. What I anticipated has, therefore, come true. Should any one be favoured with further communications from this impudent rascal, whether offering pictures, novels, or other wares, on any of the pretexts in his extensive repertory, I shall be glad to receive information on the subject.

I am sincerely sorry for those of my readers who have parted with eighteenpence through the accidental appearance in Truth of the Zuilia Company's puzzle advertisement, but I really cannot admit that the chief share in the blame rests on me, as some of the victims seem to think. For instance, an anonymous "Vicar's Daughter" writes:—

I always thought Truth had a reputation for being very reliable, and it was this that made me trusting. I shall now suspect the advice of my best friends. It is no use their being sorry afterwards.

Of course Truth is very reliable; but nobody has any business to suppose that I am responsible for all the statements that may be made in my advertising columns. Tradesmen's puffs of their own goods must be taken for what they are worth, wherever they are made. If you read on a hoarding that Prodger's Purple Pills would cure you in half an hour of any complaint that afflicts you, you would not think of blaming the owner of the hoarding if the pills, after trial, did not fulfil your expectations. I am in the position of the proprietor of a hoarding. I do my best to see that the space I let out is not used for nefarious purposes, because if it were so used with my knowledge, I should feel that I was assisting to defraud my readers. But I cannot guarantee that no evil-disposed person will ever get a show there, any more than I can guarantee that no mistake will ever be made in my editorial columns. I have said this a hundred times, and it is not my fault if people do not understand it.

Since writing on the subject last week, I have had (by deputy) an interview with the "Zuilia Company." He seems to be a cool hand, and he is doing a roaring trade. He stocks a large quantity of spirits of wine; scents it with certain essences; bottles it; and sends it out to those who compete for his prizes. He manufactures a tooth-powder by similar primitive processes, and sends that out at the same time. He has a large number of hands working at these jobs as hard as they can, and as the gross profit on every order must be over 50 per cent., he is clearly doing a good business. He talks about distributing the £50 promised when the competition is closed. He says that his game is perfectly legal, and he chuckles at the thought. Well he may.

A letter has been published in the Hampshire Herald which puts a different complexion on the story of the finding of a doctor's pocket-book by a drayman, to which reference was made in last week's Truth. The material point of the correction is that the pocket-book contained no notification that a reward would be given for its return, and that the owner was unaware, when forwarding the postage, what was the social status of the person who had returned his property. The editor of the Hampshire Herald notes that "some one seems to have communicated the original story to Truth," and remarks that when I see the explanation I may be inclined to lecture some one else. Yes. I am inclined to lecture those who published the story without verifying the facts, and then took the trouble to invite my opinion on it. No one, I am sure, would be more surprised than my Hampshire contemporary if I were to say who took the latter step.

I see it stated that the directors of the Brighton line have decided that the normal week of their staff shall be reduced to six days, and Sunday work paid for extra. If this is true, it is a great step in advance, and the Brighton directors are entitled to great credit for it. As I have lately been preaching the doctrine that the employees of the railway companies are entitled to some share in the high profits at present being realised, I hope that I also am entitled to a little credit for the result.

A trooper in the Natal Mounted Police Field Force thinks it will be a useful warning to others if I mention his experiences of that Corps. I think so, too. He joined because the pay was so good. It certainly looked good on paper, but at the end of the first month the gilt was taken off the gingerbread. Out of the £9 6s. nominally due to him for the month, no less than £8 3s. 6d. was swallowed up by the following stoppages:—Messing, at 2s. 6d. per diem, £3 15s.; forage, at 1s. per diem, £1 10s.; clothing and equipment account, £2; superannuation fund, 5s. 6d.; library fund, 1s.; game fund, 1s.; remount fund, 4s. 6d.; horse shod, 4s. 6d.; tombstones, 2s. My correspondent, unfortunately, omits to explain the precise meaning of the last particularly cheerful item. In addition to all these charges, he had had to spend about £1 at the canteen for cleaning gear, &c., so that he was left with the magnificent sum of half-a-crown as remuneration for a month's work. Sundry other grievances in connection with the service are enumerated in the letter I have received, one being that the contribution to the superannuation fund, though supposed to be optional, is practically obligatory. But I imagine that the foregoing list of stoppages will, in itself, suffice as a caution to young men who contemplate enlisting in the N.M.P.F.F.

GOOD NEWS FOR BAD SPEAKERS.

Instead of journeying into Cornwall and wearing out his voice with speech-making, Mr. F. J. Horniman, M.P. for Penrhyn and Falmouth, committed his remarks to a phonograph cylinder and sent it down west in charge of his secretary, who unwound the speech every night in various parts of the constituency with unmeasured success.—The Star.

An excellent suggestion this!
  An innovation truly striking!
Which Members and Constituents
  Should look upon with equal liking.
For both, 'twould seem, are bound to score
  In ways too numerous to mention
By thus encouraging the use
  Of Mr. Edison's invention.

As 'tis, a Member often finds,
  When his constituents addressing,
That he is fated to pass through
  An ordeal more or less distressing.
How useful then, when he's aware
  His popularity 's grown speckled,
For him to send as substitute
  A cylinder that can't be heckled!

A cylinder which glibly spouts
  The views that he could only stammer;
A cylinder that makes no slips,
  Through nervousness, in sense or grammar.
A cylinder still bold as brass,
  Though all it says may be refuted;
And which still calmly grinds away
  However hotly it is hooted.

Nor need constituents complain
  Or show a jealousy uncivil
Of what might often be the means
  Of sparing them from spells of drivel.
For even members little skilled
  In public speech and declamation
Might speak into a Phonograph
  A really passable oration.

Besides, in case a phonogram
  Should prove in rhetoric unruly,
Or seem determined to prolong
  Its observations too unduly,
How very easy it would be
  Into a bucket, say, to pop it,
Or by the pressing of a spring
  To quickly and completely stop it.

Then "Vive the Phonograph!" say we,
  And may it soon, in this or that form,
Be heard in place of those who now
  Break down on many a public platform.
Welcome the Phonograph, say we,
  For surely its desired appearance
Must serve to check unbridled rant
  And vivâ voce incoherence!

Speaking frankly, I do not think that the Opposition have scored by the debate on the Address. They voted against the Amendment affirming Home Rule, on the score that the adjective "independent," as applied to the Irish Parliament, implied that it was not to be subordinate to the Imperial Parliament, although it was pointed out again and again that it meant nothing more than that Ireland should be independent of our control on Irish matters that had been delegated it. If they did not like the adjective, as capable of a wider interpretation, they would have done better to withdraw without voting. As matters stand, it is impossible to say whether the Liberal Party is for or against such a general measure of Home Rule as was proposed in Mr. Gladstone's Bills.

On the Indian Frontier debate there was a good deal too much of the pot and kettle between the two Front Benches in regard to the Forward policy. I disagreed with a good deal in Mr. Curzon's speech, but it was far and away the best speech in the debate. He laid down clearly the policy that had actuated the Government, and stated the grounds on which it had been based.

The Opposition, instead of challenging the policy, carped rather at the manner in which it had been carried out. In fact, our respected leaders are so overwhelmed with the sense of responsibility that they appear to find themselves unable to assume a definite position on anything. Like most Radicals, I care very little who made the road to Chitral; I think the policy of the Government in regard to the hill tribes entirely wrong; and I am anxious to know whether they intend to send another expedition to convert the hill men into enemies; and this last is precisely what no one can discover from the debate.

The Manchester Guardian published last week a letter from its special correspondent in Athens which confirms in the most significant way the secret history of the late war given a few weeks back in TRUTH. After remarking that, for the last five-and-thirty years, Greece has enjoyed the most democratic Government in Europe, but has at the same time been saddled with a Sovereign and a Court who are the mere puppets of certain Great Powers, and ready instruments of foreign intrigue, he makes the following reference to the Turkish war:—

> Never was the heavy hand of the Concert more apparent than during the late war and the negotiations which have sprung from it. The Concert and the King are committed to respect the integrity of Turkey; it is this anomaly which is at the root of all the questions that are vexing Greece to-day. Was the Army unfit to take the field? The King is at its head on Palmerston's terms, and his view was that Greece had no need of a field force, and might be content with troops efficient enough to act as police. Are there still mysteries connected with the war? Why was there no advance across the Thessalian frontier; why was the army of Epirus so criminally inactive; and why those inexplicable retreats? Again it is Europe which must give the answer. The Concert was busy "localising the conflagration," so Mr. Curzon has told us, and the King was the agent of the Concert in Athens. It was the Court which countermanded the orders of the Ministry and kept the Fleet idle. I have talked with journalists and deputies regarding these matters. Public opinion is all but unanimous. There was some arrangement between the Concert, the Greek Court, and the Sultan. But if Russia was the intermediary, then it is more probable that the Queen of Greece was responsible, for the King is rather English than Russian in his sympathies. It is almost certain that the Turk should have stopped at Larissa. Much becomes comprehensible on this supposition. Grumkopf Pasha left the army, whose movements he had directed, after entering Larissa. The Turks made no effort to pursue their advantage, and delayed their advance for a week. I have also seen the originals of telegrams of Delyannis and Sapounzaki, the Prince's chief of staff, which prove that the Greek Government had for some days no intention of defending Volo or Velestino, and only sent Smolenski to the latter position on the entreaty of certain Thessalian deputies. Had not Delyannis' Government fallen, it is probable that the war would have ended sooner.

When a nation, after being defeated in a war, cries "Nous sommes trahis!" the onlooker is naturally disposed to laugh at it. All the evidence, however, up to the present time points to the conclusion that the Greeks were betrayed, and that the King and the Court were the traitors. Athens at the present time is in a ferment over the charges of treachery, intrigue, and corruption which are bandied about from one side to another. The charge against Port Ensign Kokkoris is only one incident out of many, but it is almost enough in itself to justify the allegations of Court treachery. Kokkoris, in a telegram to the Minister of Marine, accused the officer in command of betraying the Fleet and disobeying orders. He justified his allegation at the trial, and he has been acquitted. That is to say, the court-martial has found that the Commodore did disobey the orders of the Minister. Prince George appeared at the trial as a witness for the prosecution. He gave his reasons why it was decided to avoid an encounter with the Turkish fleet, but they are reasons which avail very little, one of them being that the Greeks had so little ammunition that it would have been exhausted in one engagement—a pretty confession from one of the rulers of the navy. Prince George also pleaded that the Commodore had received contradictory instructions from the Minister at Athens. Very possibly. The whole case against the Court is that contradictory orders were given—one set for the benefit of the public, the other set for the private guidance of the officers in command. It will be interesting to see what happens next, after the court-martial which acquitted Kokkoris has virtually found somebody in the background to have been guilty of treachery.

The West African dispute is not one in regard to which any two sane civilised countries would go to war. We, Germany, and France have colonies in and about the Bight of Benin. Up to the ninth parallel we have delimited their frontiers. At about the thirteenth parallel we recognise that the hinterland of the French Mediterranean possessions commences. The present quarrel is in regard to what is the line of longitude from the ninth to the thirteenth parallel, which separates the English and French spheres of influence. It has been agreed that a line shall be drawn, but this has never been done, and the two countries are seeking to come to an agreement about it. In the meanwhile, we and the French have made treaties with various chiefs professing to rule in the disputed territory, and each side has been seeking to strengthen its position by "effective occupation."

It is a matter of very little practical importance where the line of demarcation shall be drawn. But it is most desirable that it be drawn as soon as possible. If we and the French cannot agree, then the matter should be referred to arbitration. Questions in regard to title often arise between man and man in the most civilised countries, and are often complicated enough. In Central Africa, the geography of which is not known, and where rival chiefs claim the right to sell titles, such questions are far more complicated.

We have no clear knowledge of the incident that has been made the most of by Mr. Chamberlain in order to strengthen his hands against Lord Salisbury. When, therefore, Mr. Chamberlain talks of an invasion of British territory, it is obvious that he is endeavouring to stir up passions which he ought to be the first to deprecate. He seems desirous to force us into war with France; and here lies the real danger of the situation.

SCRUTATOR.

REFERENDUM NO REMEDY.

THE Newcastle Programme was faulty because it proposed more reforms than it was possible to carry in one Parliament. But it by no means follows that a Party should eschew all specific declarations in regard to reforms, because such a declaration may be termed a programme. The present position is this: The Liberals had a majority in the last Parliament. The Bills that they sent up to the Lords were either emasculated or thrown out. Instead of appealing to the country they continued in office, and, as Mr. Asquith aptly said, ploughed the sands of the sea-shore, in order to afford an object-lesson on the impossibility of the Liberal Party being able to do anything, so long as the Lords retain their present powers. I am not entirely in agreement with Lord Rosebery on foreign affairs, but unquestionably he was the one Minister who came forward with a proposal that the election should turn on the limitation of the power of the Lords. His error was, as it seemed to me, that he did not make it clear how he would effect this limitation if the Lords opposed it. Then came the election. No specific proposal was submitted to the constituencies. Naturally the majority of electors held that, if a Liberal majority were again returned, all that would ensue would be another object-lesson in ploughing the sands. The Liberal party was therefore defeated, and deservedly defeated, hip and thigh. We are now told that it is alike a crime and a fault on the part of Liberals to assert that the next election ought to turn on such Parliamentary reform as will enable their Party, if it secures a majority, to act as well as talk. The rank and file are almost unanimous that the election should be fought on this issue. The opposition comes exclusively from Liberal officialdom. Why is this? Because, whereas some of the gentlemen who held office in the last Liberal Government individually agree with the rank and file, collectively they do not. They all desire to hold together. Therefore, they are averse to any declaration which would lead to an open split amongst them. The pace, consequently, has to be that of the slowest, and this inaction has to be elevated into a principle of tactics.

Many Radicals are for the abolition of the Lords, pure and simple. But they are practical. What they politically object to is, that an hereditary Assembly of Conservatives, composed of Peers of long descent, ennobled brewers, bankers, and others, who have bought their right to be Peers, shall reduce the popular branch of the Legislature to impotence whenever the country returns as its representatives a majority of Liberals. Consequently they demand as an irreducible minimum, that the existing veto of the Lords shall be reduced to a suspensory veto, and that, if the Lords proved recalcitrant, the means to overcome their resistance provided by the Constitution shall be used to give legislative effect to the measure. To say that any one who is in favour of this is a "programme spinner," and therefore an unpractical dolt, is nonsense. As well might it be said that those were programme-spinners who were in favour of Free Trade, or of any of the other great measures of reform which have been carried in the past—when the Lords had not yet become a mere Tory club—by the Liberal Party. Not one of these reforms would ever have been carried, had it not been by the pressure of the Party outside Parliament on Liberal officialdom.

Mr. Asquith, in a speech last week, admitted that the Liberals would be powerless were they once again in office, and urged them to clearly make up their minds upon what lines a means of escape is to be found for so intolerable a state of things. They have made up their minds. It is by limiting the Lords to a suspensory veto. But Mr. Asquith suggested an alternative method. This was the referendum, and he instanced Switzerland. The Swiss have a written Constitution, and any change in the Constitution has to be submitted directly to the electors. But Mr. Asquith said that he hoped that we should never establish a distinction between constitutional and ordinary legislation: consequently, in this he would not have us follow the example of the Swiss. They have further a plan of referring anything to a direct popular vote, if a certain number of cantons demand it. This, I apprehend, is the referendum that Mr. Asquith would suggest as a means of escape from the thraldom of the Lords. But would it effect that object? The Lords, as I have said, either throw out or emasculate Liberal Bills, with the result that a Liberal Administration is absolutely powerless to give effect to its views, no matter what may be its majority in the Commons. Are we to have a direct appeal to the country whenever they do either? If so, we should pass our existence in organising and voting on referendums. In Switzerland they have no House of Lords to render it necessary that the Radical section of the electors should have to fall back on a referendum, in order to have their way after the country has elected representatives to carry out a suggested reform in matters of ordinary legislation; and, as a matter of fact, the referendum in matters of ordinary legislation only takes place on State purchase of railroads and other matters of this kind. The plan would be unworkable with us. It assumes, moreover, that the hereditary branch of the Legislature is co-equal with the representative branch, which has never yet been asserted even by the Tories. I am for every measure becoming law which has been passed by the House of Commons in two successive sessions. But, rather than this scheme of a referendum, I should be for two successive Parliaments being substituted for two sessions, with triennial instead of septennial Parliaments.

I have myself a weakness for Mr. Asquith. He is a good and effective speaker, and he is not wanting in backbone. But this suggestion of a referendum is a sad falling off from his previous utterances in regard to the Lords. When the House of Commons was sadly ploughing the sands of the sea, he was all for depriving the Lords of their present legislative powers by the simple and practical expedient of a Suspensory Veto; indeed, this was the plea for the ploughing. Probably he is still himself of the same mind. It may be, therefore, taken that he finds that some of his late colleagues are not in unison with him. Hence this strange referendum suggestion, and hence his advice to us to meditate instead of acting. It is the old story. In order to retain in our ranks a few gentlemen of Whig proclivities, the declared and almost unanimous opinions of the Party are to be ignored, and we are called upon once more to drift to perdition with Hamlet at the wheel. For my part, nothing would please me more than the loss of these Whigs. They are a millstone about our necks; nay, worse, for our policy is to be decided by the millstone instead of by the man who bears this burthen. He who loses his liberty loses half his virtue, said some Greek author. It may equally be said that he who has been in a Liberal Administration loses half his Liberalism. He cannot free his mind from the conviction that the first aim of his Party should be to put him back in office. All determination, all grit, seems to have been taken out of him. The cold shade of Opposition paralyses him. He gasps for the sun of office as a fish gasps for water when on dry land. Officialdom never yet has forgiven Mr. Gladstone for his resolve to stand or fall by Home Rule. His sin—his unpardonable sin—was that, believing as he did that this measure would be alike beneficial to the Empire and to Ireland, he preferred to incur the risk of defeat rather than to shelve the issue. Victrix causa Diis placuit, sed victa Catoni was the epitaph of the Roman poet on Cato; but every man with an official mind regards Cato as a fool.

FRESH LIGHT ON THE FRONTIER FIASCO.

The great, wise, and eminent occupants of the two Front Benches have now debated, with all the fulness which the importance of the subject demands, their respective responsibilities in regard to the making of a military road to Chitral. Each side has settled, entirely to its own satisfaction, that the chief share of the responsibility, both for the road-making and for the outbreak of the tribes, rests with the other. Whether the public at large is as much interested in the issue as are the aforesaid great, wise, and eminent personages, I am not sure. It seems to me that infinitely more importance attaches to the questions (1) what are the reasons for the failure of the Indian Government to grapple successfully with the recent outbreak, and (2) what is to be the next step in our dealings with the tribes?

During the last fortnight I have had the advantage of discussing these questions with men fresh from the frontier and from Simla, who are in a position to tell much that the public does not know, both in regard to our political relations with the tribes, and with regard to the campaign of last autumn. In some respects these conversations have been confidential, and I am not, therefore, at liberty to repeat everything that I have heard. But enough remains to enable me to throw a good deal of additional light upon the two questions stated above.

Let us look, first, at the political side of the situation. Up to a point, the movement among the Afridis and the Orakzais is no doubt accurately described in the Queen's Speech as an "organised outbreak of fanaticism." It was fanaticism in the sense that it was inspired by the Mullahs. I take it that only a few Britons at home know precisely what a Mullah is—certainly I did not myself until a fortnight ago. The Mullahs are virtually the Mahommedan priests of this region. They are a distinct caste, the office of Mullah descending from father to son—not necessarily to the eldest son, but to whichever of his male offspring the parent Mullah may select. The Mullahs are a degree better educated than the ordinary tribesmen, and exercise over them an enormous influence. The tribes are all Moslems of a most fanatical type, and they are ready to believe everything that a Mullah tells them, and to do anything that a Mullah may, in his official capacity, direct. During last summer the Mullahs along the Afghan frontier suddenly became inflamed with intense hostility to the British power. They went about preaching that the British were about to annex the entire hill country, and to force the Christian religion upon the tribesmen; and they incited these hardy warriors to a holy war in defence of their religion and liberty. The individual who at one time figured conspicuously in the British Press as "the Mad Mullah" specially distinguished himself; and eventually went on the war path to attack the outposts on the road between Peshawur and Chitral. His progress is compared to that of a snowball or an avalanche, every day as he marched forward bringing hundreds of fresh followers to his standard. By the early part of September the hill country along the Afghan frontier, from the Khaiber to Chitral, was in a blaze of hostility to the British. All this, of course, may be accurately described as "fanaticism," but the question remains behind, what was the cause of this fanatical outbreak? It cannot, I think be doubted, that the vexed question of the road through the Swat Valley was at the bottom of it. The road and the outposts, at any rate, clearly furnished the Mullahs with a striking object lesson for an appeal to the tribes to rise in defence of their homes and religion.

While this outbreak was simmering, what was the Indian Government doing? The truth seems to be that the Government was absolutely in the dark as to what was going on, and here we come to the beginning of the long chapter of mismanagement and blundering. All along the frontier are stationed Political Officers, who ought to have been closely in touch with the tribes, and to have reported the movement to Simla before it had attained serious proportions. How far this was from being done may be judged from one incident. Major Deane, the Political Officer for Dir, Swat, and Chitral, was in the very heart of the disturbed district. Immediately before the British outposts were actually threatened, he had written to the Government telling them that the Mullah was advancing, and even intimating that the Khan of Dir thought that steps should be taken to stop him; but at the same time he, Major Deane, stated that he did not think it necessary to take any notice of the movement. Yet the actual fact was that, before this despatch reached Simla, Major Deane had to telegraph that the Mullah was advancing on one of the forts with a force of 500 men, and that a regiment should be hurried up at once to meet him. This telegram actually reached Simla before the despatch in which Major Deane committed himself to the opinion that the movements of the Mullah were not deserving of notice.

On the receipt of Major Deane's telegram at Simla, the Viceroy's Council was hurriedly summoned, and met within two or three hours. The Commander-in-Chief was present, and gave his opinion as to the measures necessary, and instructions were at once telegraphed for a regiment to be sent up from Rawalpindi. So hurried was the movement, that the regiment in question—I forget its name for the moment—having only received its orders about noon, was on the march the same evening—a circumstance which the Pioneer has noted as probably without record in military history. The regiment arrived on the scene in time to save the post which was immediately threatened, but of course too late to overawe the tribesmen, or to avert the general aggressive movement which had now begun all along the frontier. News soon reached Simla of movements in other directions, and regiment after regiment was moved up as the call came, until at last we had in the field the vast army that was operating in the latter part of the autumn.

It will be seen from this that at the time when we began to mobilise our forces, the full extent of the task before them was not in the least appreciated at Simla. From lack of proper information, no opportunity was given of forming a comprehensive and well-considered plan of operations; or even of considering whether it might not be advisable to adopt merely defensive tactics until the winter was over. All was hurry and confusion. The operations were begun under the stress of a serious emergency, and the Government became involved in the conflict without any clear conception of the magnitude to which it would grow. If this excuses in some degree the failure of the military authorities, they are only exonerated at the expense of the political officers. Major Deane, in particular, seems to have been completely at sea. Either he was entirely misinformed as to what was going on in his district, or he utterly misunderstood the significance of his information. Had he formed and telegraphed to Simla a just estimate of the situation at the time when he informed the Government by letter that the Khan of Dir advised that resistance should be at once offered to the Mullah, and when he deprecated on his own account any such step being taken, the probability is that the rising would have been nipped in the bud, and the whole campaign avoided. Sir Richard Udny has already been severely blamed in the Indian Press for his share in the events immediately attending the outbreak, and the censure seems to have been well deserved. Sir Richard Udny has been on the Punjab Frontier for about twenty years, and is the most trusted agent on the spot. He delimited the Afghan Frontier from the neighbourhood of the Mahmund country to the Hindu Kush. He ought to know every chief and Mullah in the district, and to have been fully informed of the feelings and intentions of the tribes in time to advise the Government of the mischief that was brewing. Whether from ignorance of the situation, or from error of judgment, he recalled the Captain of the Khaiberi Rifles just on the eve of the outbreak, leaving the native levies which garrison the Khaiber forts to face their insurgent fellow-countrymen without a white officer to encourage or direct them. The fall of Ali Musjid and the Khaiber outposts has been openly attributed to Sir Richard Udny's lack of knowledge or judgment, and if this reproach is just, as it seems to be, it carries with it a heavy share of responsibility for the early successes of the Afridis, the consequent growth of the rising, and the difficulty of making headway against it at the outset.

So far are the Indian Government from showing any appreciation of these facts, that Sir Richard Udny was subsequently appointed political officer with the Tirah Field Force, and he has recently been selected for special honour by being publicly invested with the Star of India at the chapter held by the Viceroy on January 14. On the other hand, while Sir Richard Udny was practically placed in control of our relations with the tribes during the campaign, Colonel Warburton, whose knowledge of the Frontier is unique, and whose services are universally acknowledged, was recalled. Every Anglo-Indian to whom I have spoken on this subject testifies to the immense value of Colonel Warburton's services on the Frontier. He has the advantage of being the son of an Afghan mother, and for that reason holds a position in the eyes of the tribesmen which no other Englishman can possibly occupy. He is regarded by them as a friend and a kinsman; he is personally familiar with all the principal chiefs, and with the habits and ideas of the people. I hear from an officer who was with the Tirah Force during the last disastrous march down the Bara Valley, of which so much has been heard, that it was mainly owing to Colonel Warburton's influence that the force was not completely annihilated. Sir Richard Udny had at this time temporarily left the scene, and Colonel Warburton had taken his place. It may be remembered that in an extract from the Times of India commenting upon this march, which was quoted in TRUTH of January 27, the following passage occurred:—

> Thus, in the first march from Bagh to Dwatoi, it took one division three days to cover the distance, which is only seven miles, and this without any opposition from the enemy, from whom Colonel Warburton had happily bought immunity.

The phrase "bought immunity" does not seem to mean, as the reader might perhaps suppose, that the tribes were bought off with cash, but that Colonel Warburton was able to persuade them into a temporary cessation of hostilities by the use of his influence and by making certain terms. I believe that he promised that, if the force were unmolested during its march, no damage should be done to the trees and property of the tribes, and his assurance to that effect was at once accepted. Such an incident shows conclusively the value of the services which Colonel Warburton might have rendered in dealing with the tribes, had the Indian Government thought fit to make more use of his services.

Let us now pass for a moment to the errors of the military authorities. From conversation with officers who have been through the campaign, I learn beyond question that what has been said in the Indian Press and in TRUTH in criticism of the plan of operations and the competency of the staff is universally endorsed by those who best know the facts. I do not find, however, so general a disposition to acquit Sir William Lockhart of all blame as has hitherto been supposed. To begin with, although the staff appointments were virtually made from Simla before Sir William Lockhart arrived to take the command, I understand that he was personally responsible for the appointment of the Chief of the Staff, General Nicholson. General Nicholson is undoubtedly a distinguished and competent officer in his own line, but that he failed—chiefly through faults of manner and temper—as Chief of the Staff is the universal opinion. It is worth while to repeat in this connection a passage from the valuable letter from an officer which appeared in Truth of February 3:—

> General Lockhart unfortunately fell into bad health almost from the start, and the campaign was practically run by others whose gifts of tact and temper failed to shine out brightly when "the band began to play." The method of conveying orders to the numerous Generals was not particularly happy. Consequently a cloud of sulkiness spread over the higher ranks of the force almost before we had crossed the border, and dwelt over them until after the closing skedaddle, late in December, down the Bara Pass into the Peshawur Valley. . . .

I eliminated from this letter a passage referring specially to General Nicholson, but in view of the corroborative evidence from other quarters that I have since received, the interests of truth and fairness to the rest of the Staff seem to require the statement that the Chief of the Staff was the officer here particularly pointed at. Again, the inexplicable abandonment of the Dargai heights, after they had been captured without difficulty, and almost without loss, on October 18, is attributed by my military informants entirely to General Lockhart. If this be correct, it carries with it the responsibility for one of the most fatal errors committed in the course of the campaign. Some blame has been attributed to the late General Yeatman Biggs in connection with this and other incidents. In justice to the memory of General Biggs, it ought to be known that he had been in such bad health as almost to be unfit for duty for at least a week before the two battles at Dargai. On October 20, the day of the historical second attack on the Dargai heights, the General was actually taken on to the field in bed, with an awning stretched over him. Severe criticism cannot be justly levelled at an officer in this condition, and whatever blame is imputed to him must react, to a certain extent, upon the General commanding the force, who allowed a subordinate to remain at his post while in such a condition. There seems good reason to believe that, if General Biggs had been placed on the sick list when he first became unfit for duty, not only might many mistakes have been avoided, but the General's life might possibly have been saved.

A great deal of unfavourable remark has also been made in regard to certain incidents which occurred in the week or two succeeding the fight at Dargai, and here again the General and the Staff seem to have been to blame. Let me refer for a moment to the following passage from the Pioneer:—

> The block of transport on the Chagru Kotal, which was the result of the (Dargai) heights being left open to the enemy, had serious consequences for the time being, as many animals perished, and their attendants suffered terribly. No General Officer or responsible Staff Officer on the spot grasped the position; had they done so, and acted with decision, the transport would have been turned back, the baggage parked at Shenowrie, and the chaotic state of affairs on the road over the Kotal would have been avoided. Again, on the concentration of the troops at Korappa, it was not until some thirty-five casualties had occurred on one day from the firing into foraging parties and into camp at night that orders were issued for the neighbouring heights to be picqueted. When this was done the casualties practically stopped, at least those due to sniping into camp. As regards attacks upon convoys, we need only instance one: that which took place near the Arhanga Pass owing to some one in authority not having seen that the convoy would most certainly be unable to reach its destination before nightfall. On this occasion some 12,000 or 13,000 rounds of Lee-Metford ammunition were lost—a rare windfall for the enemy, who have been flush of cartridges ever since, and have used them with great effect.

With regard to the casualties from sniping at Korappa here described, there can be no question that the blame rests at headquarters. The simple remedy which was ultimately adopted had suggested itself to most of the officers in camp several days before the General or the Chief of the Staff thought fit to adopt it. The same thing may be said in regard to the attacks upon the convoys, which, I am told, were entirely due to their being allowed to be moving after dark. There was a serious night attack on the baggage convoy on October 31. No warning, however, was taken from this, and precisely the same thing was repeated on the following night, which I take to be identical with the attack in the Arhanga Pass mentioned in the Pioneer. On this occasion not only were eleven boxes of ammunition and five rifles captured by the enemy, but five men were killed, and a large number of mules lost, and even the treasure chest was captured. How much money was lost with it nobody appears to know. The Government has succeeded in keeping that dark. Those who have been behind the scenes attribute the principal blame for this disaster entirely to General Nicholson, who failed to give the necessary orders after the risks which were being run had been demonstrated. I understand that General Yeatman Biggs had himself gone to General Nicholson to make representations on this subject. After the disaster of November 1, an order forbidding convoys to be on the march after dark was issued; that is to say, after the steed had been stolen, the stable door was carefully locked. Whether it happened at Korappa or not, I do not know, but I am told that on one occasion, when Gurkha scouts were sent out, they were actually fired on by the brigade—a stupid blunder entirely attributable to defective Staff work and the absence of proper information as to what was being done. One might go on indefinitely multiplying little items of this kind, each small in itself, but each pointing the same moral of the incompetence of the Staff. And who was responsible for the incompetence of the Staff? Simla, and Simla only. These blunders in the field are the direct and natural consequences of the state of things recently described by one of my correspondents, under which the qualification for Staff employment in India is not a P.S.C., but an attractive lady relative at headquarters.

From what has been said above, and on previous occasions in Truth, it is easy to see the chief requirements of the present situation on the Frontier. Many of my Anglo-Indian friends are strongly of opinion that the Afridis must be "licked" before anything else is done. On the other hand, I hear, from very good authorities, political as well as military, that most of the tribes have already had enough of it. At the very moment of going to press there is news in the papers of the submission of one outstanding tribe, and the probable submission of others. A very competent authority told me that the Afridis generally have suffered quite as heavily as ourselves, and that they know by this time that they cannot resist us if we renew operations seriously in the spring. He excepts two tribes, the Zakka Khel and one other. He believes that when these two have been worsted, the rest of the tribes will submit, if we offer them fair and reasonable terms, and if they are assured that their virtual independence and their religion are not threatened. A significant point is that the Mullahs have disappeared. They are believed to have taken refuge in Afghanistan. This shows that they think the game is up, and it must do much to take the fight out of their followers. It would be a master-stroke of policy, if the Ameer of Afghanistan could be induced to capture these incendiaries, and hand them over to us, on the understanding that they shall be properly treated. If we could get them into our power, our object should be, not to make scape-goats of them, but to persuade them, through the agency of their co-religionists in India, that the religious institutions of the Afridis, at any rate, have nothing to fear from us. It is always a good thing to have the Church on your side. The difficulty, however, I fear, is that if the Ameer were asked to try and catch the Mullahs for us, he might find this a tempting opportunity to negotiate a deal, and suggest that we should give up in exchange a few of his enemies who are at present in the custody of the Indian Government.

While, therefore, the necessity for further fighting against any of the clans is extremely doubtful, the time is evidently ripe for trying pacific measures with the rest, and for doing our best to satisfy them that we have no design either to grab their territory or to destroy their tribal autonomy. All parties seem agreed that our policy should be to make these indomitable mountaineers a bulwark of the Indian Empire. Of their value as fighting men we have had the best possible means of judging. Fighting is, if not their trade, at any rate their chief pastime and enjoyment. What we have to secure is that their fighting propensities shall not be gratified at our expense, and that they shall feel sufficiently secure of their tribal independence under our suzerainty to exert their full strength against any foreign invader attacking India. A gentleman who should know the facts well tells me that the total fighting force of the whole of the tribes along this Frontier is not less than 80,000 men. Large numbers of these might no doubt be enrolled in the Indian Army—I believe not a few are serving already. By our mistaken policy we have gone far towards making them all our deadly enemies; but it is not too late to reverse this policy, and if it ever is to be reversed the time is now close at hand. For the purpose of coming to an amicable understanding with the tribes we require chiefly competent agents who know the country and the men. There is, I believe, no difficulty in finding them, but the Indian Government will have to avoid some of its past errors in the choice of political officers if a satisfactory result is to be arrived at.

Again, if there is to be any further fighting it is absolutely essential that the Staff should be reorganised. Sir William Lockhart escapes, to some extent, responsibility for the past shortcomings of his Staff owing to the fact that it was ready made for him by the time he arrived in India. But that excuse will not serve a second time. During the present lull in the operations he has had ample time to make whatever changes are necessary, and if we hear, in the next campaign, such stories as have come home during the last two or three months, Sir William Lockhart will have to take the whole blame himself.

So much for the immediate future. Looking a little further ahead, there is one point in regard to our future dealings with the Frontier tribes to which I find that experts attach great importance. It is that the whole of the Frontier should be placed under the control of a single Political Officer directly responsible to the Government. At the present time, the North-West Frontier between Chitral and Beluchistan is parcelled out among about half-a-dozen political agents or commissioners. Some of them are responsible to the Punjab Government, others, I believe, directly to the Indian Government. From this it follows that the Indian Government is not promptly informed of everything that goes on among the Frontier tribes; it has not direct control over a number of men occupying most important political positions; and there may also be a diversity in the policy or the tone adopted towards the natives at different points along the Frontier. The remedy for this is to establish a single commissioner for the whole Frontier, from the Hindoo Kush down to the sea, to place under him so many local officers as may be necessary, and above all to make him directly responsible to the Indian Government. The advantages of this course are so obvious that they hardly need further arguing.

There is yet one other administrative reform the necessity for which has been pressed upon me in discussing the Frontier difficulty with experienced Anglo-Indian officials. By an extraordinary anomaly, the Indian Foreign Office is the one great Department of State which has not a member of the Council at its head. All the other Departments are represented on the Council, much in the same way as the Departments at home are represented in the House of Commons. The Foreign Office, on the other hand, is under an official known as the Foreign Secretary, who is simply the head clerk on the staff. This is very much the same thing as if the senior or most successful Foreign Office clerk at home were in his turn to be promoted to Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs. The arrangement in India leads at the best of times to much inconvenience, and may, at a critical moment, have very disastrous results. I believe I am right in stating that the Indian Foreign Office is in direct relation with its representatives in Persia, Afghanistan, and other countries beyond the Frontier, as well as with the quasi-independent States of the Indian Empire. The head of such a Department ought necessarily to be a statesman of general experience, and not merely a head clerk in the office, however competent or highly salaried; and it stands to reason that this head should be a member of the highest Council of State. There is, probably, no precedent in any other country for the divorce of the Foreign Office from the supreme Executive Government.

Such are a few of the principal measures now called for.

At the close of the recrimination over the roadmaking, Lord George Hamilton indicated some desire to arrive at a Frontier policy on which all parties can agree. He has a great opportunity now of adopting such a policy, and securing the tranquillity of the Frontier for the next generation. It remains to be seen whether he is the man to rise to the occasion.

THE APOTHEOSIS OF BUMBLE.

Though a Party man, I am not one of those who commit the mistake of under-rating the intelligence of their political opponents. So far from that, I hold that, as a rule, the Conservatives have of late years shown themselves wiser and shrewder in political warfare than Liberals and Radicals. But it, nevertheless, seems to me that greater twaddle than is being talked on County Council election platforms by the majority of the "Moderate and Unionist" Party has never been uttered. I do not wonder that hitherto large numbers of Unionists have enrolled themselves as Progressives at the County Council Elections, and my respect for their general political intelligence leads me to anticipate that they will do so again.

One of the "Moderate" orators professed last week his belief that "the true principles of municipal patriotism" are more fully developed in the individual parishes and districts of the Metropolis than in London as a whole. In other words, the ideal of "Moderate" municipal government is to be found in the typical London Vestryman, and the typical London parochial official. Sad, indeed, is it to reflect that the old London parish beadle has not survived to hear this joyful news. The "local patriotism" so highly developed in our Vestries and parochial functionaries is now to be gratified and yet further developed by converting the Vestries and Boards of Works into Corporations, who are to exercise various important functions, as yet undefined. Our old friend Bumble, apparently, is to be rigged out with a new gown and a gold chain, and is to save London from the sinister designs of a too aspiring County Council. Well, give him the power, and I have no doubt Bumble will do all that. But whether London under twenty or thirty glorified Bumbledoms will be a more desirable place to live in than London under one freely elected Municipal Council, is a question which no one who knows London and Bumbledom will have much difficulty in answering.

Where has this local "municipal patriotism" been discovered? Take any of the great London residential districts—Kensington, Chelsea, Marylebone, Paddington. How many residents are there in any one of them who know the names of half-a-dozen members of their own Vestry? How many of them have ever voted at a Vestry election? How many of them have ever read a report of a Vestry meeting, or know the ins and outs of a single question the Vestry has before it? Every resident in London who reads these lines knows that the local municipal elections are an empty farce. In half the wards the members are returned unopposed. The keenest contest will hardly bring out 500 electors on any side in a constituency of thousands. The usual thing—I am speaking now of the West End, where my experience lies—is to see Smith returned by about a couple of hundred votes, while Jones has polled perhaps half that number. The voters are the friends and acquaintances of Smith and Jones, and who Smith and Jones may be the two or three thousand who have not voted neither know nor care. The consequence is that all these Metropolitan local authorities are close corporations. Nominally elected, they are really co-opted, the dominant ring getting in its own nominees in nine cases out of ten. As a further consequence, they are nearly all hotbeds of jobbery and corruption. If the vast majority of the constituency neither know nor care who is elected, they know and care still less about what the elect do after the election. Those of the elect who have axes to grind, and who have got elected for the purpose of grinding them, grind away to their hearts' content, without fear of public opinion or the next polling day.

You may say that this is a highly deplorable state of things, and so it is. Progressives deplore it probably more than Moderates, for they have more belief in the virtues of decentralisation and local self-government. That, if possible, "increased dignity and efficiency" should be given to our Vestries is a commonplace of the election addresses on both sides in the County Council fight. But you are not going to remove this deplorable state of things by giving Vestrymen another name, and arming them with increased facilities for axe-grinding. The fault lies deep down in London life. It is the natural result of a state of society in which no resident knows his next-door neighbour, in which half the population move to a new district every few years, in which the majority of the voters work and have their most serious interests miles away from the parish or district in which they for the time being reside. From causes over which we have no control there is from end to end of London an utter absence of local public life, of general interest in local affairs. From this cause has arisen the whole difficulty of local government in the Metropolis. To talk of anything in the nature of "local patriotism" as existing is an insane delusion. To construct a system of parochial municipalities in the absence of such a spirit is to make an engine without the remotest prospect of ever being able to get up steam in it. If such municipalities are to be created, and if, as the Duke of Devonshire's speech last week seemed to suggest, such bodies are to send delegates to the County Council, so as to adapt the constitution of that body to the model of the defunct Metropolitan Board of Works, then the last state of London will be infinitely worse than anything we have seen yet. The only sign of "municipal patriotism" that has ever yet been seen in London, outside the City, has manifested itself during the last nine years since the County Council was established. The existence of the Council has called into existence a spirit that was before unknown. For the first time in their history Londoners have begun to take an interest in their own local affairs, and to feel some sense of corporate unity. They have interested themselves in the choice of representatives, and they have watched with a certain amount of attention the work their representatives have done. Because they have not had the majority, because they do not approve of all the work, the "Moderates" are now striving by hook or by crook to put the clock back, to restore the status quo ante Ritchie, to reinstate Vestrydom and Bumbledom in their former control over the fortunes of London. It is, indeed, an invitation to London to commit municipal suicide. If it succeeds, London will deserve the fate that most assuredly awaits it.

"MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING."

It is seriously argued in certain quarters that Shakespeare's most enchanting comedy should be placed on the shelf until we have all forgotten the merry, tripping, womanly, and almost ideal Beatrice of Ellen Terry; the grimly humorous and philosophical Benedick of Henry Irving; the famous cathedral scene at Messina designed for the Lyceum, and afterwards painted by Forbes Robertson, which is always quoted as one of the most magnificent stage sets ever seen in a modern theatre. Put away "Much Ado About Nothing"? Perish the thought! Are we to banish this Shakespearian comedy from the stage because the famous "kill Claudio" has never electrified an audience since the days of Helen Faucit? No, no! Let the young people have a chance both on and off the stage. Many on it have never acted in the play, many off it have never seen it. To miss the latest revival under the clever direction of popular George Alexander, with the addition of Edward German's accompanying music, probably the most tuneful and melodious ever composed for a play of Shakespeare's, would be a loss indeed. The great difficulty with this particular comedy has always been, first, how to repress, with fairness to the text, the loquacity of Dogberry and Verges; next, how to avoid playing the most buoyant scene of all before the high altar in a Catholic Cathedral. At the Lyceum Henry Irving solved the first question by cutting Dogberry and Verges "down to lines," as they say on the stage—to the indignation, I may add, of the Shakespearian scholars and purists, who insist on the whole text, and nothing but the text, but who at the same time would be the first to cry out if the comedy acted until one o'clock in the morning. The second stumbling-block at the Lyceum was not shirked at all. Benedick and Beatrice railed, chaffed, flouted one another, and kissed amidst the fumes of incense, perfume of flowers, and before the lighted candles and tabernacles on the high altar just prepared for a nuptial mass. George Alexander adopts a convenient compromise. The marriage is supposed to take place at a side altar in a vast cathedral, and so the religious part of the show is not so much in evidence as it was at the Lyceum. We have incense, choristers in scarlet cottas, processional crosses, a curious mixture of Franciscans and Dominicans in the same fold, and all the rest, but there is "no offence in it."

The players give a very fair account of themselves indeed, and are surprisingly good in characters that, as a rule, are indifferently acted. The wonder of the occasion was the strongly developed comedy power and dashing manner of Fred Terry as Don Pedro. He carried everything before him, and showed what such a play emphatically requires — style. Never too noisy or assertive, with an aristocratic manner and excellent diction, I do not remember to have seen a better performance of its kind. In fact, Don Pedro was so good that he occasionally swamped poor Benedick, capitally as he was played—and, oh, dear ladies, beautifully as he was dressed!—by George Alexander. Still, it was suggested that Don Pedro and Benedick might occasionally change places, even as Othello and Iago have been known to do. A more beautiful Beatrice than Julia Neilson no one could possibly desire, and this very clever lady has rarely given a more charming performance. I have seen it suggested that her Beatrice is not played in the spirit of true comedy because it differs in some respects from Ellen Terry's reading of the part. I myself recall with delight Miss Terry's admirable impersonation, but that does not in the least interfere with my appreciation of the excellent qualities of the new Beatrice. To my mind, it is a piece of perfect comedy that Julia Neilson gives us. The Hero of Fay Davies was, perhaps, just a little wanting in colour and variety. Hero should never be monotonous or mournful. She is the picture of maiden innocence and refinement. She is the pure-white lily to the blush-rose of Beatrice. The Don John of H. B. Irving was very good—a little slow and over-emphasised at times, but admirably made up and an impressive picture. Young Robert Loraine, who bears a wonderful resemblance to poor William Terriss, as Claudio did not come up to my expectations. He was not bad, but never as good as I thought he could be. A better Leonato than Mr. W. H. Vernon I have never seen—bold, dignified, and all the text made music by so accomplished an actor. They may chaff J. D. Beveridge about being Irish, but there are very few on the stage who could speak the "Sir Boy" speeches better than he did. As the old priest, Nutcombe Gould was a perfect picture, and the celebrated lines when he takes Hero to her living death brought tears into the eyes of the audience. Amongst the youngsters, one called Arthur Royston is exceedingly promising; but poor Mr. Vincent and Mr. Esmond as Dogberry and Verges were so lopped about that they had no chance. In these days, when the feast of the eye is almost as important as the feast of the soul, I should say that George Alexander's last experiment would prove one of his very luckiest. For my own part, I could go there again and again for Edward German's music alone. It was just the thing that was wanted.

NOTES FROM PARIS.

PARIS AND ZOLA.

WHO can hunt two hares at the same time? Not even the Parisians. Prince Ouroussoff, the new Russian Ambassador, has been the victim of this inability. He was hardly noticed the day he was taken in Protocol state to the Elysée to deliver his credentials. The Prince is not only a diplomat de carriere, but he was brought up in the very centre of the diplomatic cobweb of Russian foreign affairs. This privileged situation was due to his being Prince Gortshakoff's nephew. The new Ambassador might be thonght natty, were it not for his air dégagé. This air saves him also from being dapper, for he is under the middle height. Through the Radzivills—his mother was a Razivill-Ouroussoff—he is a distant connection of the Talleyrand-Périgords. But as the Prince de Chic's race is run, this will not be of much use to him. He speaks French better than most Russians. This is due to his having passed so much of his youth here with his mother and sister. The ambassadress is daughter of the late M. Abbazza, a finance minister of Alexander III. She won the favour of Brussels society by her easy and gracious manners and her entertainments. Prince Ouroussoff comes at a curious time. He may soon witness stranger events than the Dreyfus trial. We now live under the rule of topsy-turvy. One is knocked on the head for crying "Vive la République!" Republicans, Socialists, and policemen look on in silence. Had the new Ambassador come here six weeks ago, Paris would have turned out to see him go to the Elysée. As it was, the great capital forgot all about him. Its citizens were too busy at that Babel, the Assize Court, giving and receiving blows, and uttering factious cries and counter-cries. Society bravely mixed with the canaille to applaud the Generals, who made speeches to the jury and revealed secret papers quite as meaningless as the mysteries of Udolpho's mysterious castle. Prince Henry of Orleans embraced, in the face of the crowd, Major Esterhazy as he entered a cab. The budding Egalité the second did not cry "À bas les Juifs!" But the kiss did not commit him to anything, and yet might be taken for an anti-Semitic demonstration. Esterhazy dreams of Jewish carnage as the Sultan Achmet dreamt of Christian carnage. He makes no secret of it. Prince Henry showed himself daily in the Palais de Justice, walking in the Gallery where advocates congregate. He paid the Army the bad compliment of crying "Vive l'Armée!" as he embraced Esterhazy.

Colonel Picquart became more enigmatical as the trial went on. The detective policeman has been a favourite character of sensational English novelists. I submit to them, for a change, the detective Lieutenant-Colonel, sinuous and slippery as an eel, handsome, and with the nerves and address of a clever woman. I said he was like Mme. Bartet. So he is; but he is more like Mme. Rachel in the projecting, broad forehead and the long, oval face, from the eyes down; only he is blond. The forget-me-not eyes sometimes lose their vague expression and look feline, as did hers. He was brought into the Intelligence Department under M. Reinach's and General de Gallifet's auspices, to deliver Captain Dreyfus. He had been, as a chair-officer, allowed to witness the Captain's trial, and, enlightened on points of law by an attorney named Leblois, was able to put his finger on the illegalities. The feelings of the officers of the General Staff about Dreyfus may or may not have been right; but their procedure was tragi-comical. The documentary evidence would be hardly received by a third or fourth rate playwright. It was furnished by Secret Service agents. These gentlemen, of course, wanted to give value for the travelling and other expenses they incurred.

Colonel Sandherr, the head of the Department, a bigoted anti Semite, could not understand why a Jew entered the War Office, unless to increase opportunities to make money. If Germany spent heavily in obtaining military secrets, gold from Berlin, he argued, was sure to flow into Jewish pockets. He had Dreyfus watched for two years. One of the detectives was Colonel Henry, an enfant du peuple. He rose from the ranks. The enfant du peuple may be a good judge of a man, but not of a document. Henry received the most astonishing papers from agents of the department. He and Colonel Sandherr swallowed them. Dreyfus used to intrude on the spheres of other officers. They complained that he showed a too inquiring mind. He did not feel the need of observing their unwritten laws. These laws are a restraint on selfishness, and enable a number of men to live together on the footing of brotherhood. His presence among them made them chafe. I dare say the corrupt onés, who lend themselves to jobs, feared he would take this source of profit from them. They did think it was his information that led the Germans to arrest two naval officers sent to spy at Kiel. Not being very critical, they clutched the "evidence," brought in to Colonel Henry, and sent Dreyfus to the Devil's Island.

It is thought treasonable of Picquart to have secretly worked with Leblois for Dreyfus. He hid his purpose, so far as the watchful eye of Colonel Henry would allow. Leblois is unfortunate in his countenance. It is, line for line, that of Judas in the Last Supper. But the expression is modern, and that of a sharp lawyer. The "approaches" and lines of circumvallation were beautifully laid; but the Dreyfus family spoiled everything by their impatience, and ruined Picquart's military career.

Esterhazy is an anachronism. He is a man for Wallenstein's camp. There is more of the Tsigane than the Magyar in his blazing eyes. If silence gives consent, he must be a terrible fellow—in intention. The questions that he would not answer were on dreams of carnage—on his sorrow expressed in a letter at not being able to take a wretched woman to Tunis. Were she there, one of his African soldiers would plant a bullet in her, and no questions would be asked. Other questions were about his secret service work. Was he engaged in it twenty years? And then what were his relations with Colonel Schwartzkoppen? This Colonel was the German military attaché. A lawless spirit is catching. While Esterhazy was playing the part of silent witness, some spectators hoped he would take a revolver out of his pocket and shoot the counsel who bothered him.

The beauty of the trial was Mme. Labori, formerly Miss Maggie Okey, and afterwards Mme. Pachmann. Labori is une force de la nature. This force would be the better for a little taming. But it is a splendid gift. He is fair, florid, ready witted, and must be one of the greatest actors alive. This trial has given him a wide-world advertisement. It has also given him one of the first places at the Paris bar. His drift was constantly appearing, and as often repressed. It was to show that Esterhazy was the author of the bordereau found in a waste-paper-basket at the German Embassy. The son of the concierge there served under Esterhazy in Tunis. But Esterhazy could not have obtained secret papers of the War Office, unless with the complicity of an officer there. Nobody tried to ascertain whether he knew Dreyfus, and, if he did, whether he had been set to entrap him. It was disappointing not to see the Veiled Lady advance to the witness box and unveil herself. Ladies who had evidence to give were tenderly dealt with; they sent doctors' certificates. When Counsel discarded these, a Juge d'Instruction was sent to take their evidence at their bedsides.

LETTER FROM THE LINKMAN.

WHEN Damiens, dear Lady Betty, who tried to assassinate Louis XV., had his limbs torn from him, the ladies of the Court witnessed the execution, and, as the drivers thrashed the horses, lisped "Les pauvres chevaux! les pauvres chevaux!" Some one has wisely said that "The world, after nearly two thousand years, has scarcely spelt out three letters of the meaning of Christianity." At the close of the enlightened nineteenth century, the ladies of London Society throng to the Central Criminal Court to be present at the trial of a former companion, and to watch him as he is being dragged through the mire of disgrace! Of the crime and of the well-merited punishment it is unnecessary to write here; but in thus protesting against the unlady-like conduct of such women, the unwomanly conduct of such ladies, I am giving voice to the feelings of abhorrence which their behaviour has generally excited.

Dreyfus Day by Day, the new piece which is the sensation of the moment in Paris, recalls the best period of opéra bouffe. I venture to reproduce one inimitable scene:—

Maître Labori: "M. le Président, I am not a naturalised Frenchman, of German origin, who has married an English Jewess."

The President: "You are not! Then you are my long lost brother."

Here the spectators climbed on to the benches and broke forth into vociferous cheering.

Expert in Handwriting: "No; I have not seen the bordereau, but I have spilt my blood on the battle field: therefore, I pronounce Dreyfus to be a traitor."

This statement created a deep impression, and an officer promptly struck a barrister across the face with a cane. The commotion having been subdued, addressing Maître Labori, the President said:—

"Put your questions. They will not be answered. There is something superior to justice: it is the army."

Cries of "Vivent les Généraux," "Vive les Bordereaux," and "A l'eau" with everything else.

The Court rose amid lively agitation, and a military band outside played "Le Petit Bleu Polka." The trial is making rapid progress.

. . . . .

Though it is permissible to laugh at these somewhat burlesque proceedings, Englishmen will now perceive how ridiculous was the recent Parliamentary inquiry which was held on the Raid into the Transvaal. The Zola trial is almost line for line a reproduction of that inquiry. At both proceedings the witnesses made statements, and then refused to be cross-examined; at both the Court supported the witnesses which the Government, for its own purposes, wished to shield; at both the most important documents were withheld; and at both the populace sided with those who do not set the requirements of justice above other considerations. It is true that a Parliamentary inquiry is not absolutely on all fours with a trial in a Court of Justice; but the generality of people are not aware of this, and, indeed, they imagine that the former is of higher importance than the latter. It, therefore, especially ill becomes Englishmen, on this occasion, to ridicule the proceedings in Paris, which, however inconsistent and unjust they may appear to be, are not one whit more so than were those that caused wide-spread surprise throughout Great Britain last year.

An interesting correspondence is being published in the Morning Post on the subject of "Poor Gentlemen." A reader of these letters has written to me as follows:—

"Sir,—My case is similar to that of many others, and therefore it deserves some attention. My father is a Peer, rich as compared with most commoners, but poor as compared with many Peers. He has a large estate, upon which stands a house, which is little less than a palace. There I was born and there I was bred, surrounded by every luxury, treated by all in the neighbourhood with the utmost deference, and utterly ignorant of the inconvenience of poverty. I am a younger son, and at eighteen my father placed me in the office of a West End merchant, and gave me an allowance of £300 a year. Born in a palace, bred in a palace, accustomed to all the refinement and respect which my previous surroundings afforded me, I suddenly found myself lodged in a little fourth-floor room in a Mayfair lodging, with barely sufficient money to supply the necessaries of life, and much less than is required to live up to the position which my name and connections made it obligatory for me to keep up. I have to dress well; I have to live with those who are either rich or pretend to be so; I have to belong to a West End club; and, with these and other expenses, it is practically impossible for me to avoid running into debt. You will perhaps say, 'Why must you do these things?' The answer is plain: because, unless I associate with those who are of the same social position as myself, I shall be shunned by them; and it is they who can provide for me the opportunities of making money and of obtaining advancement. This is almost a new situation, for, until Mr. Gladstone threw open all Government employment to competition, men like my father could always secure for their younger sons official berths. I do not say that Mr. Gladstone was wrong in doing as he did, but the immediate effect of his legislation in this direction has been to ruin the prospects, if not the lives, of hundreds of younger sons, who, like myself, have had no proper training for rough work. Such cases are rendered all the harder to bear because the eldest son of the family inherits the palace, the property, and the wealth; he is treated with the deference and respect which we all had equally when we were young together; whilst we have to suffer in silence, and be snubbed, not only by our neighbours, but by him, who, of course, is convinced that he is superior to us in every way, intelligence included! There never was an age in Great Britain when the younger son had so hard a fate as he has now; and—mark my words—for many years to come, in consequence of this, the community will be scandalised by disgraceful incidents, which are mostly the outcome of young men being educated like princes, then cast upon the world as paupers, and compelled to keep up the appearances of their social position.

"Eton and Oxford."

I have also received a letter from a correspondent who signs himself "William Shakespeare." It surely cannot be a communication from the greatest genius that Britain ever produced:—

"With the Olympian Gods.

"Sir,—It causes me inexpressible pain to perceive that my works are no longer popular in England. The latest additions to our little circle of celebrities here assure me that, in England now, literary reputations are entirely made by certain log-rollers, who praise each other in the Press upon the principle of 'You scratch my back, and I will scratch yours.' As I am very jealous of my popularity, could you kindly give me the names of some of these log-rollers, so that I may become one of their body? I understand that a 'log-roller' is a literary gentleman who makes much noise in the world now, foreseeing that he will never be heard of in the future. He and his friends make each other for the present, and posterity will unmake them all. "WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE."

Señor de Bosc, the Spanish Chargé d'Affaires at Washington, whose name is now so prominently before the public, was on two occasions attached to the Spanish Embassy in London, spending many years here and being widely known. If a further proof of the colossal ignorance of editors, and those who write for the newspapers in London, is wanting, it may easily be supplied, for throughout the past week the name of Señor de Bosc has been persistently spelt Bose, Box, Bos, or Bosh.—Believe me to be, very truly yours, MARMADUKE.

SPORTING NOTES.

THE sporting papers are constantly printing trash and nonsense about the large sums of money which are now "given" on the Turf, and they persist in impudently ignoring the flagrant fact that the bulk of the sums advertised comes out of the pockets of the owners, by a dexterous system of entrances and forfeits. Except at Ascot, subscription races are now quite the rule. Things are very different in France, where £101,780 was given last year in added money at Longchamps and at Chantilly alone, and there is to be the same munificent sum of added money next season, besides £12,321 given by the Jockey Club to the various provincial meetings. The programme of the French Jockey Club deserves the careful attention of the Newmarket authorities, who would do well to follow the example of the Paris Club in many matters, for it is certain that nothing could possibly be worse than the present system at all the English meetings, with an overwhelming plethora of two-year-old races, five and six furlong scrambles, and selling plates, while the Utopian theory that the Turf exists in order to improve the breed of horses is never mentioned except to be laughed at. Certainly our breed of horses has deteriorated so direfully that it can scarcely get much worse. The animals are recklessly over-raced as two-year-olds, and then are prematurely hurried off to the stud, so that a high-class five-year-old, still on the turf and winning races, is nearly as rare a phenomenon as a phœnix or a unicorn.

It is a fact worthy to be noted that the French Jockey Club add only £10,000 to their two-year-old races, the number of which is sensibly limited, there being only twenty-eight of them out of a total of 268 events. Three-year-olds have fifty-two races, with £42,000 added. There are 157 stakes open to three-year-olds and upwards, with £44,160 added, and four-year-olds and upwards have thirty-one events, with £15,200 added. Out of these 268 races, only fifty are run over a shorter course than one mile and a quarter. There are 160 for distances between ten furlongs and fifteen furlongs, and fifty-eight over two miles and upwards. At Maisons Laffitte, where the races are managed by the Société Sportive d'Encouragement, the added money will amount to £65,000, being an increase of £14,000 over the sum which was given last year.

There will be an interval this year of ten days between the Grand Prix and Ascot, an arrangement which ought to benefit the English meeting. Hitherto the French race has always been run on the Sunday in Ascot week.

Manifesto has been purchased by Mr. J. G. Bulteel, and is to be ridden in the Grand National by Mr. Cecil Grenfell. The horse has been sent to Weyhill, where he will be trained for his Aintree engagement by Collins. Mr. Dyas is a sagacious man, and he probably apprehends that this year's Grand National will take a good deal of winning, so that he was not likely to refuse such a ridiculous price as 4,000 gs. for Manifesto, who can be no catch to Mr. Bulteel, seeing that he is ten years old, and a gelding.

I see that Hermiston is warmly recommended for the Lincolnshire Handicap by one of the sporting papers. There is not the least prospect of Mr. Low's colt being seen out at Lincoln, and backers might just as well deposit their money in the nearest river as throw it away upon Hermiston, who, however, will run either in the City and Suburban or the Kempton Park Jubilee Handicap.

I stated last week that Sir John Kelk intends to have The Baker specially prepared for the Chester Cup, after which he will be reserved for the Gold Cup at Ascot. The Sportsman points out that The Baker has accepted for the Great Metropolitan, and that he is better handicapped for that race than for the Chester Cup. This is true enough, but horses are left in every day for events for which there is no intention to start them, and the Chester Cup is a very much more important race than the Metropolitan, besides being more than twice as valuable. As a matter of fact, The Baker would scarcely be fit in time for the Epsom Spring Meeting, even if it was desired to run him there; indeed, it will take the trainer all his time to get Sir John Kelk's colt into thorough racing condition for the Chester Cup. It will not at all surprise me if The Baker runs his first race as a three-year-old at Ascot, although, as I mentioned last week, it is his owner's wish at present to start the colt at Chester.

With regard to Matthew Dawson's colt Longtown, who has been mentioned by some fatheads as a likely outsider for the Derby, I understand that the animal is being prepared to run for the Batthyany Stakes, the principal T.Y.C. handicap at the Lincoln meeting, and if he misses that event he will probably go for the Welbeck Handicap at Derby. Longtown has plenty of weight, but I fancy that he will be found a very smart colt over short courses.

People who are so infatuated as to bet upon future events at this period of the season will do well not to be gulled into backing Hawfinch for the Two Thousand or Derby. I am assured that it will be wise not to attach any importance to the Dewhurst Plate running. It must be remembered that Dieudonné, who was beaten a length with 9 lb. the worst of the weights, was running his third big race in three weeks. I hear, by the way, that the Duke of Devonshire's colt will not start for his engagement at the Newmarket Craven Meeting, but that the Two Thousand is to be his first race next season. In the Dewhurst Plate Ninus had 4 lb. the worst of the weights with Hawfinch, and he was beaten a neck, but, in the opinion of many good judges who carefully watched the race, Prince Soltykoff's colt ought to have won cleverly. That Hawfinch will ever again beat Ninus if the latter colt is all right I do not for a moment believe. There was no merit in the defeat of Orzil, as Mr. Brassey's colt had most palpably demonstrated his lack of stamina in the race for the Middle Park Plate. As to Royal Footstep, her running in the Dewhurst Plate may be ignored altogether, as she was suffering from the effects of a slight accident when she took part in that race. Sir Blundell Maple may justifiably anticipate winning the Oaks with Royal Footstep, whose performance in running Batt to a neck for the Criterion Stakes with 11 lb. the worst of the weights was an excellent one. If Royal Footstep had been all right on the last day of the Houghton meeting, she would probably have won the Dewhurst Plate, estimating the form through her running with Batt. She wants time, and she may not be ready to run for the One Thousand; but Sir Blundell Maple has an excellent second string for that race in Nun Nicer, who has wintered exceedingly well.

Mr. Oswald's colt, St. Evox, by St. Simon out of Saltire, who finished fourth for the Middle Park Plate, which was his only race last season, has been backed by some addleheads for both the Two Thousand and the Derby, but his friends are probably unaware of the fact that he is touched in his wind. He is a big, lumbering colt, but he gallops well, and, if he were sound, he might have developed into a good horse.

The American colt, Bridegroom II. (Mr. Belmont's), is as promising a Derby outsider as can be found either at Newmarket or anywhere else. He is a remarkably good looking animal, with very fine action, and the Epsom gradients will exactly suit him. Bridegroom II. has made a vast improvement since last November, and he is sure to win some good races this year.

The Prince of Wales's dark colt, Ormathwaite, about whom there was so much trumpeting last season, is not likely to stand a preparation. He could not be trained for his two-year-old engagements.

Only seven horses have been withdrawn from the Liverpool Spring Cup, fifteen being left in; but three of them are trained by Mr. Lambton. I pointed out last week the absurdity and fatuity of supposing that Labrador could give 2 lb. to Crestfallen, and the Duke of Westminster's overrated horse has been withdrawn. The Kingsclere stable is doubly represented with Butter and St. Bris, but there is not the least chance that either of these animals will be fit to run so early in the season. The distance is not far enough for Northallerton, who, however, has accepted. Dancing Wave is nicely weighted, and so also is First Foot.

The value of the Goodwood Stakes is to be increased to £800, but I doubt if any amount of money will restore vitality to a handicap of two miles and a half. A quarter of a century ago the Goodwood Stakes, with only £100 added, was the most important of the summer handicaps, and a very heavy betting race. The fact is that not one horse in fifty can fairly stay two miles and a half with a fast run race, for only the grievous lack of stamina which now prevails on the turf can account for the failure, year after year, of the Ascot Cup, which is the most richly endowed race in England.

Mr. Brassey has a truly grand two-year-old in Boniface, by St. Simon out of Merry Miser, dam of Orzil, and he will probably make his début at the Epsom Summer Meeting, and then follow in the footsteps of his half brother, and go for the Coventry Stakes at Ascot, a race in which winners have no extra weight to carry. If Mr. Brassey remains on the turf for all the rest of his life he will be fortunate indeed if ever again he makes so good a bargain as he did at Newmarket in July, 1895, when he paid only 1,050 gs. for Merry Miser, with her foal (Orzil), and she being then in foal to St. Simon, the result being the aforesaid Boniface. How Mr. J. S. Harrison could be so infatuated as to sell the mare at any such price it is impossible to understand; but I suppose he thought she was not in foal. In any case, however, it was a blunder to part with Merry Miser so hastily, as she was then only eight years old.

Royal Angus continues to be backed for the Two Thousand and Derby, but his supporters must surely be idiots to accept such a ridiculous price about a dark colt of whose form absolutely nothing whatever is known, and especially as it is literally any odds on his stable companion, Disraeli, proving the best three-year-old in Mr. W. Johnstone's team. Royal Angus is a colt that will be found difficult to train as time goes on, and particularly if the ground becomes hard.

Mr. Leigh's colt, The Wyvern, who so grievously disappointed his friends last year, has wintered remarkably well, and although he may not be up to Derby form, yet he certainly ought to secure a good race in which he will meet previous winners with an advantage in the weights. The Wyvern was highly tried before his unsuccessful début in the Coventry Stakes at Ascot, and he was heavily backed for that race, but the great dash was on the French colt, Manitou, whose owner would have won a very large stake, but his steed could only finish third to Orzil and Cap Martin, being apparently unable to stay beyond five furlongs. Manitou is a probable starter for the Derby.

Mr. Justice Hawkins has rather startled some of those who either play football or write about the game by his exposition of the law of murder and manslaughter in connection with the trial of a young fellow at Leicester, who was charged with having caused the death of a player in an Association match. The learned judge laid down an elementary principle which a good many people forget. He pointed out that even the rules of Association football could not over-rule the laws of the land. Whereupon some sages observed that if a man takes part in a game, with a full knowledge of its rules and dangers, he cannot complain if he is hurt. It is perfectly true that he cannot complain if he is dead. The argument would, no doubt, be of some importance if the injured party were seeking damages by way of compensation for the injuries he had received, but it is no answer to the remarks of the learned judge. The suggested argument probably finds its origin in the confusion which exists in many minds between the process of the civil and criminal law. In a criminal case it is the State that prosecutes and the State that punishes. An argument that may be an answer to an action by a private individual is not worth the paper it is written on when the State is the prosecutor. If this were not the case, the rules of football might legalise hacking, foul charging, and free fights. They might also exonerate from responsibility any player who injured or killed an antagonist, and the strong arm of the law would be powerless to interfere. In business and in pleasure the law of the land is paramount. It can reach both an Association football player and a Grosvenor Hotel Director.

In the case referred to, the young fellow was found guilty of manslaughter by the jury, and the judge deferred sentence until the next day. I do not envy that young fellow his feelings during that night. He was finally bound over to come up for judgment when called upon, and so long, therefore, as he behaves himself he has nothing to fear. His case should, however, not only be a salutary warning to those who indulge in foul tactics or rough play, but awaken referees to their responsibilities in seeing that the rules of the game are strictly observed.

It was an excellent idea holding the University Association match on a Saturday, and the consequence was that the game at Queen's Club was watched by a record gathering. After their spell of bad luck, every one will congratulate Cambridge on their success after a very close and fast game. It was almost half time before Burnup, by a brilliant run, scored the winning and only goal. Up till that time Oxford, with the wind, had been having all the best of the play. The Cambridge halves were weak, and Simpson was slow at back. In fact, it was the brilliant goal-keeping of Campbell that more than once saved the situation. To him more than to anybody the Light Blues owe their victory. After Burnup scored, a change for the better came over the whole team. That goal was like a tonic. The halves tackled better and the backs played more resolutely, and Cambridge had quite their share of the play, Taylor missing a good chance of scoring, while a centre from a fast run by Haig-Brown ought to have been taken. The Oxford forwards were fairly well together, and Vassall's pace was very useful. They shot pretty decently, but the goalkeeping was too good for them. It was an exciting match, and the combination of both teams made the game much more interesting than the Rugby scramble.

In the League game a great surprise was effected by Notts County, the wooden spoon of the first division, beating the leading team, Sheffield United, after a very close game. Derby County were rather unlucky to lose to Sheffield Wednesday. In the United League Milwall and Woolwich had one of their usual rough-and-tumble games which ended in a draw. Ilford effected a great surprise in the London Senior Cup by beating the Old Carthusians after a very hard game. The winner's defence was excellent. In another tie Brentford had the satisfaction of beating Clapton on their own ground.

In the Rugby game it is satisfactory to see that England and Wales will probably be playing this season. Against Ireland, Scotland scored a most meritorious win, the outsides showing much better combination than had been anticipated. Blackheath, after a hard game, spoiled Oxford's unbeaten record. But, then, Smith was away, and it is rather ridiculous to carry on a University programme so long after Christmas. Cambridge, likewise, showed good form against Coventry; but what is the use of International form after the University match has been lost? Rugby is the only sport in which the University is not the be-all and end-all. The Association game winds up the season, and I think that when the University match is being played, the Rugby teams might avoid a fixture. Richmond turned out a better team against Cooper's Hill than they have recently been able to put in the field, but the game ended in a draw, the ball being chiefly controlled by the forwards. The Old Merchant Taylors ought to have beaten Rosslyn Park, but their outsides did not combine well, although Crimp did some useful work. The Hospital Cup ties are going strongly, and St. George's, with an admirable set of forwards, led by Tucker, nearly beat Guy's. In the losers' team were the old Cambridge rowing blues, Pennington and Taylor, and the old C.U.B.C. President, G. C. Kerr, was playing for Scotland against Ireland. Now, if rowing men can play football, why cannot footballers row? Middlesex just managed to beat St. Mary's, after first playing a draw. The former team would have been a very fair one if it had played together all through the season. Unfortunately, there seems to have been a slackness in matters athletic at that hospital recently. By the way, what admirable worms are those students who never play the game, and yet lay odds against their hospital in a Cup tie.

While Mr. Justice Hawkins has been teaching footballers the law, Mr. Hannay, the Stipendiary, has been showing cyclists that the recent decision of the Queen's Bench that the police cannot stop a rider and demand his name and address when he is travelling without his light after dark will not be of much avail to such riders who are anxious to break the law. A policeman did stop a cyclist who was fined 5s. and costs. The National Cyclist Union thereupon summoned the policeman, who was fined one penny without costs. The magistrate further intimated that, in his opinion, a rider without a light when there was traffic about was riding to the common danger and could therefore be stopped. It will be just as well if cyclists bear this dictum in mind. It is very foolish, indeed, of riders to endeavour to take advantage of an obvious omission in the law. The N.C.U. has done a lot of excellent work, but it will rapidly lose all public confidence if it continues to harrass the police in this absurd fashion. Cyclists are for ever agitating for concessions of one sort or another. The Universal Light Bill is one of their hobbies; it is rather foolish of them to expect that other people will go out of their way to light up their vehicles when the one object of cyclists is to make the existing legislation on the subject as ridiculous as possible.

The carriage of bicycles by the railway companies is a matter that is daily becoming more important. Apparently the railway companies will do nothing because there has yet to be invented a van which will satisfy the managers' requirements. In the meanwhile, the companies adopt a very high-handed procedure and compel consignors to sign a note relieving the company from all risk. It is bad enough for a company to secure itself from immunity for any damage occasioned on transit, but it is perfectly preposterous for a company to compel anyone to sign a note relieving the railway from any liability if the article disappears en route. Yet a correspondent in the Field was compelled to sign such a document and the bicycle vanished. The company not only refused redress, but withheld any information which would have enabled the owner to trace his machine. It would ruin any ordinary man to fight the company. I had an idea that the handsome profits of the Cyclists' Touring Club were to be devoted to giving battle in such test cases. Mere deputations to railway companies are useless. But that august body does not move. The members are scattered abroad, and are like a flock of sheep. They have no will of their own. They bleat and cry if one suggests that their admirable shepherd, with his snug little billet, might do something. Perhaps, at a general meeting some one will some day organise a sufficiently strong body of voters to insist on something being done of a more useful character than a trade in buttons and brooches.

On Saturday next, at 2 p.m., there will be an interesting lawn-tennis match in the covered court at Queen's Club, between two professional players, for a purse provided for the members of the Club. The players are Fleming of the Queen's Club and Burke, the professional of the Lawn Tennis Club of Paris. Both men are very keen, and Burke is having a week's practice at Queen's to accustom himself to the court. He has an admirable style, and he has been called a "soft Pim," owing to the marked similarity of his style to that of the well-known amateur. Fleming has recently been showing excellent form against some of the leading amateurs. The match, therefore, promises to be most interesting.

After all the nonsense that has been written about Roberts's inability to play if the push stroke were barred, it was rather a good move on his part to play Mitchell, who claims to be the champion at that class of game. Roberts has only given over a quarter start in 21,000 up, and, judging by the score at half time, he looks like winning. The change of rule or limitation of stroke does not seem to have troubled him. He has made five century breaks, and he has created a record break. It is said that a real professional championship is to be started, in which push and spot strokes will be barred, and a player will not be able to score from balls when jammed. The Billiard Association, or whatever the ruling body is called, is evolving a championship scheme on this basis, and if the regulations are sensible, and the prizes good, no doubt the cracks will support it. Mahomet has had to go to the mountain Roberts.

The going for the Southern Counties Cross Country Championship at Wembley was decidedly sticky. In the Seniors the struggle for the first position was very keen, and the Essex Beagles just secured first honours from the Finchley men by two points; Bennett, the Finchley Harriers' champion, was first home, beating Bartlett of the Essex Beagles. In the Juniors Silsby at first cut out the pace, but at the finish he was easily beaten by Steadman of the Epsom Harriers. After their success in the North of the Thames contest, the Tee-To-Tum were, as was expected, easy winners. The Northern event was run over a grass course at Trafford Park, Manchester, and a comparatively unknown runner, Hosker, was the winner, while the Manchester men secured team honours.

Thank goodness, peace has been declared at Cambridge! Dudley Ward did the best thing possible in bringing matters to a crisis. I do hope if Cambridge men have any more rows or tiffs they will have it out at once like men instead of indulging in backbiting and scheming like a lot of viper-tongued old spinsters. Every now and then there must be a breeze, but if each man fought his own fight and, having unburdened himself, offered to shake hands and make it up, how much happier things would be. A University life is meant to cement life-long friendships, not to create deadly and irreconcilable feuds.

MAMMON.

From MOSES MOSS to BENJAMIN BOSS.

Sunday.

MY DEAR BEN,—I had occasion to remark last week that politics were still a factor in the Stock Markets, but the outlook then was brightening, as the position in the Far East was more settled, and the Dupuy de Lôme incident had been practically closed. There is, however, nowadays, no rest for the Markets, and a fresh Cuban scare, combined with some disagreeable Anglo-French incidents in West Africa, have again shattered the nerves of the Stock Exchanges and Bourses.

Stock Exchange Politics.

I cannot refrain from again quoting an old saying, viz., that "in foreign politics the Stock Exchange is an ass." It is true that the London Stock Exchange has borne up pretty well against the weakening effect of the Maine disaster, but the New York Stock Exchange was greatly depressed by the occurrence, although it was evident from the outset that this catastrophe was the result of an accident. This was recognised more clearly here than in New York, and London at first held up quotations, although Wall-street put them down. The dismissal of Chief Justice Kotze by President Kruger increased the weakness, until finally "the last straw" appeared in the shape of Saturday's West African scare. The latter is in every respect unreasonable, and the selling which is exclusively traceable to professional operators, is by no means creditable to Stock Exchange intelligence. The West African problem is at present being discussed by an Anglo-French conference, and it is evident that the taking-up of positions in the debatable territory by both English and French troops is not intended to lead to any real collision; as instructions from the respective Governments are clearly to the effect that these should be avoided. I have no doubt but that a solution of the difficulty will be found, and that this scare will pass off, as so many others have. What the succession of scares has, however, accomplished is a shake out in all the chief speculative departments, and notably in Home Rails, American and Canadian Rails, and in the Kaffir Circus. The weak elements must, to a considerable extent, now have been eliminated, and the carry-over will probably show that not only has the account for the rise been greatly reduced, but also that a very considerable "Bear" account has been created. It is not surprising that operators of ursine proclivities should have availed themselves of the series of disagreeable political accidents to make raids on the market, and in this they have been assisted by the tight condition of the Money Market. In view of the impending Government disbursements, however, and of the cessation of the Continental demand for gold, we appear to be close to a period of greater ease, and it is therefore not at all improbable that, provided politics shape themselves more favourably, the tables will be turned upon the "Bears." This should more particularly occur in the Home Railway department, in which stock was shown to be exceedingly scarce at the last settlement; but sharp recoveries are also on the cards, in connection with the American and South African markets, and in this connection I would insist upon the importance of basing calculations upon intrinsic conditions, disregarding to some extent passing influences and market movements. Business in the United States continues to show remarkable progress, and everything tends to increase railroad traffics, and, consequently, the prosperity of the railroad interest. Again, in the matter of the Kaffir Circus, the chief feature, after all, notwithstanding the somewhat arbitrary action of Oom Paul, is the continued prosperity of the mines, as indicated by fresh monthly crushing records. The West Australian section has resisted the adverse influences better than the Kaffir Circus, and, in a few instances, sharp advances have, moreover, occurred. Interbourse securities have not so far suffered to any extent, and it stands to reason that if there were really any fear of war between England and France, these stocks would experience a severe fall, just as Consols would drop points instead of small fractions. My warning that the large "Bull" account in Grand Trunks and Canadian Pacifics, as well as in Argentine Rails, might lead to unpleasant consequences whenever any difficulties arose, has, on the other hand, been fully justified by the sharp declines in all these securities. Similarly, there have been numerous falls in the Industrial Department, in which I have for some time seen danger ahead, and I have this week to record a partial collapse in the speculation in Hudson Bays, Allsopps, Salt Union, and Bovrils. There are a great many others to follow suit. Apart from these weak spots, however, the condition of the markets appears to be sound enough, and any favourable developments in connection with the various political clouds which at present obscure the horizon should produce a general recovery.

Home Rails—A "Bear" Raid.

The firmer tendency which has made itself felt in the Home Railway department after the various dividend announcements had been made, and which was partly induced by the evidence of scarcity shown at the last settlement, has made room for a reaction on systematic "Bear" raids, which culminated yesterday in an attack on the Southern Passenger stocks and on the Scotch section. There has, however, been no selling on the part of the public, and if, as is probable, stock should again prove scarce at the carry-over, and the political outlook should improve, the "Bears" will have to face a much stronger market. In the meantime, they succeeded in putting down Brighton "A" to 175, Dover "A" to 110½, Chatham Ordinary to 19¾. They were equally successful in the Scotch section, in which they depressed Caledonian Deferred Ordinary (Coras) to 56⅝, and North British Deferred to 44⅞. In the case of the southern passenger lines the setback is certainly devoid of any basis, as traffics continue to show exceedingly well. For the first seven weeks of the present year the Brighton Company has an increase of £22,548, the South-Eastern one of £16,083 to show, and these come on the top of substantial gains over 1896. Neither is there any fault to find with Brighton "A" and Dover "A" on the score of the yields. This will easily be gathered from the following table of comparative yields of the leading Home Railway stocks:—

—	First Half 1897.	Second Half, 1897.	Divid. for 1897.	Prices Feb. 19.	Yield per Cent. per Annum.

* Dividends payable until opening of line.

With the exception of the Great Northern Deferred stocks, which yield a higher return, but will have to face the coming Great Central competition, the Brighton "A" yield of 3 15/16 per cent. is the best, for the return on the Great Central 1894 Ordinary stock on the basis of the present dividend will cease with the opening of the London extension. Dover "A" (South Eastern Deferred) yield as much as 3 7/16 per cent., which is satisfactory considering that this is a very progressive line, which will receive considerable benefit from the extensions now being carried out. Dover "A" are certainly cheaper than Great Eastern, although this is also a progressive Company.

There does not appear to be much room for a further decline in the Heavies, as investors are satisfied with a yield of 3½ per cent. in view of the dearth of high-class investments, while the maintenance of the dividends of these lines seem to be fully guaranteed by the continued traffic increases. The Scotch dividends will shortly be announced. They may not show an increase over the previous year, but the future is very promising. Advices from the north are to the effect that the engineering trade is very busy, and substantial traffic increases are therefore in sight, more especially for the Caledonian. Efforts have again been made to depress Metropolitan Districts, but the various extensions which will act as feeders of this system are now well in hand, and in due time they should benefit the Ordinary stock to a substantial extent. Districts, therefore, are one of the best lock-ups in this department. This may also be said to be the case with Central London Ordinary fully-paid shares, which have maintained their recent improvement amidst the surrounding weakness. Interest at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum is paid until the opening of the line, and there can be but little doubt that when this is accomplished it will attract so large an amount of passenger traffic that it will pay good dividends from the outset. The Financial News of the 19th inst. contains an account of the progress which has so far been made with the construction of the line, from which it appears that it will be opened for traffic early next year. Of the total length of 22,000 yards of tunnelling only 6,000 yards remain to be driven. As the representative of my financial contemporary puts it, "Very few persons who pass the Exchange in the course of their daily business know that the site of the Great Central station, into which the Central London, City and South London, Waterloo and City, and other electric lines will converge, is virtually cleared, and that the roadways over a considerable area are completely undermined." The foundations of the Company's generating station at Shepherd's Bush are begun, and it is proposed to take advantage of the extensive plant to work all the station lifts, of which there are forty-nine, by electricity, this being more economical than hydraulic power. The whole of the rolling stock, consisting of 150 carriages, which are being made in England, and thirty locomotives, which are being constructed in America, is in hand. The cars will be somewhat similar to those in use on the Manhattan Elevated Railway in New York, the inside length of each being 36 ft., height 7 ft. 6 in., width 8 ft. This means, as the Financial News remarks, that a Central London car will be of greater dimensions than a London and North-Western dining-car, thus ensuring greater airiness and comfort, in contrast, I may add, to the somewhat scanty proportions of the City and South London carriages.

The Yankee Market—Another Cuban Scare.

Hardly had the Wall-street market recovered its tone after the Dupuy de Lôme incident—which, by the way, was disavowed by the Spanish Government with the best grace possible—than a fresh Cuban incident burst upon the long-suffering American market in the shape of the frightful catastrophe to the U.S. cruiser Maine. The nerves of Wall-street were altogether shattered by this disaster, and, as usual, my sensational American contemporaries did their best to convey the impression that Spanish perfidy was at the bottom of the explosion. A different view was taken here from the outset, and the curious spectacle appeared that on several consecutive days London held up quotations while New York put them down. A calmer view of the occurrence has since been taken by our American cousins, although there are still occasional outbursts on sensational, but false, rumours, and it is quite clear that the Spanish authorities were in no way connected with what seems to have been an accident. The manner in which the wounded were tended, and the respect shown to the remains of the unfortunate victims by Spanish and Cubans are, moreover, beyond all praise. Under these circumstances, there is reason for hoping that in due time, and especially after an examination of the wreck, the people of the United States will recognise the generous conduct of Spain in the matter, in which case this deplorable disaster may after all conduce to more amicable relations between the two countries. It is most unfortunate that at this juncture the statement made by Mr. Chamberlain in the House of Commons concerning certain occurrences in the Lagos hinterland should have precipitated a scare on the London Stock Exchange, thus withdrawing temporarily the support which American Rails had received on this side. But as there is no indication of serious trouble between England and France, it is as well to look rather at the commercial and financial position in the United States than at the political rumours which at present disturb this department. Traffics certainly continue most satisfactory, and, according to the Financial Chronicle, the earnings of thirty-five railroads in the second week of February amounted to $3,672,769, an increase of $433,966, and those of seventy-six railroads in the first week of February were $7,035,846, a gain of $676,913. Amongst the traffic increases for the second week of February are Milwaukee, $80,000; Louisville, $43,000; Texas and Pacific, $31,618; Southern, $25,000; Chesapeake and Ohio, $48,551; Missouri Pacific, $35,000; and Wabash, $30,007. The money outlook in the United States is also satisfactory, and the effect of the splendid crops is still visible in the greater prosperity of the whole country. Wages, moreover, are being raised, and will thus increase the spending power of the masses. There is a talk of the directors of the Louisville and Nashville Company raising the wages of their employees. This, as I have repeatedly mentioned, is a necessary condition before dividends can be resumed, and in view of the refunding scheme which has now been fixed up, it is evident that the resumption of dividends is imminent. The recent advance in Louisville has been lost again, chiefly under the pressure of the unfavourable political news, and on heavy sales, which appear to have piled up a considerable "Bear" account. I mentioned last week that Milwaukee had not had their share in the general upward movement which had taken place, and I suggested that the insiders were reserving their strength until we get close to the next dividend announcement in March. This has evidently been the case, and now the first rumours of the next distribution, which is expected to be 2½ per cent. for the half-year, are being cabled over. There is no doubt that the Milwaukee Company can easily maintain a 5 per cent. dividend now. In fact, the earnings for the fiscal year are working out to over 7 per cent. I do not anticipate that the present weakness of Atchison Prefs., Erie Prefs., Norfolk Adjustment Prefs., Northern Pacific Prefs., and Southern Prefs. will be maintained, as all these reorganised roads are doing well, and earning dividends on their Preference stocks. I expect a sharp rally, more particularly in Erie Prefs., which stock is likely to prove exceedingly scarce in the near future, but whenever the recovery comes it will doubtless be general, and it should more particularly affect Union Pacifics as the Kansas Pacific sale has taken place, and the reorganisation committee has acquired this road. The position of the Union Pacific is undoubtedly one of great promise now that the Government lien is done with. The net earnings during the year 1897, while the road was in the receivers' hands, amounted to $6,336,100, and, adding the revenue from other sources, this would be sufficient to pay fixed charges, and the full four per cent. preference interest, leaving, moreover, a credit balance. When it is considered that the Company has done so well while in the hands of the receivers, it may be anticipated that now the road will be worked independently, and especially in view of the intimate relations formed with the Vanderbilt roads, still better progress will be made, so that it may be said that the Common Stock is in sight of dividends. It should not be forgotten, moreover, that the present price includes $15 of Preference due to the old shareholders in lieu of the assessment, so that the quotation is reduced to $23 ex rights. In discussing the probable course of American Rails in the near future one must not leave out of calculation the fact that a number of big deals have still to be carried out by the leading American financial houses, and it may therefore be assumed that a strong effort will be made by these to impart renewed strength to this department whenever political events permit this. For some time I have warned my readers to "stand from under" as regards Canadian Railroad stocks, the rise having been too fast and furious. Now that rate cutting has commenced between the Canadian Pacific and Grand Trunk, both stocks have declined sharply, the weakness of the Yankee market at last also affecting them. On Saturday Canadian Pacifics fell over 4 points to 84½, and Grand Trunk First Prefs. are down to 65⅝, the Guaranteed to 74½, and there has since been a further decline. It remains to be seen how far this war of rates will be carried. I have been favoured with the latest issue of the "American Railways Traffic Book," published by Messrs. Hodding, King, & Co., stock and share brokers, 14, Angel-court, E.C., which is a very useful handbook for those interested in the American market.

Foreigners and South Americans.

The strength of inter-Bourse securities has been remarkable amidst the various weakening influences, and although they have at last given way on the rumours concerning the West African difficulty, the relapse has been merely fractional. Even Spanish have not fallen much below 61, the price at which they have been maintained for some time. Turks are easier on the Cretan difficulty, but Greeks have been very firm. In fact, the present range of quotations in the Foreign department does not in any way suggest serious fears of trouble between this country and France. In the South American section the only improvement has taken place in Uruguayan bonds, which have risen to 43 for the Three and a Half per Cent. Loan, on the continued favourable advices from Monte Video, according to which Señor Cuestas has the united support of the Blancos and Colorados, while the Herrera party has been finally worsted. On the other hand, Argentine Government stocks have experienced a general decline of about 2 points, chiefly on realisations by nervous "Bulls." It looks, moreover, as if no important advance would come about until General Costa occupies the Presidential chair. In Argentine Railway stocks there has been an important set back, at which readers of Truth will not be surprised, as I have for some time explained that the upward movement in these securities has gone far in advance of the improvement in earnings, the future progress having been unduly discounted. I mentioned more especially Central Argentine Ordinary as having been pushed up altogether regardless of the dividend outlook, and I have now to record a further fall in this stock to 81½. Buenos Ayres Great Southern are down four points to 153, and Buenos Ayres and Rosario are 2 lower at 74½, while another heavy decrease of the Cordoba Central (Central Northern Section) has caused the Income debentures to fall 4 points to 54½. According to a cablegram from the Buenos Ayres correspondent of the Financial News, a group of continental bankers has agreed to purchase from the Government "locust bonds" to the amount of $3,000,000, thus providing the Finance Minister with the necessary funds for the payment of the coupons on the foreign loans. It may be assumed that a portion of this amount has been spent in the destruction of locusts, but it is not stated what the security of the bonds will be. It is to be hoped that the security will not consist of these amiable insects. Nothing more has been heard of the refunding scheme of the Mexican Gold Debt, but the quotations of Mexican Sixes have been well maintained. On the other hand, the decline in silver has caused Mexican Rails to join the downward movement, the First Prefs. having now receded to 79½. Peruvian Corporation stocks are slightly easier, although no unfavourable news has come to hand. There has been no recovery in Brazilians, and Chilians have been weak, but I do not share the opinion expressed in some quarters that there will be trouble between Chili and Argentina over the boundary question.

The Kaffir Circus—Oom Paul Spoils the Market.

The arbitrary dismissal of Chief Justice Kotze by President Kruger has caused a disagreeable impression, not only here but also in Paris, and French realising sales have been effected in addition to London "Bear" sales, thus causing a further general reaction. This judicial squabble is very unfortunate, but I do not think that Oom Paul proposes exactly to interfere with the administration of justice, and I should think that this event will in due time be viewed more calmly. What has after all to be borne in mind is that the mining industry in the Transvaal is making excellent progress, and there is no indication that Oom Paul will stifle the industry upon which the very existence of the South African Republic depends. A further shake-out of weak elements has also been caused by the recent set-back, and after the settlement it would not by any means be surprising to see a very general recovery. In the meantime, Rand Mines, after declining to 30, have rallied to 30⅝, and Consolidated Goldfields and East Rands, after touching 4½, are firmer at 4⅝. Chartered have also been affected by sales on the part of stale "Bulls," and are but little firmer at 2¾; while the reaction has extended to the Barnato and Robinson groups. Holders of substantial mining and finance shares, however, should not throw the same away, but await a recovery which cannot be far off. Cable information has been received that the Main Reef series in the Knight's Deep has been cut in the Robertson Shaft at 1,173 ft. The following are three average assays of the Main Reef: Over 4 ft., 12 dwt. 10 gr.; over 4 ft. 7 in., 9 dwt. per ton; over 4 ft., 1 oz. 4 gr. per ton; the north reef over 1 ft, 9 dwt. 21 gr. A movement is on foot to call a meeting of shareholders of the South African Gold Trust for the purpose of obtaining an expression of their opinion concerning the threatened resignation of Mr. H. E. M. Davies. It will be remembered that at the last ordinary meeting the proposal was made to increase the remuneration of the Directors by £2,000, but the shareholders took very little interest in the matter, and Mr. Davies, who was in the chair, decided that the resolution had been negatived, and signified his intention to abandon the chairmanship. There is a very general feeling of regret at this decision, and it is evident that the large majority of the shareholders will be in favour of retaining the valuable services of Mr. Davies, so that the amount of £2,000 for the past year, which has been fully deserved by the able management of the Board, will doubtless be voted. Diamond shares have also been dull, De Beers being quoted 29¾, New Jagersfontein, 8.

Golden West Australia.

It cannot be said that the West Australian section has shown uniform firmness. At the same time, there has not prevailed in the "Kangaroo" department that general weakness which has distinguished the Kaffir Circus, and in one instance more particularly great strength has been shown. I refer to the Market Trust group, in which Northern Territories have again advanced to $3\frac{13}{16}$, so that the quotation of these shares has more than doubled itself during the last few weeks. I explained the reason of this rise last week, and I have now to record a further sharp improvement in this group in W.A. Loan and General Finance shares, which have gone ahead to $2\frac{3}{16}$, or $\frac{7}{16}$ better. The other shares of this group have also been firm, and a notable circumstance is the proposal to amalgamate the bulk of the Associated properties. A circular has been issued to the shareholders of the W.A. Market Trust stating that the Directors are engaged upon the consideration of the consolidation of the principal parent Companies, and it is incidentally mentioned that the Associated Gold Mines of Western Australian, Associated Southern Gold Mines, Associated North-Western Gold Mines, and the Auxiliary Associated Gold Mines, will be among the first to derive benefit from this scheme. From the Associated Gold Mines a cablegram has been received, stating that "there is a great improvement at the north-west drive on lode No. 2, off south-west cross-cut 110-ft. level, and that at No. 6 shaft, Australia East lease,

No. 72E, 5 ft. in width, the assays average 7 oz. per ton." The list of crushings this week is not extensive, being as follows:—

—	Tons of Ore Crushed.	Oz. of Gold.	Assay of Tailings per ton.
Great Boulder Perseverance ...	1,049	933	—
Westralia and East Extension...	1,882	1,236	—
Hannan's Oroya	832	374	—
Belle Vue Proprietary	300	394	—

Weld-Hercules.....	200	135	—
Lady Shenton	552	1,518	—
Ivanhoe Gold.....	793	1,354	17 dwt.
Mount Yagahong.....	548	612	—
Royal Sovereign	73	166	—
Cuddingwarra	280	290½	37 dwt.

It will be noted that the Great Boulder Perseverance milling return is not all that could be desired, but it remains to be seen what will be the result of the next smelting operation. From the White Feather Reward Claim a cablegram states that the 300-ft. level continues to improve, and that gold can be seen at almost every shot. With reference to the Belle Vue Proprietary, the Directors state that crushings will now commence from the stopes direct, the quartz recently crushed having been taken from the dump formed during development. Brownhill Central shares have been in fair request at 1¾, and the manager, Mr. J. H. Edols, has been authorised to obtain complete air-compressing plant with six rock drills. I understand that the question of the Agent-Generalship for Western Australia has now been decided, and that the Hon. E. H. Wittenoom, Minister of Mines, will receive the appointment on the return of the Premier, Sir John Forrest, from the inter-Colonial conference. Mr. Wittenoom is expected here early in May. He will doubtless be an ideal Agent-General, but it will be somewhat difficult to find an equally good man to succeed him as Minister and leader in the Legislative Council. It is also announced that the Government Geologist has just returned from the goldfields. He reports that the possibilities of deep alluvial mining are very great, and that there is abundance of promisingly rich unoccupied ground outside leases available for alluvial workers. Once again a strong attack has been made on the London and Globe Finance group, and the raid was accompanied by false rumours to the effect that the Marquis of Dufferin had resigned the chairmanship, not only of the London and Globe, but also of the British America Corporation. These reports may do credit to the ingenuity and unscrupulousness of the "Bears," but they were absolute lies, and no one was more surprised at the rumour so unblushingly set about than Lord Dufferin himself, who happened to be at the London and Globe offices when the report reached there. Of course, it was at once contradicted, but even when a lie does not get a start, as in this case, it is sometimes believed by the public. I have, however, the fullest authority for giving this untruth a complete contradiction. During the past week conferences have been held between the Directors and committees of shareholders of the various sub-companies of the London and Globe Finance Corporation, which are to be amalgamated, and the authorities of the parent Company, and, with few exceptions, I believe that the information vouchsafed, which was complete in every respect, was favourably received. It remains now for the shareholders to receive the report of their Directors and of the members of their committees at Wednesday's and Friday's meetings, and to act thereon. The matter is, of course, entirely in their hands, but it strikes the impartial observer that, as reconstruction is the only alternative, it would be distinctly to the advantage of the shareholders in the sub-companies to join this larger exploration Company. It seems to me quite a wrong view to take to resent the offer of one share in the new undertaking for every two of the shares in the various sub-companies, as it is probable that the new shares will rise to a considerable premium, if, as may be expected, the new corporation shares in profitable undertakings, such as have produced such large sums for the shareholders of the London and Globe Finance Corporation. Lake View Consols, after a firming-up, have been depressed to 9¾; but the news from the mine is very satisfactory, it being reported that the 300-ft. level is opening up splendidly. The south drive is stated to be in ore ranging from 5 to 15 oz. per ton, and the north drive averages from 1 to 3 oz., the lode being about 10 ft. wide. Ivanhoe shares have been pretty firm on favourable advices from the property, being quoted 6¼. Sensational developments are reported from the Great Boulder Proprietary at the 300 ft. level, although the shares are not much better at 22s. 9d. The Great Boulder Main Reef seems to be distinguishing itself chiefly by striking big flows of water. The West Australian Goldfields group has shown dulness, the shares in the parent company being quoted 2, while Hampton Plains stand at $\frac{15}{16}$. Dulness has also prevailed in the London and West Australian Exploration group, the parent Company's shares being quoted $\frac{15}{16}$, while Hannan's Brownhill, after rising to 8⅛, have reacted to 7¾. Sons of Gwalia shares are, however, firm at 2⅛, and the news from the mine continues satisfactory. The London and West Australian Exploration Company, Limited, have received information by this week's mail, according to which the Company has located five leases near the "Sons of Gwalia," in addition to the "Gwalia No. 1 South" and the "Edward Hooper." A sample taken from the latter is understood to have shown 19 dwt. of gold per ton by fire assay. With regard to the Waroonga Lease (Lawlers) of this Company, it is stated that in the North Drive from Ogilvie's Shaft the face shows 18 in. of rubbly formation, worth about 1 oz. per ton, and that the reef in the leading stope north of the shaft is 10 in. wide and worth about 2 oz. per ton. The Venture Corporation are about to send another diamond drill plant to Western Australia, the excellent work done by the one already out there on the Crœsus Consols having induced them to also test by the same means at depth some of their other properties in the Coolgardie district owned by the Corporation. Lady Shenton shares, after receding to 2⅞ on profit-taking, have advanced sharply to 3⅜, and it is expected that these, as well as Florence shares, will reach much higher prices. Very favourable advices are being received with regard to both properties. An excellent crushing of 552 tons for 1,518 oz. of gold has just been cabled over, making a total of 7,143 tons crushed for 25,145 oz. It should also be remembered, with regard to these and other mines in the Menzies district, that the new railway to Menzies is to be opened this week, and that this will save many thousands of pounds to the various mining Companies. The rest of the West Australian department has been very dull, and declines have occurred in Kalgurli, South Kalgurli, Hannan's Crœsus, Central Boulder, Hannan's Oroya, Londonderry, Peak Hill Goldfields, Hannan's Proprietary, Golden Links, and many others. There are, however, those closely connected with this market who anticipate a fresh improvement during the new account, always provided that political developments are not very unfavourable.

Indian, Australasian, and British Columbian Mines.

In view of the weakness of other sections it was not likely that the Indian department should show strength. In fact, the tone was weak, and business was altogether inactive. Mysore Gold, Coromandel, and Ooregum are all lower; and the only improvements have occurred in Mysore Wynaad and Mysore West. In Australian mines, other than West Australian, Mount Lyell are scarcely altered at 13⅞, while Mount Lyell North are quoted 3⅜. New Australian Broken Hill Consols have taken a jump to 3s. 6d., on the news that a rich silver deposit had been struck. It will be remembered that in its earlier history, and before reconstruction, this Company's shares rose to 2½, and remained at that price, while a rich silver deposit was being worked. Finally, the rich ore pinched out, and it was discovered that the mine was very patchy, and it remains to be seen, therefore, how long the newly-struck patch will last. Aladdin's Lamp have eased off to 1⅝. In Charters Towers shares, Brilliant and St. George United and Day Dawn Block have given way. In the New Zealand division, general weakness has prevailed, and declines were marked in Taitapu Estates, Consolidated Goldfields of New Zealand, Waihi Silverton, Kauri Freehold, and Kapanga. Amongst British Columbian shares there has been a little more doing, but prices have not improved. London and British Columbian Goldfields and British Columbian Development are lower, and there has also been a setback in Klondike North-Western Territories. The "Bear" raid on London and Globe Finance shares was accompanied by an attack on British America Corporation shares, which have receded to 1s. 9d. premium, but from all I can gather there is no reason for this relapse, and a circular will shortly be issued explaining the undoubtedly promising position of this Company. The objection has been urged that this Company has abandoned some of the options which it held. It is obvious that one must not mention names in connection with such matters, as this might interfere with negotiations in progress, but I happen to know that in connection with one important property the fact that the option was abandoned resulted in the undertaking being offered to the Corporation at a very much lower figure. One thing should not be forgotten, viz., that this Corporation has the largest cash capital of any British Columbian Finance Company, and that with careful sifting of the options it owns and of those that have since been offered to it, it should be in the position of acquiring the best selection of properties. In the general foreign section improvements are marked in Frontino and Bolivia, Alamilos, and Burma Ruby. Copper shares have been generally firm under the lead of Rio Tinto, and Mexican mining shares have been steady. Utah shares have experienced a revival, the price having recovered to 2¾.

New Enterprises and Issues

The prospectuses of the following new enterprises and issues have been placed before the public during the week:—

Albion (The Burton-on-Trent) Brewery, Limited.—This is an issue of £110,000 Four per Cent. Perpetual "A" Mortgage stock at par in sums of not less than £50, in multiples of £1. The interest will be payable half-yearly. The Company was formed in 1896 to acquire the Albion Brewery, Burton-on-Trent, with the licensed houses and other properties attached thereto, the share capital being fixed at £140,000 in shares of £10 each, all of which were taken by the vendors, except eighty-seven shares.

The Klondike Hydraulic, Limited.—With a capital of £310,000 in shares of £1 each, this Company has been formed to acquire and work three placer claims of 20 acres each in the Klondike district on Bonanza Creek, Alaska, U.S.A.

This is a rather curious issue. The prospectus does not contain a single expert opinion on the value of the property. The whole information is vouchsafed by the vendor who states that there is already £46,000 worth of gold dust awaiting shipment and another £20,000 on the dump, yet he is willing to take the purchase consideration as to £6,000 in cash and the rest in shares. This is too generous!

The Schibaieff Petroleum Company, Limited.—This Company is formed with a share capital of £750,000 in 75,000 Six per Cent. Cumulative Preference shares of £5 each, and 375,000 Ordinary shares of £1 each, for the purpose of acquiring the entire interest and assets of the petroleum business carried on at Baku, Moscow, and elsewhere, by the Russian private limited liability company, known as Messrs. S. M. Schibaieff & Co., Limited, and carried on since 1884.

The "Era" Incandescent Oil Lamp Company, Limited.—This Company has been formed for the purpose of acquiring the British, foreign, and colonial letters-patent for Graetz's incandescent oil lamp. The capital is fixed at £60,000 in £1 shares.

There is but little future for oil lamp improvements in view of the dangers attending the use of oil, and the prospectus does not state that the new burner is absolutely safe. No lamp is likely to be a success in the future unless it is so.

The Premier Trawling and Fish Carrying Company, Limited.—With a capital of £200,000, divided into Cumulative Preference and Ordinary shares of £1 each, and a Four and a half per Cent. Debenture stock of £150,000, this Company is formed to acquire as a going concern, develop, and carry on, the business of steam trawler owners, &c., now carried on by Richard Simpson & Co., Limited, of Hull.

This Company is formed to take over the business of an existing one. It would be as well to know the reason of the change and what profit has been made out of the deal. Unless these questions are satisfactorily answered, this venture should be left alone.

J. Edwards & Co. and their Operations.

I have ere this had occasion to refer to the touting circulars of J. Edwards & Co., who style themselves stock and share brokers, of Talbot House, Arundel-street, W.C. They have boasted of many profits, but I have never come across anyone who actually received the same. This kind of gentry generally distribute circulars in which they talk of enormous profits having been obtained for their clients in previous deals, and on the strength of these allurements they endeavour to obtain subscriptions to further operations. I happen to have in my possession some information with reference to the latest transactions of J. Edwards & Co., which causes me to specially warn my readers against entrusting any money to them. A reader of Truth, who noticed my remarks with reference to this firm in last week's issue, has just given me his experience with J. Edwards & Co. In the beginning of January he sent them a £5 subscription to an operation in Louisville and Nashville, and on the 8th inst. he received back £6 5s., or what they called a 25 per cent. profit. They at the same time forwarded a circular inviting participation in another operation, which was to take place in Caledonian Deferred Ordinary. Encouraged by the small profit which he had made in the Louisville deal, my correspondent forwarded £5 towards the Caledonian operation, and on the 17th inst. received the following communication:—

Tudor House, Arundel-street,
London, W.C., February 16, 1898.

We regret to have to inform you that the workings of the operation in Caledonian Deferred Stock opened on February 9, 1898, have proved so unfortunate as to involve the total loss of the cover subscribed.—With much regrets, yours faithfully,
J. Edwards & Co.

For the benefit of other readers of Truth, who may, notwithstanding my continued warnings against syndicate-touts, still be inclined to embark their money with them, I herewith give publicity to this experience of a reader of Truth, who, in view of my repeated warnings, ought to have known much better than to support the "operations" of J. Edwards & Co. Is it necessary to again repeat that the syndicate-touts sometimes allow their subscribers to win once, only in order to fleece them more effectually in subsequent transactions.

My Letter Box.

The following are replies to inquiries from various correspondents:—

Government, &c., Bonds.

L. O.—There seems to be a fair prospect of Uruguay bonds rising further. No reason to sell Argentine Funding bonds after the fall. F. B.—If you will forward a stamped addressed envelope, I will send you what you require in same.

Banks, Trusts, and Financial.

C. W., Ventnor.—What you require has been forwarded in your envelope. Oxonian.—The directors undoubtedly have the power to make a call, but, as the general meeting will shortly take place, you should be able to resist the payment of same until then. I quite agree with you that the best plan would be to wind up the concern. Captain, Cornwall.—It seems to me that your best plan would be to invest in Colonial Government bonds, which yield at present about 3 per cent., unless you go so far as to invest in Home Industrial debentures, including brewery debentures, in which you can obtain from 4 to 5 per cent. Correspondent, Leamington.—No; I do not consider that this Company is a swindle, although it is inadvisable to go into such an undertaking without possessing the necessary funds. It certainly is not a concern to put your savings in. I do not see how I can help you. Jumper.—In your position you ought not to expect more than 2¾ per cent., which you can obtain in Brighton Corporation 3½ cent. stock, and Tunbridge Wells Corporation 3 per cent. stock. Dora, R. S. V. C.—The banks in which you are interested are all high-class, and there is no reason for anxiety. But as you seem to be afraid of the uncalled liability, you will no doubt get an opportunity of selling out at a good price in the course of the present year. It will then be time enough to give you a list of industrial debentures in which to place the money. There is no reason for hurrying out of the bank shares. Constant Reader, Cambridge.—The present quotation of this Australian debenture stock is 105·7, but it is not a security which I am inclined to recommend. G. I. B.—I cannot trace this concern. It has evidently passed into the haven of liquidation. S. C., Rochdale.—Have nothing to do with the outside brokers in question.

Home Rails.

Demos.—When the Great Central extension to London is open for traffic, and the Three per Cent. Guarantee therefore expires, the stock will be dependent upon the earnings for its dividend. You may as well hold the other stock. Linotypes are quite high enough. C. F.—I do not see any reason for selling your Home Rails Nos. 1 to 7 now, but you should do so on an advance. X. X.—The future of the line entirely depends upon the question as to what profit the new extension to London will yield. When the Midland was in the same position, an extraordinary change for the better took place, and there is every reason to think that history will repeat itself; but it is quite impossible to give actual estimates. There is no doubt that the line will take a good deal of traffic away from the existing companies—notably from the Great Northern and Midland—but it is not possible to give figures. Medicus, Glasgow.—Yes, I think that these stocks are suitable for you.

American and Foreign Rails.

H. B.—Obviously, there are not the same possibilities for Mexican Central Four per Cent. Gold bonds (as these cannot get more than the fixed rate of interest) as for the more speculative Mexican Railway First Prefs., although the price of the latter is also too high. The low price of silver is against both stocks. James.—This certainly is a gambling transaction, and I really cannot gather from your statement how you stand in the matter. An Old Reader of Truth.—There is no fresh information with reference to the Wabash. Northern.—You might put the money into Erie Prefs., Southern Prefs., and Union Pacifics, all of which are expected to rise considerably higher. Cecil.—1. Yes, of course, respectable bankers are. 2. There is no reason why you should not clear the profit, and make the re-investment, especially as you can now get Reading Fours at something like 89. 3. You might as well wait with these for a further advance. H. J. G.—1. It might be advisable to hold for some time. 2. There is every prospect of a good dividend. Pat.—Yes. Heavy Loser.—There is every prospect of Norfolk and Western Prefs. and Common rising to a much higher level. T. M. R.—It is quite correct that Mexican Central First Mortgage Gold bonds are well worth the present quotation, but you must not forget that the low price of silver affects the earnings very considerably.

Mining Shares.

Madeline G.—1. I do not see how you can resist payment of the call; I do not think much of the Company. 2. No doubt they will proceed against you if you do not pay up. Mechanic.—You should hold these shares now on the chance of an improvement. A Victim (D.G.).—You seem to place mining companies in the same category as Consols. I think that the scheme in question is the best solution of the difficulty. Scrutator.—I am inclined to be extremely suspicious with regard to this Klondike Company, and am afraid that you will lose your money. I have warned my readers quite sufficiently against wild-cat Klondike concerns. Sea Gull.—This is not the time to sell mining shares. The market is very flat, and there is nothing for it but to await a recovery. Z. A.—1. Yes, you had better hold May Consolidated now. 2. I do not advise a purchase. 3. North Mount Lyell shares are quite high enough. 4. No, silver is too much depreciated. Kerneguy.—This mine is not doing well, and I certainly do not advise a purchase. Grass.—You should hold Lake View Consols for a recovery. I am glad to hear that you did so well in Lady Shentons on my advice, and London and Globes are a good purchase. J. B. A. S.—I cannot possibly mix myself up with your dealings with the secretary of this Company, and have returned the whole of the documents to you. You must take your own course. W. S. S. X.—I have never recommended Light of Asia Amalgamated, and have but a poor opinion of the same. You must take your own decision in this matter. A. S. B.—The mine is believed to contain payable ore, but I should not like to express a definite opinion. Spec.—A fair mining risk, but I would not advise a purchase yet. Mercator.—Your mining shares Nos. 1 to 8 should be held, and you might buy more to average of Nos. 1, 2, and 6 (Randfontein). Lady Shentons are a good purchase. Yelvertoft.—You got very high into the mining shares Nos. 1 to 20, but this is not the time to sell. You should await a recovery in the Mining Market, which is at present unduly depressed. Scot.—1. I mentioned last week the reason for the rise in Northern Territories. 2. Possibly. 3. Impossible to tell. 4. No. J. H. P.—There is no definite news with reference to this property, and pending further developments, I should advise you to wait. I cannot reply by letter. J. P.—I still hold the same opinion, and if the scheme goes through there will probably be an important improvement all round. W. M.—Some delay in increasing the output of the Lake View Consols has occurred through the old battery of twenty stamps breaking down. I have already stated the position in last week's issue. You will remember that I advised sale when the shares reached 12. Suspec.—1. I think that Golden Links have been overrated by the market. 2. Yes. 3. Write to the secretary for information. Anxious Martha.—There is every prospect of the shares Nos. 1 to 3 improving, when you should take your profit. Houldsworth.—I would not sell the South African mining shares at present. The market is exceptionally depressed, and the shares should be held for a recovery. To go now promiscuously into British Columbian ventures might be jumping from the frying-pan into the fire. Bernard.—Of course, you will have nothing to do with these Birmingham people, who offer 2½ per cent. dividends a week. It is quite clear that no one can afford to pay interest at the rate of 130 per cent. per annum, and this must therefore be a swindle. 1. No; I do not recommend a purchase of these mining shares. 2. Leave these alone. 3. I do not like this mine. Pat-a-Cake.—There is nothing for it but to await the results of the meetings of shareholders. If they decide to fall in with the matter, you may safely do so also. 2. Probably. T.—1. I have nothing to add to the remarks on this amalgamation scheme under "Golden West Australia." 2. It is quite correct that an independent and exhaustive report has been obtained from Dr. Krause on the Woodstock Transvaal, which is very satisfactory. 3. Not as far as I know. Onudrans.—1. Because prospects are good. It is expected from week to week that valuable reefs will be discovered by the prospectors, who are now in large numbers on these properties. 2. Yes. 3. Not promising. 4. Yes. 5. I should not like to express an opinion. Yak.—I do not propose to give this address unless I can convince myself of the bona-fides of this person, which I doubt very much at present. I am afraid that prospects of Nos. 1 and 2 are not good. You should certainly hold Nos. 3-6. I am glad you did well in Lady Shenton, London and Globe, and Lake View on my advice. Rover.—1. This Diamond mine is very promising. 2. Not doing well just now. 3. Yes, a dividend was announced on December 31. O. K.—See remarks under "Golden West Australia." Inquirer, Burnley.—You got too high into Golden Horseshoe, but after the decline you had, perhaps, better hold. Bey.—Very favourable news has been received from the White Feather Reward, as mentioned under "Golden West Australia."

Industrial Shares.

Captain, Somerset.—1. No reason to sell this brewery stock. 2. The electric shares "A" appear to be quite high enough, and cable property like "B" is not progressive, neither is "C" a good purchase. E.T., Reading.—1. Very speculative, and not suitable for permanent investment. 2. Not at present. 3. Highly speculative; I do not advise the investment. Oakhurst.—The brewery shares Nos. 1 to 3 have been very disappointing, but you should await a recovery before selling. The debentures No. 4 should come all right. Nos. 5 to 7 are doing fairly well, and the American Gold bonds No. 8 are improving. No. 9 is a fair investment. Mona.—I meant to imply that you should sell as soon as ever you can get out at a small profit, as there is now too much competition in this kind of business. Trutta.—I have always warned my readers against United Alkali shares, and I still hold the same opinion. You may take your own course. Oakroyd.—The first-named shares seem to be at present on the down-grade, but it would perhaps be advisable to hold for a recovery and then sell. I do not recommend a purchase of electric shares.

Mixed Investments.

Mother.—No option but to hold your shares Nos. 1 to 4 and No. 6 for an improvement. No 5, however, are quite high enough. As regards the further investment, would you like to put the money into Home Industrial debentures, yielding from 4 to 4½ per cent? If so, I will give you the names of such. Dan.—This is not the time to sell South African mining shares like Nos. 1-8. Await a recovery. Hold also Nos. 9 and 10. M. T.—No option but to hold the mining shares Nos. 1-13. Florence (14) are likely to go much higher. I don't think well of No. 15. Acorn.—I don't think much of the two stocks mentioned by you. Brighton "A" would yield you 3⅞ per cent., and you might add Home Industrial debentures yielding from 4 to 4¼ per cent. Vixen.—1. I should not recommend the investment. 2. Yes. 3. No, leave these cycle shares alone. 4. Yes. 5. Meyer & Charlton are preferable of the two. 6. I do not like them. B. S.—I. No, I do not recommend purchase of Great Central Deferred, but of Great Central 1894 Ordinary. II. Yes. III. Yes. IV. In time these should improve. C. F., Penzance.—Yes, I think the time is favourable for buying good South African gold shares. 2. Norfolk and Western Prefs. and Northern Pacific Prefs. 3. The brokers. J. R. X.—1. Yes, Union Pacific shares are a good purchase and there is no further liability on them, an assessment of $15 having recently been paid. 2. No. 3. Probably. E. A. K. C.—1. Better hold for the present. 2. I do not like these Patent Medicine shares. Retram.—1. A fair speculation. 2. Yes. 3. I do not recommend Cuddingwarra. Holywell.—1. You should not hold Threads long. 2. When Central Argentine rose to 88 the other day, this would have been a good time to sell. At present they have declined to 81½. 3. Florence Gold Mining shares. 4. This is a speculative investment. 5. As a matter of principle I cannot recommend individual stockbrokers. I cannot reply by letter.

Various Investments.

Money at one time eased off, but repayments of loans to the Bank of England have again caused rates to stiffen, and three months' bank bills are not quoted below 2¾ per cent. There are, however, indications of coming greater ease, as some of the Government funds will be released in the near future, while the Bank is likely to obtain the bulk of the gold which will arrive shortly. Notwithstanding ever-recurring rumours that the Chinese loan has been concluded by the British Government, nothing definite is known yet, and some of my contemporaries are evidently drawing upon their imagination. In the meantime, the Chinese loans have not escaped the effect of the political scares, although closing firmer at the last, and the Seven per Cent. Silver Loan is quoted 101, the Six per Cent. Gold Loan 106. Japanese bonds are about unchanged at 102. The Far Eastern question is not, however, troubling the stock markets, neither has the disaster to the Maine affected high-class investments to any extent, and the best proof that there is not much in the West African scare is the fact that Consols have only dropped $\frac{3}{8}$ on the recent rumours, the quotation for the account being $112\frac{3}{8}$. British Corporation stocks have been steady, but Colonial Government bonds are somewhat easier, more especially Canadian issues, which are about a point lower. Some of the new Colonial loans are easier, the new Cape of Good Hope loan having declined to $2\frac{1}{2}$ premium, the new West Australian loan to $1\frac{1}{2}$ premium, while the last New South Wales loan is still quoted $1\frac{1}{8}$ premium. Silver has lost over a point at $25\frac{3}{4}$d., but Rupee Paper at $63\frac{5}{8}$ shows hardly any change. In the Cycle section general weakness has prevailed, although there have not been wanting a few recoveries. Humber Ordinary have improved 1s. 8d. to 14s., while the Extensions have hardened to 8s. Cycle Components are lower at $2\frac{1}{4}$, and Swifts remain at $\frac{3}{4}$, Singers at 13s. 3d., Amalgamated Tyres have eased off 9d. to 5s., and Dunlop Deferred are quoted 14s. 6d., the Ordinary 18s., French Dunlops 5s. In the Industrial department a partial collapse has occurred in the highly speculative stocks, this being in accordance with my anticipation. Allsopp Ordinary have dropped 7 to 160, and Bovril Deferred have been a feature of weakness at about 12s., while Schweppe Deferred have given way to $\frac{5}{8}$. Harrod's Stores have shown dulness at $4\frac{3}{4}$. Welsbach Incandescent Ordinary, after declining, have rallied to 120, the Prefs. being quoted 102, the Deferred shares 22s. One of the weakest shares in this market has been Hudson Bays, which have fallen to $21\frac{1}{2}$, the various reports concerning the discoveries of gold on the Company's territories having proved altogether exaggerated. When the Salt Union was first launched I warned my readers that this attempt at the creation of a monopoly could not possibly succeed on the lines on which it was conceived. Those who followed my advice to leave the concern alone, and those who heeded my subsequent warnings to the same effect, may well congratulate themselves, as the £10 Ordinary shares have fallen to $1\frac{5}{8}$, and the £10 Seven per Cent. Preference shares to 6, on the announcement of a dividend of only $1\frac{1}{4}$ per cent. on the Prefs., against the market estimate of about 6 per cent. Thus things are going from bad to worse, and I am not surprised that the committee of investigation which has been appointed are recommending a change in the management. Whether a removal of the head offices from London to Liverpool will do the trick remains of course to be seen, but I am strongly of opinion that the Company will never achieve prosperity, and that in any case the Board should be thoroughly reconstructed. An undertaking of a very different kind is that of Maple & Co., Limited, which, under very able management, is achieving great prosperity. The net profit earned in 1897, after providing for interest on Debentures and Preference shares, and after placing a sum of £53,875 to reserve, enables the Directors to recommend the payment of a further dividend of $10\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. on the Ordinary share capital, making, with the interim dividend of 5 per cent., a total distribution of $15\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. for the year. In addition to this dividend a bonus of 10s. per share is paid out of the reserve fund, the amount thus distributed being £250,000. A new issue of 250,000 shares is offered to the shareholders at the rate of one share for every two now held, and these shares will no doubt be promptly taken up, the Prefs. being quoted $1\frac{5}{8}$, the Ordinary $4\frac{1}{8}$. A new prophet has arisen amongst the syndicate-touts, a firm trading under the name of Germayne, Hardy, & Co., of Dominion House, 110, Fenchurch-street, London, E.C., being engaged in distributing circulars broadcast over the country, in which they invite participation in their "special combinations for conservative investors." According to the scheme propounded by these people, the subscribers have to agree to the operation being left to the best judgment of Germayne, Hardy, & Co., both as to buying and selling, so that any one signing their special order forms binds himself hand and foot. The usual boasts of big profits are made, the total distribution for 1896 being stated as 78 per cent., and that for 1897 at 94 per cent. Is it necessary to again point out that this is all bunkum, and that these blind pools should be avoided like the pest? It is strange, to say the least of it, that notwithstanding the severe sentences passed upon a number of syndicate-touts, others should enter upon a similar business.—Your affectionate Uncle,

MOSES.

QUEER STORY.

PAID IN FULL.

On all the long, lonely road stretching away to the skyline, and glaring white under the scorching sun of an afternoon in late July, there was but one moving object, a slightly-built lad of seventeen, or thereabouts, who toiled slowly on with drooping head and feeble, uncertain steps. The dust lay thick upon his clothing, and formed a black crust about his parched lips and the corners of his eyes. There was no shade to be found anywhere. No grateful hedge of green, no sheltering wall, bordered the moorland road, which ran straight over the wolds, turning aside for no obstacle, in the uncompromising manner of its original makers, the grim old Romans.

The boy had walked twelve miles that day, without tasting a morsel of food, and the small remnant of his strength was fast deserting him. Had there been any wished-for goal in front, the indication of a house, or even a tree, he might have struggled on a little longer; but before, as well as behind, lay the dreary blankness of the far-spreading moors, a vast expanse of dull, depressing brown, unrelieved by a single spot of colour. With a despairing cry he flung himself face downwards on the parched grass by the wayside.

"Might as well die and ha' done with it!" he groaned.

Bob Carley, poor lad, had suffered a most cruel and unexpected reverse of fortune. But a short month ago he was one of the happiest youngsters at Newmarket, clever at his work, trusted by his master, and bidding fair to reach a high place in his profession; now he was homeless, friendless, penniless. And yet no crime, or even neglect, had been laid to Bob's charge; his misfortunes were wholly unmerited. He had been given the mount on one of his employer's horses in a certain race, with strict injunctions not to win, as the animal was only "out for an airing;" and he had been unfortunate enough to pass the post first—that was all. He had followed his instructions to the letter, and had his horse well in hand at the distance, when some malicious rider in his rear gave the animal a stinging cut with his whip. The wilful thoroughbred shot out instantly, and, in spite of all Bob's efforts, won the race in a canter. There was no preventing the unlucky victory, unless by deliberately pulling the horse before the eyes of the stewards, which would have been fatal to the young jockey's prospects.

But, unfortunately, he had to pay the penalty. His master stormed and raved, and, notwithstanding his vehement and tearful protestations of innocence, discharged him on the spot. Bob, of course, was supposed to have ridden the race to suit his own book; and there were not wanting calumniators to say that he had made a good thing out of it. At all events, no trainer at headquarters would look at him afterwards, and the poor fellow left Newmarket on a hopeless quest for employment.

After many a fruitless tramp, he made his way to Newcastle for the summer meeting, with the lingering hope that some North-country trainer might be found to give him a job. But Bob's luck, as he put it to himself was dead out, and he failed to obtain even the humblest situation. With the recklessness of despair he risked his last few shillings on the Northumberland Plate, and lost them. Then there was nothing for it but to face the long two hundred miles that lay between him and the south, where he might possibly find a friend or two. Bob never cares to dwell much upon this portion of his experiences; he says he wouldn't wish his worst enemy such a time. It was on the third day after leaving Newcastle that he found himself upon the Yorkshire moors, where he believed his young life was to have an untimely ending.

Half an hour passed by, seeming an age to the luckless wayfarer, prey to the twin fiends of thirst and hunger, when the familiar sound of hoofs fell upon his ear, and he was aware of a horse cantering briskly on the turf by the wayside. The rider was at the opposite side of the road, and Bob never raised his head. It hadn't occurred to him to beg, and the tears of weakness and distress had been dropping from his eyes, so he kept his hands over his face.

But the horse was pulled up close to him, and a sweet voice, full of kindly solicitude, was heard to ask:

"What is the matter?"

Raising his head, Bob beheld what he always maintained to be the nearest approach to an angel he was ever likely to see. It was a lovely young lady, whose eyes, in colour like the summer sky, were bent upon him with a look of heavenly pity. Beneath her low-crowned hat was visible a mass of hair that gleamed in the sunlight like burnished gold; her perfectly-fitting habit revealed the symmetry of a slender, womanly figure, and she sat her horse, a fine slashing chestnut, as one to the manner born.

No wonder the half-starved lad was dazzled by this radiant vision. He staggered to his feet, and stared at the lady in dumb bewilderment.

"You seem in trouble," she said; adding to herself, "Poor boy! he can scarcely stand."

Then Bob recollected himself sufficiently to pull off his cap, and make answer: "I'm just about done up, ma'am—miss."

"You have come a long way?"

"All the way from Newcastle, miss; and I ain't had a bite to eat since yesterday morning."

"Oh, how dreadful!"

The friendly sympathy of the speaker's tones fell upon the lad's bruised and wounded spirit like dew from heaven upon the thirsty earth.

A few questions elicited the main facts of Bob's pitiful story, and the young lady pondered over them for a minute or two. It did not occur to her to cross-question him. Indeed, the tale was told so simply and straightforwardly, and there was such a look of truth in the boy's open brown eyes, that even a more experienced person might have hesitated to doubt him.

"Then you understand the management of horses?" she asked, at last.

"Oh, yes, ma'am," replied Bob, "I've been five years among 'em."

"In that case," she said, "I think I may be able to find some work for you."

She beckoned to the groom who had been riding behind her, and he held the chestnut while she took out a card-case and pencilled something on the back of one of her cards.

"About ten miles from here," she said, "at a place called Hillfield there is a training stable. You must try to make your way there by to-morrow morning; ask for a gentleman named Brookton, and give him this."

Just the least little touch of pink came into the young lady's cheeks as she handed the card to Bob.

"I know he will be there some time to-morrow," she went on, "and you must wait till he comes; I think he will help you. And this may be of use for the present," she smiled, putting some loose silver into his hand. "Down in that hollow to the right there is a village, where you will be able to get something to eat. Can you manage to walk so far? it is not more than a couple of miles."

"Oh, yes, Miss," returned Bob, "you've cheered me up wonderful."

Then he tried to utter some words of thanks, but his heart was too full. His eyes, however, dim with a grateful moisture, spoke eloquently for him, and his benefactress smiled, well pleased.

"Mind you do credit to my recommendation," and nodding kindly, she rode away.

Bob's eyes remained fixed upon her as long as she was in sight, and when she had disappeared over the brow of the hill he said to himself, with intense earnestness:

"If I don't, may I be d—d!"

Bob did'nt mean any harm by a small swear; it was his method of vowing fidelity to his future master.

With renewed life and energy, and a spring in his gait, which an hour ago would have been absolutely impossible for him—such is the magical influence of hope—Bob set out for the village indicated by the beautiful stranger. It was a tiny little place, of a dozen houses or so, but, fortunately, it was able to boast of a small beer-house, where the famished lad was able to obtain some bread and cheese and a mug of home-brewed ale. No food or drink ever tasted so delicious to hungry mortal.

Feeling himself his own man again, he decided on trying to reach Hillfield that evening, as there still remained some hours of daylight. The landlord of the humble hostelry showed him a path over the wolds by which a couple of miles might be saved, and he took to his feet once more. The crisp, springy turf of the moors was a welcome exchange from the hot, dusty road, and Bob marched along bravely, even breaking into a snatch of song now and again.

But when the sun went down, and darkness began to settle over the wide-spreading moorland, the uncomfortable conviction grew upon him that he had lost his way. By this time he should have been near Hillfield, but there was no sign of habitation anywhere about. Clearly, there was nothing for it but camping out, but this was not much of a novelty; and making himself a cosy couch of soft, dry heather, he was soon sound asleep.

He awoke just as day was breaking, and, feeling rather cold and stiff, he set out walking briskly, so as to get his blood into circulation. He had a general idea of the direction in which he had come, and bent his steps towards the opposite point of the compass.

It was not long before he came upon a well-defined path running at right angles to the line he was pursuing, and, turning to the left, a quarter of an hour's sharp walking brought him to the brow of a hill commanding an extensive view.

Some objects moving in the valley beneath caught his eye, and instantly Bob threw himself flat on his face. Three horses, hooded and sheeted, with small boys perched upon their backs, and accompanied by a man on a pony, were cantering along easily, at less than half-a-mile's distance. Bob's experienced eye quickly made them out to be racehorses, and the unusual earliness of the hour—as yet it was only in the grey dawn—convinced him that their business was of a secret nature, most probably a trial. By pure accident he had stumbled upon the Hillfield training ground, and at a particularly interesting moment too.

Bob was possessed of a fair share of common-sense, and he saw that it would by no means improve his prospects of employment to be discovered prying into stable secrets, so he got out of sight with the utmost expedition. A handy gorse-patch offered a convenient screen, and here he ensconced himself in such a position as to be able to see all that was going on, while completely hidden from view.

The man on the pony proceeded towards one end of a level stretch, of rather better than a mile in length, the others moving to the opposite extremity. Arrived here, the lads dismounted, and quickly proceeded to divest the thoroughbreds of their clothing. Having remounted, one of them walked his horse along for about fifty yards, and then set off at full gallop, the others instantly following in his wake.

"He's trying them two," said Bob to himself.

One was a leggy-looking chestnut with a blaze on his face, and four white stockings; the other a dark bay of splendid proportions, looking a racer every inch of him.

"The bay must be giving a lot of weight away," was Bob's comment.

Before half the distance had been covered, the leading horse, whose mission it was to make a pace for the others, was overhauled, and dropped out of the fray. Then a magnificent trial of speed ensued between the two competitors. First one would get his head in front, and then the other, till they came within about a hundred yards of the trainer, as Bob supposed him to be. There the chestnut began to forge ahead, and, in spite of the most strenuous exertions on the part of the rival jockey, won rather easily at last by a couple of lengths.

After a turn or two to get them cool, the clothing was put on again, and the whole cavalcade trotted off towards a big square house at the other side of the valley, which Bob rightly conjectured to be his destination.

He had brought some bread and cheese from the inn, so he made a very tolerable breakfast, afterwards washing his face and hands in a brackish pool. It would be no use to present himself at Hillfield for hours to come, as Mr. Brookton was unlikely to put in an early appearance at the stable; and to while away the time he took out the young lady's card, which he had wrapped carefully in a piece of newspaper, and looked at it for at least the tenth time. It bore the name of "Grace Morland," and on the back was written: "Find some work for the bearer, as a favour to —G."

Bob had to hang about for a considerable time before the gentleman turned up, and another long interval passed before he was able to get to speak to him. Mr. Brookton was a tall, good-looking young man of about five-and-twenty, with a pleasant manner, and a kindly look in his clear grey eyes.

Miss Morland's card proved a sure passport to his consideration, and when Bob had told his story the young gentleman asked a few questions as to his experience and capacity.

"Well, I don't know how Brumby is fixed," he said, "but something shall be found for you, if possible."

Bob looked longingly after the card, which, he noticed, was put carefully away in a pocket book. He would have given a great deal—for him—to be able to retain it.

"I'll bet he's just gone on her," was the lad's simple thought. "And no wonder," he added, with a heavy sigh, for the soft, azure eyes had played havoc with his susceptible heart.

The trainer, a lean, yellow-faced man, with sinister, shifty eyes, cross-questioned the stranger minutely, and at last gave a grudging assent to his being employed as an extra hand, till he saw how he "framed."

Bob, however, was overjoyed to find even a temporary haven, and entered upon his new duties with eager alacrity. Before he had been long at work something occurred that set him thinking deeply. A bay horse was led out for Mr. Brookton's inspection, which Bob at once recognised as the second in that morning's gallop. The appearance and progress of the animal were discussed by the owner and trainer, but not a word was said about the trial that had taken place at daybreak. This seemed passing strange to the lad, and he could not help fancying there was some underhand business afoot.

"I'll lay my life that there Brumby has some game of his own on," was Bob's conclusion, and there and then he made up his mind to be ever on the watch. Perhaps he might be able to discover something of importance to Mr. Brookton, and thus prove his gratitude to Miss Morland.

Bob had not been long at Hillfield before he found out all about that young lady. She was the only child of a wealthy squire of the neighbourhood, and had been engaged to Mr. Brookton for a considerable time. They would have been married before now, so it was said, but for the young man's reverses on the turf. In fact, so seriously had he impaired his property that there was just a possibility of the match being broken off altogether. All Mr. Brookton's hopes, said Bob's informant, were centred in the bay horse, Bronzewing, who was first favourite for the Merepool Cup. His owner had backed him heavily, and, in stable phrase, had gone a "regular raker." The white-legged chestnut, which was also Mr. Brookton's property, was engaged in the same race, but was not supposed to have the ghost of a chance as long as the favourite kept well.

The young gentleman arrived very early one morning, and it was given out that there was to be a trial. Bronzewing and the chestnut, Montrose, together with a third horse to make the running for them, were despatched to the training ground, whither they were shortly followed by Mr. Brookton and Brumby. Greatly to his disgust, the new stable-lad was not allowed to form one of the party, but he consoled himself with the reflection that he had seen it all before.

When they came back Bob noticed that the owner of Bronzewing seemed in excellent spirits, and as the horses were being returned to their boxes he heard him remark to the trainer:

"I don't suppose there will be any good in running Montrose, will there?"

"Oh, I shouldn't say that, sir," returned the trainer. "For one thing, it will open his eyes a bit; and, besides, it might be a great advantage for Bronzewing to have something to make a pace for him."

"Well, I'll think it over," returned Brookton, and the rest of the conversation was inaudible to Bob.

At the first opportunity he asked one of the lads which of the two had won the trial.

"Oh, Bronzewing, easy," was the reply.

Considering what he had himself seen on the previous occasion this was astonishing news to Bob, and now, more than ever, he was convinced there was foul play going on. If things were as they should be, why had the former trial been kept dark? For, although Bob had thrown out several feelers, he had failed utterly to discover anyone who could throw the smallest ray of light upon the transactions at daybreak. At all events, none of the stable-lads would admit any knowledge of the matter; and it was evident that whoever was concerned in it must have been strictly bound to secrecy. Of course, the horses might not have carried the same weights as on the first trial, though that was scarcely likely. Above all, why was Mr. Brookton kept in the dark about the former affair? For that he was ignorant of it Bob felt assured. The whole thing was a mystery.

The lad might have puzzled his brains over the matter for long enough, and been none the wiser, but for a most surprising and unforeseen piece of good luck. A couple of days after the trial, just about breakfast time, a dog-cart was driven into the yard, and a vulgar looking man, considerably over-dressed, got down; calling out in a very pompous way for some one to put his horse up. One of the lads asked Bob to lend a hand, and the horse was taken out of the shafts.

"Who is that?" asked Bob, when the man had gone into the house.

"Don't know him from Adam," was the reply. "Looks a good deal like a bookmaker."

When the animal's wants had been attended to, the other lad went in to breakfast, and Bob was left alone in the yard. He noticed that the window of Brumby's office, which looked out upon the stables, was open, and at that moment he saw the stranger being shown into the room. A sudden impulse took possession of him, and he made up his mind to hear some of the conversation about to take place, let the consequences be what they might. The resolve was not prompted by a very exalted sense of honour, perhaps, but then he was only a poor stable-lad, and he would not have hesitated at a much more questionable act, if he could only do a service to the gracious lady who had, as he fully believed, saved him from death.

Bob walked noisily across to the kitchen door, then turned and crept silently along the wall till he was right under the window, the sill of which was no more than a yard above his head. There was not a soul about, and he could hear every word as plainly as if he were in the room.

Put briefly, the substance of what he learned was this: Brumby had discovered, quite by accident, that Montrose, who had been a very backward two year old, had improved marvellously in the last few months. In the Merepool Cup the handicapper had allotted him the very lenient impost of 6st. 7lb.; while Bronzewing, always a creditable performer, though hitherto an unlucky one, had 8st. to carry. Even with that substantial weight both the trainer and his employer looked upon the race as a good thing for him, and, as Bob had heard, the young gentleman's future practically depended on Bronzewing's victory. In the secret trial Brumby had ascertained, beyond doubt, that Montrose was a good three lengths the better at the weights, and immediately conceived the idea of a splendid coup on his own account. With the assistance of a bookmaking confederate named Moss—the person who was now closeted with him—Montrose had been quietly backed to win a great stake, a matter easy of accomplishment owing to the pronounced favouritism of his stable companion. In addition to this, Moss had been steadily laying against the favourite, and intended launching out further in this direction on the day of the race. Altogether, the precious pair looked forward confidently to making their fortunes over the Merepool Cup, coolly indifferent to the inevitable ruin their villainy must entail upon poor young Brookton. In the public trial Montrose had really carried a stone more than his proper weight, so that his owner was completely hoodwinked. Brumby had no doubt about being able to persuade his employer to run Montrose; for, as he contemptuously remarked to his confederate: "He's such a mug there's no credit in foolin' him."

Having lingered as long as he could venture with safety, Bob stole away, and joined his companions at the breakfast table. But for once his appetite completely failed him. He was in a furious rage against the pair of cold-blooded swindlers, as well as frantic to think how utterly powerless he was to circumvent their abominable plot. If he were to tell Mr. Brookton all he knew, it was almost any odds against his being believed. How could a straight-forward, honourable young gentleman like him credit the existence of such foul treachery? The first thing he would do would be to go and question Brumby, and then, as Bob succinctly put it, "all the fat would be in the fire." Even if Mr. Brookton were to scratch Montrose it would be of no use, for it was scarcely likely a pair of ruffians like Moss and Brumby would let Bronzewing win after having laid against him. No, the matter must be kept quiet—for the present, at all events—and he must set himself unaided to the task of spoiling the "plant." But how?—that was, indeed, a question hard to answer.

Bob racked his brains by day and by night, till he grew quite pale and haggard-looking, but never a plan could he discover worthy of a second thought. As a last resource he had made up his mind to tell all to Mr. Brookton, hoping to convince him by his earnestness and sincerity, when an accident occurred that caused him to defer that proceeding for a while. Montrose was by no means a good-tempered colt, and one morning he lashed out at his stable attendant, breaking a couple of his ribs. The important part of it to Bob was that he was installed in the injured lad's place. The Merepool Cup would be run in a few days, and he knew that he should have to accompany the horse. Thus, chances were afforded him on which he had never reckoned, and, with a slice of luck, he thought he could see his way to putting Messrs. Brumby and Co. "properly in the cart."

The horses were sent to Merepool the day before the race, and stabled at an inn near the course. Bob and Bronzewing's attendant went in the horse-box, and Brumby also travelled by the same train. The accommodation at the small hostelry was limited, and no boxes being available, the thoroughbreds were put up in a two-stalled stable.

In the morning they were taken out for a gallop of the course, and when breakfast was over, and the two lads returned to their charges, Bob felt that the time had come for settling Montrose. He did'nt want to injure the horse, merely to prevent his winning; and what he had in his mind must be done as near to the time of the race as possible. However, he was determined to take advantage of the first convenient opportunity, and leave the result to Providence.

He waited and waited, for hours upon hours as it seemed to him, yet the longed-for chance would not come. Brumby was a fixture in the yard that morning. He walked up and down chewing a straw, or leant against the stable door while he smoked his cigar, and Bob's heart grew sick within him. Of course, it was still open to him to reveal the plot to Mr. Brookton, but that, he considered, would be a poor, tame alternative. What Bob wished for was something much more dramatic. He wanted to have the conspirators assured of their triumph, their hopes of victory excited to the highest possible pitch, and then—retribution.

Shortly after twelve o'clock there came a welcome diversion in the shape of Mr. Brookton. The cheery young fellow had a pleasant word for everybody, and was loud in his praises of Bronzewing's looks.

"He's a perfect picture," he said. "I think he'll show them his heels to-day, Brumby?"

"There's nothing in the race to touch him, sir," returned the trainer, with easy confidence.

"Oh, you lying beast!" muttered Bob, under his breath.

"Well, we must drink to his success," said Brookton. "Come along, Brumby," and he turned into the inn by a side door, followed by the trainer.

"Now or never," thought Bob.

"Got a cig, Jemmy?" he asked his companion.

"Not the ghost of one," was the reply.

"Well, here's a tanner; go and get a packet—there's a shop just round the corner."

"What if the boss should come?" put in Jemmy.

"Oh, he's all right for a quarter of an hour—look sharp!"

The boy ran off, and Bob went into the stable.

When Jemmy returned with the cigarettes a few minutes later there was a look on Bob's face as of a man who had performed an arduous duty to his entire satisfaction.

In the race for the Merepool Cup Montrose was first away, and he led his field a lively dance for about three-quarters of a mile. Then he collapsed suddenly—shut up like a knife, the experts said—and was seen no more in the race.

As he witnessed the shattering of his hopes, a wild-eyed, white-faced man on the trainer's stand was biting his lip through, in the effort to keep back the flood of profanity that was surging to his mouth.

"He's been got at!" he hissed between his clenched teeth, "nobbled, by——."

Then came a roar of "Bronzewing! The favourite wins!"—and that good horse, shooting out with the race in hand, passed the post an easy winner.

"Congratulate you, Brumby," said a brother trainer, clapping him heartily on the back. "You've done the trick this time, old man!"

Brumby shook him off with an angry oath, which made the other stare in surprise, and rushed madly down to the paddock.

He was just in time to see Brookton, his handsome face flushed with delight, leading in the winner. It was a bitter pill for the baffled rogue, but he had to swallow it with the best grace he could muster.

Montrose walked in with the crowd, and as the jockey dismounted Brumby came up to him in a white heat of rage.

"What the —— has happened?" he growled.

The lad scowled back at him.

"Well, it strikes me you ought to know. I should say he's had a bucket of water—that's about the size of it."

"Good Lord!" groaned Brumby, "do you suppose I should go stopping the horse I stood to win a fortune over—eh?"

"Well, then, somebody else has gone and put you properly in the hole," returned the jockey. "And me too, d—n him!" he added ruefully.

Mortlock's (Oxford-st.), Estd. A.D. 1746.—The collection of China and Glass now on view in their Galleries fully maintains the high reputation and pre-eminence enjoyed by "Mortlock's" for the last century and a half, and well repays a visit of inspection.

The lad had backed the presumed good thing for rather more than he could afford, and was inclined to be crusty in consequence.

Brumby was in a quandary. He could not make a fuss over the supposed nobbling without letting in more light on his crooked proceedings than would have been at all prudent. But he strongly suspected Bob. He had never liked the boy, and felt, somehow, that the feeling was mutual.

At the first opportunity he questioned him. "Did you give any water to Montrose this morning?"

And Bob, looking him fairly and squarely in the face, made answer:

"Not a drop."

If Brumby had succeeded in verifying his suspicions, there is no doubt he would have inflicted a signal vengeance upon Bob, but the opportunity was not afforded him. He was completely ruined by his losses, and before many days the bailiffs were in possession of Hillfield, and its tenant had fled.

Bob Carley, however, soon found a new place with Mr. Brookton, who was giving up the turf, but intended forming a small breeding stud. With rare magnanimity he never told his master how he had saved him from being ruined by the victory of his own horse. It was reward enough for him to know that the debt of gratitude owing to his sweet young mistress had been paid in full.

ART NOTES.

THE fact that another collection of Miss Kate Greenaway's delightful drawings of child life is to be seen just now at the Fine Art Society's Galleries serves to remind us how much we owe to this accomplished lady. She has achieved a result which far greater artists than she have, as far as I remember, never accomplished. For Miss Kate Greenaway, be it remembered, has completely revolutionised the dress of the children of this generation. The late Mr. Du Maurier did much to popularize black stockings for a while amongst little girls. The late Sir John Millais, too, to some extent, affected feminine fashion by the costumes he painted in certain of his pictures. Mr. Marcus Stone, Mr. George Leslie, and Mr. Luke Fildes have, doubtless, given hints in some of their paintings which milliners and modistes have been glad to avail themselves of; but Miss Kate Greenaway, as I have already said, has done much more than this. She has transformed the costume of our juveniles; she has given her name to an epoch in dressmaking; she has carried the British nursery at the point of her paintbrush. "If you seek for my monument," she might proudly say with Christopher Wren, "look around you!" And if one does look around, be it in the Nurses' Walk in Kensington Gardens, the amphitheatre at Olympia, or the dress circle of Drury Lane during the Pantomime season, one sees Greenawayesque costumes on every side. For Kate Greenaway is still, if I may so put it, the Allah of the nursery, and Liberty is her prophet!

The present Exhibition reveals no new features in her art. It has its limitations as of yore. It is in drawings of children and of child life that she excels, and her work loses much of its charm when it deals with "grown-ups." A frame of drawings, lent by John Ruskin, is included in the exhibits, and serves to recall the fact that the "Sage of Coniston" highly appreciates Miss Greenaway's work.

In another room at the Fine Art Society's, what I may call MacWhirterism is rampant. Mr. J. MacWhirter, R.A., as I scarcely need say, is a very popular artist, but to some of us, at any rate, a roomful of his pictures at a time is rather too much of a good thing. We have learned to expect a fair sprinkling of them at each recurring Academy. We look upon his tempestuous Scotch torrents, his wind-stricken pines and birches, and his storm-swept glens as more or less inevitable; but this "one-man" Show of his comes as a surprise that is not altogether pleasant. It is all explained, however, in a "Prefatory Note" to the catalogue. "The van containing his Academy work has hardly left Mr. MacWhirter's doors," we are assured, "before the cab has driven up which will start him on his journey to foreign parts; Switzerland, the Tyrol, Italy, Sicily, Greece, or Constantinople being his destination, according as the season suggests to him the greatest opportunities for work, and the brightest show of Nature's adornments." This may suggest great indefatigability on the part of Mr. MacWhirter, but I am not at all sure that it proves his complete discretion. Most of us are aware what all work and no play made of the proverbial Jack. Is it not possible that a too persistent attention to business may at last make even a popular Royal Academician a wearisome painter? But there are other interesting confidences in the "Prefatory Note," I have already quoted. "Mr. MacWhirter," we are informed, "has always entertained an ardent passion for the flowers of the field." Of course, as a Scotchman, the "bonny briar rose," and what I believe is known north of the Tweed as "the braw bonny heather," hold a first place in his floral affections, but it is evident from the collection of water-colours he now shows, that when necessary he can make shift with the Alpine pink, the corn-cockle, the anemone, and the gentian. His studies of these and other plants (to quote for the last time the enthusiastic log-roller of the "Prefatory Note") are not only characterised by "crisp freshness," but carry with them "the gladness which accompanies Mr. J. MacWhirter, R.A., when he once more finds himself at work outside the four walls of his studio." It is a sad confession to have to make but I am bound to say that, by the time I had come to Mr. MacWhirter's third study of "anemone and gentian," the effect of these gladness-carrying drawings upon me personally was decidedly a depressing one.

MUSIC.

STARVING THE SUNDAY BANDS.

I HAPPENED last week casually to refer to the ridiculous idea which certain managers of Sunday concerts seem to have formed that the members of the orchestras engaged in Sabbath performances were anxious to play under price. The original excuse for this comfortable notion lay in the plea that Sunday concerts had not then become popular in the strict sense of the term, and also that a considerable number of free seats had, owing to the scandalous state of the law, to be allotted to the general public. The free seats, however, have now dwindled down to the smallest possible number, and those not very readily to be found; while Sunday concerts have become so popular that any further fostering and dry-nursing of them are wholly unnecessary. Yet certain concert-givers seem to labour under the impression that Sunday bandsmen should be paid a good deal less than they usually receive at regular concerts given on week days. I referred to the announcement made by the Liverpool Sunday Society that, owing to the formation of an Orchestral trade-union in Liverpool the bandsmen had demanded an increase of 25 to 33 per cent., so that the orchestral concerts could not be given at all. I have since received some correspondence on this subject. It seems to indicate that the trade-union was not formed at all prematurely.

According to a statement issued by Mr. J. B. Williams, the general secretary of the Amalgamated Musicians Union, the total sum paid by the Liverpool Sunday Society to the orchestra during last year was £280 for twelve concerts, or, in other words, about £23 6s. 8d. per concert. This sum had to be divided among an average number of seventy-five orchestral musicians, who thus received rather less than 6s. 3d. each per concert, that fee also including several rehearsals. Now, the ordinary pay of an orchestral performer at concerts is a guinea, one morning rehearsal being thrown in gratuitously. Why, therefore, orchestral performers should be expected to play on Sundays for 6s. 3d. a head is not at all clear. None but (doubtless conscientious) bigots nowadays object to the giving of high-class concerts on Sundays. But it is altogether another thing to expect working musicians to play on Sundays so ridiculously at under price. If anything Sunday labour should be paid extra. The Amalgamated Musicians' Union mildly asked 10s. 6d. a concert for principals and 7s. 6d. for ripieni. The terms certainly do not seem extravagant, and they decidedly do not warrant the pathetic appeal which the authorities of the Liverpool Sunday Society seem to have issued concerning them. The point of the joke, however, lies in the fact that although the Liverpool orchestra are grudged more than £23 6s. 8d. per concert, a special point was made in a recent programme of the Liverpool Sunday Society that the band of the Grenadier Guards had been brought down to Liverpool for one concert at an expense of nearly £100.

Whether, even from their own wordly point of view, performers in concert orchestras are wise to accept absurdly low prices for Sunday labour is a matter well worth consideration. Cheap Sunday concerts, beyond all doubt, are injuring the more expensive regular week-day orchestral performances of the season. Mr. Robert Newman crowds Queen's Hall on Sundays at cheap prices, but is rarely able to secure a full house on Saturday afternoons, while his Saturday night concerts have been abandoned. And as managers are gradually being compelled to reduce the prices of admission to symphony concerts, the fees of the orchestra must necessarily come down. In London, however, we are not likely yet to arrive at such a point as to consider extortionate a demand for 10s. 6d. per concert for principals and 7s. 6d. for ripieni, rehearsals being thrown in gratis. Not even at Sunday concerts is it probable that we shall drop quite so low as this.

As was generally expected, Mr. Schulz-Curtius has been compelled to organise at Covent Garden an overflow cycle of "Der Ring des Nibelungen." No tickets, as I understand, will be offered to the general public at all. Indeed, the demand for seats for the other two cycles previously announced was so great that Covent Garden will be filled with the overflow. Accordingly an extra cycle has been arranged for in mid June. How far the subscribers to the Royal Opera will appreciate this wholesale invasion of Wagnerism is another matter. As at present arranged no fewer than twelve out of the twenty-six days available in June are to be taken up by the "Ring," while four other Wagner operas are likewise in the programmes. This will not leave much room for anything else. Perhaps, however, after the Covent Garden taste has become sated with this Gargantual food, it may the better appreciate the lighter dishes of France and Italy. Indeed, for the Royal Opera Syndicate to risk wearying the subscribers (the geese with the golden eggs) and to try to shut them out of their own private boxes after four o'clock in the afternoon for the sake of a few rabid extremists who deem six hours of Wagner in the dark to be a sort of terrestrial paradsie, would be to court a very early dissolution.

A lengthy letter has been sent to me by Herr Georg Liebling, the pianist, concerning the circumstances which led to his departure from Germany. It seems that he had a dispute with one of the music critics in Berlin, and technically assaulted the writer, who appealed to the Courts; whereupon Herr Liebling was sentenced to a fortnight's imprisonment. However, the critic, who appears to have somewhat exceeded the bounds of ordinary journalism, himself headed a petition to the Emperor for the remission of the sentence, and this, it seems, the Kaiser, on November 24, consented to do. The whole matter, however, is more or less of personal rather than general interest. What the British public would really like to read is a reprint of the libel in question.

The custom of appealing from the judgment of the critics seems to be growing. I think the movement may be viewed with equanimity. At any rate it does no harm to the critics themselves, and by allowing him to blow off steam it often saves the person criticised from apoplexy or some other accident. The latest composer to rush into print is Mr. Rutland Boughton, whose new Pianoforte Concerto in A Flat was executed—the term is in no sense inapt—at a concert given at St. James's Hall, under the conductorship of a new German chef, on the 1st instant. I happened to say, "The performance was so bad that to venture to express an opinion of the Concerto would be an absurdity." The composer in his pamphlet obligingly admits that he takes no exception to this judgment, holding it to be an honest opinion on the performance. Mr. Boughton, however, prints some very hard things which were said in other papers. For example, the Daily Telegraph declared the production "one of the feeblest apologies for a piano concerto that the critics have ever been asked to listen to," while the Globe considered it "kindest to be silent about this work." The Globe, indeed, seems to have mightily offended the composer, who reminds the writer that, "in addition to the silence of kindness, there is also the silence of ignorance." Mr. Boughton then goes on to tell a story at the expense of the critics. He happened to remark to "the manager of a well-known series of chamber concerts in London" that the analyses of new works were hardly suited, owing to the technicalities with which they bristled, to the knowledge of the average musical amateur. "No, indeed," the manager is alleged to have replied, "The analyses are not intended for our audiences, but for the musical critics who are not present, in order that they may give theoretically correct reports on a work without the trouble of hearing and studying it for themselves." Of course, all this is very damaging. But the only "manager of well-known chamber concerts in London" is Mr. Arthur Chappell. I have not the remotest doubt if that business-like gentleman were asked whether he ever uttered such absurdities what the reply would be. As a matter of fact, Mr. Chappell employs the musical critic of the Daily Telegraph to write the analyses in question.

The Alexandra Palace is to be opened on Good Friday with a performance of the "Messiah," for which a choir is being formed. Musical performances are, I believe, to play a prominent part in the newly-decorated palace, as indeed, they did in the time of Weist Hill. There is, in fact, a quite large enough population in North London to support a properly-designed scheme of this character. But if the patronage of music-lovers from town be desired, an improvement in the railway arrangements is imperative. Those who recollect the Alexandra Palace in the seventies may recall the fact that it was often quicker to get from Charing Cross to Brighton than from Charing Cross to Muswell Hill.

A well-known musician, a member of the "Incorporated Society of Musicians," and a Fellow of the Royal College of Organists, has received the following letter. He remarks—and most people will agree with him—that if this sort of business is countenanced by the Incorporated Society, the sooner he severs his connection with it the better. It is quite possible that the raffle is illegal; it is equally possible that the ladies, enthusiastic in charity as ladies are, may be acting without the authority of the heads of the Society; it is also possible that the ladies may have formed an exaggerated view of the personal vanity of musicians, which may not have sunk so low as to impel them to pay for their signatures and music worked in somebody else's tablecloth. But the sooner the whole trade is stopped the better:—

February 15, 1898.

Dear Sir,—A plan has been started by some ladies of the I.S.M. by which they hope to raise a substantial sum for the orphanage. A tablecloth is being embroidered with the names, degrees, &c., of members and others interested in the society. Any one sending his or her signature, written rather large on a piece of thin paper, can have it worked on the cloth for 1s. Christian name in full, 3d. a word extra. Musical extracts (original preferred), 3d. a bar, one stave; two staves, 6d. a bar. Mottoes and other wording, 3d. a word.

For each shilling sent the sender will receive a number; for 2s. two numbers, and so on.

At the next conference the corresponding numbers to those allotted will be put in a bag, and seven of them drawn out by seven different people. The person holding the duplicate to the seventh number drawn will have the cloth, and the money will go to the orphanage.

Miss S. Lewin, Claremont, Ford Park-road, Plymouth, is acting as secretary, and will be happy to receive money and signatures.—Yours faithfully, JENNIE LANGFORD.

In regard to the "musical extracts," the suggestion "original preferred" strikes me as being particularly sardonic.

I learn that during the winter, Mr. F. H. Cowen has put the finishing touches to a new "Concertstück" for pianoforte and orchestra which he has written at the express desire of M. Paderewski. Nothing has yet been decided as to where or when the piece is to be produced, though if M. Paderewski appears this season in London, perhaps we may hear it. Mr. Cowen will during the summer devote himself to the composition of a new half-programme oratorio on an Old Testament subject.

Mme. Melba, who last week signed her contract for Covent Garden, has been appearing in New York as Rosina, Patti's old part in "Il Barbiere," and also as Marguerite, and as Aïda. In point of fact, when Brünnhilde proved unsuited to her voice she publicly eschewed Wagner, and decided to go in for the Italian florid or melodic school. This, at any rate, will be an agreeable change from the inevitable Wagner, who at one time promised to monopolise the whole repertory. Unfortunately, the older Italian operas do not draw unless some great star appears in them. Whether Mme. Melba will prove so great a star as to compensate for the thinness of the old Italian music will provide an interesting experiment.

There is some talk—but at present it is only talk—of an extra opera season this summer. It seems to have been devised by certain lovers of Italian music and Italian vocalists, and although Drury Lane has been mentioned as a possible locale, nothing has, I know, been definitely decided upon. It is nevertheless strange that the Covent Garden company at present does not contain a solitary Italian singer.

There is also a scheme on foot to send out some of the Covent Garden artists this season to give special performances of operas in certain of the leading provincial cities. No regular Italian opera season in the provinces pays, owing to the extremely heavy expense of salaries and transport. But a single performance of opera with some of the leading Covent Garden vocalists (among whom Mme. Calvé is mentioned) would probably draw one special audience at high prices in such cities as Manchester, Birmingham, and Liverpool.

M. Audran is coming over from Paris on Thursday week in order to conduct the anniversary performance at the Prince of Wales Theatre of "La Poupée." When that successful opera has run its course we are to have a new work from the same pen, the libretto written conjointly by M. Ordonnau and his English adaptor, Mr. Sturgess. At present the opera bears the title of "A Secret Agent," and it will be produced in Paris next month, long, of course, before it is needed in London.

The principal production of the week was Dr. Hubert Parry's "Magnificat," originally heard at the Hereford Festival last September, and now performed for the first time in London. It seems a pity that this noble work was not included in the prospectus of the Albert Hall this year. But the British public have a not altogether unreasonable objection to cantatas in the Latin language, and accordingly the "Magnificat" was knocked out of the Albert Hall prospectus. An excellent performance was, however, given at Queen's Hall on Saturday, when a London audience, like that of Hereford, was able to admire the deeply impressive chorus with violin obbligato, and the wonderfully well-written fugue with which the composition closes. When the canticle was first heard the motto theme was recognised as that utilised by Mendelssohn in "All who have Life and Breath." This, however, proves merely to be the Gregorian intonation associated in the Romish Church with the "Magnificat." Another important performance last week was that of Beethoven's Choral Symphony, under M. Lamoureux. The Queen's Hall Choir were at their best, although, of course, by no means so good as the Leeds Choir who last sang this work at Queen's Hall. M. Lamoureux gave quite a classical reading of the symphony, the tempi, in most cases, being the same as those usually employed in this country. The performance was remarkable for finish, although it lacked the breadth and dignity secured by the German conductors.

Lady Halle made her last appearance at the Popular Concerts on Saturday, when, besides playing a couple of solos, she led Beethoven's "Harp" quartet. She was replaced on Monday by Dr. Joachim, whose solos were three movements from one of Bach's violin suites. At Queen's Hall a by no means interesting fantasia for orchestra by the Russian composer, Moussorgsky, was produced on Saturday. Mr. Hillier has given a violoncello concert, the programme of which contained several pieces from his own pen. Mr. Kordy, a Hungarian violoncellist from the Royal Academy of Music, has likewise given a violoncello performance, and various other concerts to which I cannot further allude have likewise taken place. Indeed, the musical season is now in full swing, and upwards of forty performances are announced for the current week.

At Glasgow last Friday the long-expected opera, entitled "The Poet's Dream," was produced by the Carl Rosa Troupe. This work is an adaptation of Ambroise Thomas's "Midsummer Night's Dream," an extraordinary work in which Queen Elizabeth is supposed to be in love with Shakespeare, who in a drunken fit stumbles into the Thames and is rescued by Sir John Falstaff. So experienced a librettist as Mr. Beatty Kingston was not at all likely to fall into the mistake of putting this farrago of nonsense before the British public. Accordingly he has transferred the whole scene to Spain. In operatic life a Spanish Duchess of Restino in love with the poet Pedro Valdez can be guilty of stupidities which patriotism would deem impossible in a British Queen.

LETTERS ON BOOKS.

MY DEAR MR. WYNDHAM,—American humour threatens to die of its excesses. When everything is exaggerated, exaggeration ceases to amaze or amuse, and when nothing is sacred profanity loses its piquancy. When you have dragged a statue down into the mud, it ceases to be funny to fling mud at it. However, as "Pudd'nhead Wilson's New Calendar" has it, "True irreverence is disrespect for another man's god," and as the American Almighty is presumably the dollar, the Yankee humourist's withers are unwrung by any evangelical protest from our side. By the way, it was only through an unaccountable oversight that I omitted to write to you weeks ago about Mark Twain's "More Tramps Abroad" (1). I think you will be of my opinion that the best things in the book are the "Pudd'nhead Wilson" mottoes for each chapter, though the chapters themselves are close-packed with wit, wisdom, and humour. Sometimes, as I have hinted, the humour is not in the best taste, at least as our taste goes, but always, or nearly always, it is irresistible. Here, for instance, is an unfortunate joke to open the book with :—

Two members of my family elected to go with me, also a carbuncle. The dictionary says a carbuncle is a kind of jewel. Humour is out of place in a dictionary.

Anything dread or disgusting—death, disease, sea-sickness, bimetallism, &c.—are unfit subjects for humour. Jests thereupon remind you of O'Connell's witty description of Sir Robert Peel's smile, "It was like the silver plate on a coffin." Apropos of sombre heads of the State, here is a good story of Mark Twain's first and second meetings with President Grant. At their first interview Mr. Clemens was a negligeable literary quantity, and when the introducing Senator said :—

"Mr. President, may I have the privilege of introducing Mr. Clemens?" the President gave my hand an unsympathetic wag and dropped it. He did not say a word, but just stood. In my trouble I could not think of anything to say; I merely wanted to resign. There was an awkward pause, a dreary pause, a horrible pause. Then I thought of something, and looked up into that unyielding face and said timidly, "Mr. President, I—I am embarrassed. Are you?" His face broke, just a little—a wee glimmer—the momentary flicker of a summer-lightning smile seven years ahead of time; and I was out and gone as soon as it was.

After the lapse of ten years, when Mr. Clemens had "arrived" and was, indeed, the best-known author in America—

Mr. Harrison came over and led me to the General and formally introduced me. Before I could put together the proper remark, General Grant said, "Mr. Clemens, I am not embarrassed. Are you?" and that little seven-year smile twinkled across his face again.

There is not much conscious humour in Mrs. Hodgson Burnett's new novel, "His Grace of Osmonde" (2), but, unconsciously, the rather stilted style she has adopted as that of the days of Marlborough is occasionally humorous. The not very recondite moral wherewith the story closes is clothed in these appropriately Tupperian garments :—

So it befell that one man met his death by chance, and none were punished, and only good grew out of his evil grave. And should there be a power which, for strange high reasons, calls forth helpless souls from peaceful nothingness to relentless life, and judges all life does and leaves undone, 'tis surely safe to trust its honesty and justice.

Why? "Relentless life," ex vi termini, suggests an opposite conclusion; but this kind of affected writing goes always with looseness, and often with insincerity of thought. The story itself is fairly interesting and certainly original, since its heroine commits manslaughter, and makes for it every atonement save that of confession. Her husband learns it only through overhearing a death-bed conversation—a lack of trust in him unworthy at once of the heroine's courage and of the hero's magnanimity. Apropos of Marlborough, I have just been looking through a singularly spirited set of coloured pictures by Caran d'Ache, illustrative of the "Story of Marlborough" (3). The Hon. Miss Wolseley's ingenuity in supplying appropriate letterpress is occasionally taxed, but never overtaxed. There is, for instance, one picture of cows only whose horns soar straight up to heaven, and, but for the Hon. Miss Wolseley, the reader might be misled into supposing some allusion to John Bull, or to the contracts for beef by which the Duke profited, or to the Psalmist's warning against ambition, "Set not up your horn on high." The picture's real relation to Marlborough, however, is this: the Duke's father was a small landed proprietor in Devonshire, a county remarkable for fat cattle. "The flowers that bloom in the spring, tra-la," as they bloom also in Devonshire, might have been no less appropriately introduced. Apropos of finely illustrated books, I can recommend to you a superb serial, "The Architectural Review" (4) a magazine for the artist, archæologist, designer, and craftsman, whose first volume has been contributed to by all the leading men in their respective domains of art; and Messrs. Cassell's admirably written and illustrated "Rivers of Great Britain" (5), a descriptive, historical, and pictorial account of our south and west coast rivers.—Believe me, my dear Mr. Wyndham, ever yours very sincerely,

DESMOND B. O'BRIEN.

GIRLS' GOSSIP.

DEAREST AMY,—Do you ever, when viewing the accumulations of every kind of article in the household, almost wish that some god out of a machine would rid you of them? To find places for an ever-increasing store of articles, more or less fallen away from their first freshness, is difficult and discouraging, especially if one's memory is not good, and the hiding-place of the various impedimenta is occasionally forgotten. To have a defective memory is a constant source of ill-temper, for there is no surer way to feel vexed with others than to feel annoyed with oneself.

What to do with last year's gowns, or rather, those of the year before last, is an annually recurring question, and it is in reviewing the contents of one's wardrobe that the feeling of helplessness in the face of accumulations assails one most strongly. Last year's gowns are passably appropriate to the moment, but the sleeves and skirts of their predecessors tell tales of old. I find that the best plan is to engage the services of a good dressmaker for a few hours' consultation on the matter. Then, with a collection of all the ladies' papers, with their illustrations of the latest designs in bodices and skirts, one can plan out the restoration and conversion of a portion of the garments under review, and settle the destination of the rest.

Never to be without a well-made blue serge is a good rule. Directly the one in wear begins to look in the least degree off colour get a new one. This was the plan adopted by the Aunts Clegg and Poyser two generations since with their indispensable black silks. How they would have despised a serge! And what on earth would they have thought of hop-sacking and house-flannel tweed as materials for the clothing of women who could afford to "walk in silk attire"?

We spent a most fatiguing morning this week in reviewing our forces. The girls turned everything out on their beds, and immediately a feeling of despair came over me, and a longing to get rid of everything old and make a perfectly new start with a kind of trousseau for each of them. You may be sure that I refrained from giving utterance to this idea, for the girls would have been only too delighted to jump at it. And, after all, we arranged for skirts to be shaved more closely down the seams, and braid to be applied to the trimming of them and of the coats to match them. Other gowns of the evening order are to be converted into dainty under-skirts and trimmed with lace and ribbons by our clever little dressmaker. One of these, in cherry-coloured broché, is a triumph, with flounces edged with rows of narrow black velvet ribbon. A pink surah tea-gown, the lace on which had become a trifle crushed, is now, after having been sponged and ironed, the lining of a sweet grey cashmere frock, intended for home wear during the next few weeks. We feel unduly inflated with pride in our economies after all this planning, and I shall be able to tell you, when everything is finished, if we should not have been in pocket by buying new dresses and giving the old ones away. I think it not unlikely. And then all the tiring planning would have been saved. Our "short cuts" take us such a long way round sometimes. Have you not occasionally found it so?

What do your veils cost you a year? And gloves? And do you blow into your gloves every time you take them off? And fold your veils in exactly the same folds each time they are put away? Excuse these very intimate questions, dear. I have been reading an article on economy, and I find all these practices advocated. What a tiring time we should have if we were conscientiously to obey all the promiscuous advice that is so freely répandu throughout the world nowadays! What to have for dinner and how much to give for it jumps out of every newspaper one opens. How to manage one's health and one's teeth, how much to pay the butcher every week, and how far to open one's window on foggy nights, are all laid down most imperatively for us by a host of unseen advisers who may, or may not, be our guardian angels in the guise of ready writers. How fared the world before all this flood of information was poured forth daily for its benefit?

We have been studying the list of peculiarly pronounced proper names given as a new feature in this year's "Who's Who." In addition to such well-known ones as Cholmondeley and Colquhoun, there are scores of others whose pronunciation is opposed to their spelling. Ayscough, for instance, is, orally, Askew, with the accent on the first syllable, Beaulieu is Bewly, and Cromartie Crummarty. Norah, however, takes exception to the pronunciation of Armagh being given as Armar. There is no sound of "r" at the end, she says, but only the long "ah" as in the exclamation. And Claverhouse I always thought was pronounced Claverse, not Clayverse, as given. I think, too, that the terrible name Llangattock should have been included. I believe it is pronounced Thlangatock, with the accent on the last syllable, but Welsh always alarms me, and I never venture on it if I can help it.

"Who's Who" this year celebrates its Jubilee. Mr. Douglas Sladen, the present editor, has introduced many interesting new features and striking improvements; and the book is published in a form at once handy and handsome. The biographies make it a very fascinating work, so different from all its elder and younger brothers and sisters, which are little better than dictionaries in the matter of affording mental pabulum. We have been reading diligently the biographies of the millionaires, possibly with a vague view of learning the art of becoming wealthy.

It interests us to discover their favourite amusements. I had always fancied that a millionaire was quite past amusing himself, and that any pastime that did not mean money would be scorned by such a man. I was quite wrong, however. One millionaire likes fencing, another yachting, &c., though in most cases the biography is silent except as to the large facts in their great lives: viz., how they made their money.

I notice that it is the fashion now in London for dogs to wear their muzzles, pannikin style, under their chins. I often wonder what the dear things think these muzzles are. They have a very funny look, suspended round the necks of the canines, and they must be almost as much in their way as if they occupied the orthodox position. I was amused by seeing a dog sneeze the other day with his muzzle hung below his chin. The shock knocked the wire cage against the ground, and caused it to hit its wearer sharply on the nose, upon which the animal looked quickly round to see who had done it. Perceiving a boy close by, he barked furiously at him, to the boy's amazement. It was a rather farcical incident.

'Tis a true indictment, dear! I wear high heels in muddy weather, and would wear high toes, too, if I could manage to get them. High heels are the only things that keep one out of the horrid, sticky mud. An up-to-date pair of clogs would be a boon, only they would have to be shod with leather, for modern nerves could not stand the rattling noise of the wooden soles.

Last week I was present at the very pretty wedding of Sir James Blyth's third daughter (Gladys) to Mr. Gerald Gold, and afterwards at the reception at 33, Portland-place. The floral decorations, both at the church and at the house, were on a very lavish scale, consisting of magnificent specimens of white roses, lilies, and other flowers, all from the Blythwood gardens in Essex. But I know you will be anxious for me to tell you something about the dresses of the bride and the bridesmaids. The bride, who is a pretty, fair, slight girl, looked charming in a lovely gown of antique Honiton lace, with deep flounces at the sides of sun-pleated chiffon, which was kept in shape by five rows of bouillons of the same soft material; the corsage, with deep collar, was made entirely of the lace, bordered with a multiplicity of tiny tucks and bouillons of chiffon. Similar trimming edged and lined the court train of ivory satin, which was suspended from both shoulders by antique paste buckles.

Mrs. Gold's going-away dress was in the palest of grey, and just the right shade. I can only remember that the skirt was beautifully cut, and that the coat had a huge collar, the back of which was decorated with grey silk scroll and embroidered roses, and the front with a hundred and one tiny frills of lace. The travelling hat was white lisse with black plumes—a mass of prettiness.

The seven bridesmaids were picturesque in soft English satin of an ivory-white tone. The skirts were cut in the newest way and trimmed with four shaped flounces; sashes in shades of green tulle, were tucked and frilled, and fell to the edge of the skirts on the left side from the waist. The bodices were made of pale string-colour guipure and tucks of chiffon. More tiny frills of tulle formed the sweet little white hat all bedecked with rows and rows of baby black velvet, and a peep of green showing among the black plumes. And lastly, the seven bouquets were quite sweet, the "drapery" of them being smilax and some other excellent greenery.

It was a smart wedding as you can imagine, for Sir James Blyth is popular both politically and socially. I saw that Prince and Princess Edward of Saxe-Weimar, the Danish and Chinese Ministers, Sir William and Lady Harcourt, the Speaker and Mrs. Gully, Lord and Lady Charles Beresford, and over four hundred well-known people had accepted Sir James's invitation to his daughter's wedding.

We had heard so much of Mons. Maurice and his wonderful cycling feats on the ice at Brighton and Niagara that on Saturday we turned in to see him. The corridors were crowded with spectators, the skaters having cleared off the glittering sheet of ice, which, for a few seconds before Maurice appeared, looked positively unhappy in its emptiness. The "champion trick-cyclist of France" is a good-looking young fellow of about twenty-five, and it needed no second look at him to discover that he is also an athlete. He did some most remarkable things on his machine, but with such wonderful agility and ease that one was inclined to underrate his skill. He managed in some extraordinary way to balance his bicycle while he crept all over it like a fly, between the wheels, under and over the cross bar, without touching the ice with either hands or feet. He was greatly applauded several times, especially when he rode on one wheel backwards, and forwards with the other raised high in the air.

Frances writes from Brighton:—

Dearest Madge,—The second fancy dress ball at the Brighton Ice Rink came off on Friday last, and proved an even greater success than the first, the decorations being quite as pretty, the dresses better and more original, and the company decidedly smarter. Quite a large party came down from town, including the Duke and Duchess of Devonshire, who came early and stayed till two o'clock, the Marquis of Headfort, the Earl and Countess of Minto, Lord Suffield, Lord Charles Montagu, Lady Alington, Lady John Kennedy, and many others. Lady Minto, in a handsome white satin and fur skating dress, was one of the judges, and distributed the prizes, assisted by Lady Call, prettily dressed as a French modiste (Louis Seize period) in green velvet and striped silk, with large velvet hat, and Sir William Call in a Breton peasant's holiday dress. Miss Call, in a Breton peasant dress of the same period as Lady Call's, was an ideal rustic maiden. Mrs. Walter Winans and Miss Winans were among the lady prize-winners, the first-named wearing a superb Russian Court costume (a very old dress) in green, white, and gold, with a most delightful high-crowned lace hat and fine emeralds and diamonds; while Miss Winans, a tall, handsome girl, in pink silk and white chiffon, with a most becoming pink velvet hat with magnificent plumes, was a pleasing Duchess of Devonshire. The family of Mr. Walter Winans were, indeed, the cynosure of all eyes as they walked round the corridor. Following the eldest daughter were the two small sons, dressed as rough riders of the Guards, their uniforms fitting to perfection, and then came a pair of the sweetest of tiny "Geisha" girls, one in black satin and the other in white, both these dresses being beautifully embroidered, and evidently procured direct from Japan. Among many other striking dresses one of the most unique was worn by Mrs. Ernest Kennedy, who, I suppose, called herself "Sports." The skirt, of white satin, was beautifully painted with landscapes, in which fishing, hunting, and shooting scenes were most realistically depicted. Mrs. Kennedy wore a short red coat, carried a hunting crop in her hand, and had a gun slung across her back, and spurs on her top boots, while a lovely pheasant upon her head crowned a most effective costume. The men's dresses singled out for reward were those of a black poodle, with artistically cut coat and muzzle: a very realistic beggar, of the Rip Van Winkle type, and a Polish Hussar: these winning first, second, and third prizes. The waltzing competition took place after supper, and was most interesting: in this Lady Minto, Lady Coke, Mrs. Kennedy, Miss Lucy Eliot James, Miss Saunders, Mr. Mann, Mr. French Brewster, Mr. Nation, Monsieur Noblemaire, Mr. Pugh, and others took part—nine couples in all, Lady Coke, in a blue and black costume, with Mr. French Brewster as a yellow Pierrot, securing the prize. Dr. Bird and Miss Call acted as judges. Mr. Harry Stiegert, with M. Kurten, gave an exhibition of fancy skating during the supper interval. The whole affair, which was full of go from first to last, was much enjoyed by every one, over 300 being present.

On Sunday afternoon the Prince of Wales, who was staying with Mr. Arthur Sassoon, paid a visit to the Rink. Sunday, you know, is a private members' day, and so, though there was a large attendance, H.R.H. was able to come in freedom and comfort. For his entertainment, M. Maurice, who happened to be in Brighton, gave a clever exhibition of cycling feats and tricks on the ice, and, at the special request of the Prince, Miss Call waltzed with Mr. Harry Stiegert. As I think I have before told you, Miss Call is one of the best and prettiest skaters I have ever seen, and her waltzing is simply perfection, her manner and style being indescribably graceful and charming. I believe the Prince thoroughly enjoyed his first experience of our Brighton Ice Rink and Club.

Clare sends me the following from Dublin:—

Dearest Madge,—Are you weary of the chronicles of the Dublin Castle season and beginning to think that the case is one, if not exactly of "damnable," at least of tiresome reiteration? After all, however, what is life but repetition—the same thing over and over again; risings and settings, beginnings and endings, buttonings and unbuttonings? The same old play and the same old stage, the actors only changing. As regards this eternal monotony, a Viceregal Court has advantages over a Royal one. Those cast for the leading parts change more frequently and more thoroughly, and not in a mournful way. The novelty of entirely new Viceregal families is offered to the Celtic mind—which has an innate appreciation of variety—at comparatively frequent intervals. Since the Queen's Accession to the Throne, no less than twenty different Viceroys have "reigned" at Dublin Castle. There might have been more, too, except that four of them had their reigns, as it were, encored. The student of humanity in a courtly form has had the opportunity of seeing the part of Lord-Lieutenant taken in a variety of ways, and of contrasting and comparing the merits of the different actors. Aunt Maria, with more than forty years' experience of the Viceregal Court, gives the palm to the late Duke of Abercorn, for his first reign, when Marquis of Abercorn. His surroundings were exceptional, too, his daughters so lively, beautiful, and charming.

The second Drawing Room last week was a repetition of the first on a smaller scale. A new batch of visitors formed the now established "house party," which is as much a part of the Viceregal entourage as the Household. The presentations were not numerous; amongst them were Lady Kingston, Lady E. Corry, the Honble. F. Dawnay, presented by her mother, Lady Downe, and Miss Roche, by her mother, Lady Fermoy. Lady Cadogan wore a beautiful white satin train lined with daffodil colour, and trimmed with clusters of feathers of the same tint; her bodice and skirt also white, were beautifully embroidered and trimmed with silver. Lady Kingston was in white, embroidered with silver, with some touches of green. Lady Downe's black train was lined with pale blue; one of her daughters wore blue with pale pink flowers. Lady Mayo was in white, as also were Lady Ormonde's two pretty daughters, and Lady Sarah Wilson.

The latter was on familiar ground in Dublin Castle, where as a child she spent many seasons during the Viceroyalty of her father, the Duke of Marlborough. Another familiar face was that of Lady Lucy Hicks-Beach, who presided over many entertainments in the Chief Secretary's Lodge during her husband's tenure of office in Ireland. By the way, her grandfather, Lord Fortescue, was one of the Viceroys of the Queen's reign, and is famous in the annals of Dublin Castle through his marriage with a Dublin beauty, the daughter of Mr. Geale and widow of Sir M. Somerville. Ladies Huntingdon and Rossmore wore handsome dresses, as did Mrs. Foljambe, Lord Monck's daughter, who was presented on her marriage. The procession through the rooms was more effective than at the first Drawing Room, as the crowd was not so great.

The small dance, following the big dinner, on the next night, was one of the best of the season. The throne-room was not too crowded for dancing, the superfluous woman was not in evidence as at the State Ball, and pretty dresses had an opportunity of displaying themselves, not enjoyed before. Lady Cadogan wore blue and pink. A beautiful dress of embroidered white net over pink satin, edged with narrow flounces, was very effective. Nothing can be nicer than these small dances for those who are at them—you can imagine the heart-burnings of those who are not, and the mistakes that are made about invitations, the old traditional blunders of the officials! Needless to say that with the jobbing system of keeping on at the Castle the members of the Household who should change with each Lord Lieutenant, cliquism is rampant. But perhaps a Court would not be a Court without it. The big dance on Friday night after the small dinner was a pretty one, if not so enjoyable as that of the previous night. All the same people, so far as the very elect went, were there, but in different frocks as regards our sex. What an amount of luggage a visit to the Castle at this season necessitates. Trains and court dress in addition to everything else. One wonders where all the boxes of millinery can be accommodated, the piles of portmanteaux and boxes stacked.

Lady Ashbourne gave another ball on the night of the Levee. On this occasion Lord Cadogan was present with the Viceregal party; on the first occasion he was in England attending a Cabinet Council. This week, being the first of Lent, brings a lull in the entertainments at the Castle; in the next there will be another big ball.—Yours ever,

Clare.

I want you to try some of these recipes. Fillets of soles with lobster farce are a superior and excellent dish:—

Trim the fillets of a pair of soles, coat the inside with the farce, fold them over and place them on a buttered saucepan, dust each one with salt and pepper, sprinkle them with a few drops of lemon juice, moisten them with stock; put a greased paper over, and cook them in the oven for half an hour. Arrange the fillets, resting on each other, in two straight rows down a hot dish, pour some very good white sauce over, and sprinkle each piece of fish with passed lobster coral.

The farce is made thus.—Pound the flesh of a hen lobster until quite smooth, add a large tablespoonful of cold white sauce, 2 oz. of butter, and a teaspoonful of lobster spawn, previously rubbed through a hair sieve with a piece of butter; add a good pinch of cayenne pepper, and a little salt, if necessary; work in two fresh eggs, and rub through a wire sieve.

This is a nice way of working up the remains of cold fish with macaroni:—

The fish should be taken from the bones in as large pieces as possible when it comes from the table. The bones must be stewed with water, herbs, and vegetables to make stock. When the bones have simmered an hour or longer, strain, and reduce the liquor to half a pint, thicken it with a dessertspoonful of flour mixed with 1 oz. of butter, stir it till boiling, season with salt and pepper, and strain into a basin. Meanwhile, 4 oz. of macaroni should be boiled until soft, strained, and cut into inch lengths

A Most Wonderful Package of Crockery. Send your name and address to the Pearson Pottery Co., Hanley, Staffs., and we will forward one of our catalogues of cheap Crockery. pieces. Butter a fire-proof china dish, put a layer of the macaroni in the bottom, sprinkle with grated Parmesan cheese, then add a layer of the pieces of fish, which must be nicely seasoned and covered with some of the sauce; repeat with another layer of the macaroni and fish in the same way as before, making macaroni the last layer, mix 1 oz. of Parmesan with half a teacupful of cream, spread it over the top, and bake it a nice brown colour in a moderate oven.

Try this "Cream Pastry" for afternoon tea. It is lovely:—

Roll 8 oz. of butter in 8 oz. of flour into leaf-like pieces, place them aside, add a pinch of salt to the flour and mix it into a stiff paste with good, thick cream, roll it out, lay the sheets of butter on half the paste, fold the other half over and roll again, repeat the rolling process five or six times, with ten minutes intermission, always folding the paste evenly in half. Now roll out to about a quarter of an inch thick, and cut into fancy shaped pieces, leaves, rounds, diamonds, and three-corner shaped pieces, always remembering to dip the cutter in hot water each time of cutting. Dust the cakes with pounded sugar and bake in a brisk oven. The pastry can be served plain, or with apple jelly between the flakes. Arrange them tastefully on a fancy paper.

This dish of eggs and cheese will also be found to have its charms:—

Mix 4 oz. of grated Parmesan cheese with half a pint of cream, and spread part of it at the bottom of a buttered fireproof dish. Break on it 5 or 6 eggs, dust them with salt and pepper, and cover them with the remainder of the cream and cheese. Sprinkle the top with a little grated Parmesan and bake it a nice brown colour. Serve it in the dish in which it is cooked.

Lastly, you will find this a really admirable dish:—

Break 3 or 4 eggs in a basin, season them with salt, pepper, chopped parsley, and a tablespoonful of chopped red tongue. Whisk them lightly together with the addition of half a pint of cream. Divide the mixture into about 8 small buttered fireproof cups—that can be bought for the purpose—and either steam or bake them until the contents are set, but not hard. Sprinkle the top with chopped red tongue and a very little chopped parsley. Serve the cups on a napkin.

Ever, dear, your loving cousin, MADGE.

Unique Offer of

FINE OLD

BRANDY

We have decided to offer a portion of our Stock of fine Old Cognac Brandy to the public direct, comprising some 400 dozen of 1872 and 1875 VINTAGES.

Previous to the ravages of the "Phylloxera" in the Cognac district we were well known to the trade as the Largest Shippers of Fine Brandy outside London, and this fact enables us to make our present offer. These Brandies were shipped by Messrs. L. Ducasse & Co., Cognac (from whom we have bought Brandy for over fifty years), in 1880, and were recently bottled by us in Bond. We have no hesitation in saying that

The equal of these fine Champagne Brandies is hardly to be found; they are, in fact, priceless.

We offer the 1872 Vintage at the very moderate price of 135s. per dozen, and the 1875 at 130s. per dozen. (An allowance of 5s. per dozen may be deducted by purchasers of not less than three dozen).

Terms—Cash, or Bankers' or Trade References. Carriage Paid.

THROUGH THE GOLD-FIELDS OF

ALASKA TO BERING STRAITS. By HARRY DE WINDT. With Map and 33 Illustrations. Demy 8vo, cloth, 16s.

"The story of his rescue at half-past the eleventh hour by a belated whaler, is one of the most dramatic and thrilling bits of romance in real life I have read for some time."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"It can hardly fail to be welcome to all who love a volume of adventurous travel."—Times.

THE LIFE OF NAPOLEON III.

By ARCHIBALD FORBES. With 37 full-page Illustrations. Demy 8vo, cloth, 12s.

"Adds to the accuracy of an historical annal the charm of romance. . . . . With the first blast of the trumpet of war the pluckiest, most resourceful, and most successful war correspondent of the century is at his best again. The story of the campaign is a brilliant piece of writing. It carries the reader breathless to the closing scene at Chislehurst."—Punch.

The LIFE of GEORGE CRUIKSHANK.

By BLANCHARD JERROLD. With 84 Illustrations and a Bibliography. A New Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

RECORDS OF OLD TIMES:

Historical, Social, Political, Sporting, and Agricultural. By J. K. FOWLER ("Rusticus"). Demy 8vo, cloth, with Illustrations, 10s. 6d.

THE DISASTER.

By PAUL and VICTOR MARGUERITTE. Translated by FREDERIC LEES.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

"A strong, a remarkable book."—Speaker.

TRUE BLUE: or, "The Lass that Loved a Sailor."

By HERBERT RUSSELL. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

A WOMAN TEMPTED HIM.

By WILLIAM WESTALL, Author of "With the Red Eagle," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 6s.

"Mr. Westall's vein this time is the social drama of to-day, and, as usual, his story is cleverly told."—Athenæum.

"As a story of domestic intrigue and financial vicissitude it is skilfully planned and alluringly unrolled."—Daily Mail.

MISS BALMAINE'S PAST.

By B. M. CROKER Author of "Beyond the Pale," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 6s.

"An attractive love-story, crisply written, and overflowing with dialogue. . . . Sure to prove acceptable to novel-readers."—Leeds Mercury.

TALES IN PROSE AND VERSE.

By D. CHRISTIE MURRAY, Author of "Joseph's Coat." Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

"Some of Christie Murray's best work is to be found in his 'Tales in Prose and Verse.' . . . 'On the Edge of Freedom' has, however, claims above those of the others to attention and eulogy. . . . We doubt whether so finely wrought a picture of the human waif is to be found in all fact-built fiction as that of Moses Lowenstein."—World.

THIS LITTLE WORLD.

By D. CHRISTIE MURRAY. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 6s.

"Mr. Murray has never done anything better than this fine story. The incidents are presented with wonderful force and freshness, the action never drags, and in vividness and power of characterisation the story is masterly. . . . It is a book that will add to Mr. Murray's reputation."—Birmingham Post.

MORE TRAMPS ABROAD.

By MARK TWAIN. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 6s.

"A really admirable piece of craftsmanship. . . . Being by Mark Twain it is needless to say that it has plenty of humour. We must confess to having read it through at a sitting."—Guardian.

MR. HEINEMANN'S NEW BOOKS.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE:

A CRITICAL STUDY.

By GEORGE BRANDES.

2 vols., Roxburgh gilt top or buckram uncut, demy 8vo, 24s. net.

The Times.—"On the whole an admirable piece of work. It is based on facts and not on fancies; it takes into account the historical conditions under which the plays were written, which it illustrates with remarkable fulness of knowledge. Dr. Brandes's learning is sound.

PETER THE GREAT.

By K. WALISZEWSKI. Translated by Lady MARY LOYD. With Portrait. New Edition, 1 vol., 6s. Library Edition, 2 vols., 28s.

The St. James's Gazette.—"In every way a brilliant piece of work—succinct, lucid, well-arranged, clear-sighted, and judicial. The author of this biography recalls something of the qualities of Carlyle."

NEW SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

THE WAR OF THE WORLDS.

By H. G. WELLS,

Author of "The Time Machine."

The Spectator.—"As a writer of scientific romance, Mr. Wells has never been surpassed. Even when he is most awful there is always something human about his characters. Both Poe and Mr. Wells are followers of Swift, but Mr. Wells keeps nearest to the human side of the author of Gulliver."

THE MINISTER OF STATE.

By J. A. STEUART.

The Daily Mail.—"A brilliantly clever novel, charged with intellectuality and worldly knowledge, written with uncommon literary finish, pulsating with human nature."

THE BETH BOOK.

By SARAH GRAND, Author of "The Heavenly Twins."

Punch.—"The heroine of 'The Beth Book' is one of Sarah Grand's most fascinating creations. The story is absorbing; the truth to nature in the characters every reader will recognise."

THE TRIUMPH OF DEATH.

By GABRIELE D'ANNUNZIO.

The Pall Mall Gazette.—"A masterpiece. The story holds and haunts one. . . . A great prose poem that cannot be surpassed. The work of a master—a master whose genius is beyond dispute."

THE BROOM OF THE WAR GOD.

By H. N. BRAILSFORD.

CLEO THE MAGNIFICENT.

By Z. Z., Author of "A Drama in Dutch."

The Daily Mail.—"A strong piece of work: more than commonly clever, conscientious, and sound."

GOD'S FOUNDLING.

By A. J. DAWSON, Author of "In the Bight of Benin."

The Outlook.—"The book has really subtle qualities of thought and observation. Mr. Dawson has chosen an interesting theme, and he works it out with a genuine sense of the natural evolution of his subject."

THE NIGGER of the 'NARCISSUS.'

By JOSEPH CONRAD.

A. T. QUILLER-COUCH.—"A thoroughly good tale. Mr. Conrad grips a situation, an incident; he squeezes emotion and colour out of it to the last drop. He knows the inside of his seamen too, and by consequence the crew are the most plausibly life-like set of rascals that ever sailed through the pages of fiction."

THE GADFLY.

By E. L. VOYNICH.

The St. James's Gazette.—"Exciting, sinister, even terrifying, we must avow it to be a work of real genius."

THE CHRISTIAN.

By HALL CAINE.

The Sketch.—"It quivers and palpitates with passion, for even Mr. Caine's bitterest detractors cannot deny that he is the possessor of that rarest of all gifts—genius."

THE FOURTH NAPOLEON.

By CHARLES BENHAM.

The Academy.—"It is a fine piece of work, with enough wit and style and knowledge of life to set up half-a-dozen ordinary novels."

London: WM. HEINEMANN, 21, Bedford-street, W.C.

Just out. 8th 1,000. By GUY BOOTHBY,
Author of "Dr. Nikola," "The Beautiful White Devil," &c.
Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s. With Frontispiece by HAL LUDLOW.

SHEILAH McLEOD.

A Heroine of the Back Blocks.

The Scotsman says: "The interest of this bright tale of adventure never flags." Literature says: "A capital tale, packed with exciting scenes and situations, strung together by a practised hand. A capital gift for boys."

The most weird story published for many a day.

A NEW NOVEL by RICHARD MARSH.

FOURTH EDITION, Price 6s., with Illustrations by JOHN WILLIAMSON.

THE BEETLE:

A Mystery!

The Speaker says:—"A story of the most terrific kind is duly recorded in this extremely powerful book. The skill with which its fantastic horrors are presented to us is undeniable."

The Daily Graphic says:—"'It is the kind of book which you put down only for the purpose of turning up the gas and making sure that no person or thing is standing behind your chair—and it is a book which no one will put down until finished except for the reason above described."

The Glasgow Herald says: "The weird horror of this being grows upon the reader. It is difficult, if not impossible, to lay down this book when once begun."

The Academy says: "'Dracula,' by Mr. Bram Stoker, was creepy, but Mr. Marsh goes one, oh! many more than one, better. The surprising and ingenious story succeeds in producing that sensation of horror which should make the flesh of even the least susceptible reader creep."

Positively Closing the Glorious and Triumphant Sojourn

On Saturday, APRIL 2nd, and then Touring the whole of Great Britain. Travelling the Entire, Mighty, Undivided Show under a Daily Expense of £1,500, with New Acts and New Features introduced into the already magnificent and stupendously large programme of THRILLING PERFORMANCES AND GRAND DISPLAYS.

Visiting the Provinces upon its own specially constructed 70 railway cars, every car nearly 60 feet long.

NEARLY A FULL MILE OF RAILWAY CARS, and exhibiting all the myriad wonders under

TWELVE ENORMOUS CANVAS PAVILIONS,

one alone of which is double the capacity of Olympia.

LAST SIX WEEKS

of the Grandest Show ever devised by man. Last chances of witnessing the most Magnificent Exhibition, the ingenuity, ability, wealth, and wonderful resources of the

KING OF THE AMUSEMENT WORLD,

as set before the bewildered eyes of London.

CHANGE OF PROGRAMME.

New Acts Introduced. New Features Presented. New Attractions Added. New Races, new Clown Capers, new Animal Tricks. Ending the London Engagement in a blaze of glory. Eye-Feasts of Splendour and Thrilling Interest. First presentation of the Mammoth and numerous other remarkable features. A Veritable Tornado of Wonders. Bewildering Array of Novelties and a very Vesuvius of Brilliant Attractions never seen here or anywhere else.

FOUR HUNDRED BLUE RIBBON HORSE FAIR,

A PROGRAMME OF AMAZING EXTENT of startling struggles, hotly contested races, and aerial and equestrian rivalries, carrying the spectators by storm, and wildly and enthusiastically applauded by everybody. Stupendous Struggles between Champions, Daring Deeds by Intrepid Gladiators. Tournaments, Games, Combats, Sports, Feats, Displays. A Perfect Avalanche of Startling Events. Races that enchanted Roman Senators. Furious Two and Four-Horse Roman Chariot Races. Bareback Equestrian, High School, Classic, Athletic, Acrobatic, Gymnastic, and Aerial Contests of all kinds, together with Trials of Skill, Endurance, and Bravery, in Three Rings, upon Two Stages, on the Race Track, in the Grand Aerial Euclave, and upon the 450-feet Spectacular Stage. Pageants Exhausting Art and Luxury. The whole vast space of the many Arenas a Bewildering Scene of Kaleidoscopic Splendour.

REALLY THE WORLD'S SPECTACULAR SENSATION.

THE MIGHTY METROPOLIS OF WONDERLAND.

The United Universal Press a Unit in its praise. Enlightenment and Science its greatest aids A Stupendous Place, where Wonder itself is lost in Wonder. Volumes could not enumerate its myriad Treasures, to all of which are added the Double MENAGERIES OF WILD AND TRAINED BEASTS.

Three Herds of Performing Elephants. Grand Horse Fair, Droves of Camels, Shetland Ponies, Zebras, Llamas, Alpacas, Guanacas, Tiney Zebras.

THE FAMOUS COLLECTION OF WONDERFUL FREAKS.

THE HOMACOUSTIC.

WHAT IS THE HOMACOUSTIC?

THE HOMACOUSTIC is a contrivance connected with Speaking Tubes, which entirely supersedes for indoor purposes not only the Telephone, but all other existing arrangements for indoor inter-communication.

THE HOMACOUSTIC

Is Automatic, not Mechanical. Once fixed always in Working Order. Its first cost is its last cost.

WITH THE HOMACOUSTIC

There is no blowing into pipes. The automatic whistle is always in position. One speaks and listens at the same time. The tube is closed when not in actual use. Ordinary speaking tubes can be utilised.

ONE (No. 4) HOMACOUSTIC

Places the speaker in communication with any Number of Rooms.

THE HOMACOUSTIC

Is of special value and inestimable convenience not only in business establishments, but in all Private Houses.

SHOW ROOMS: 6, Bruton Street, New Bond Street.

Of all Speaking-Tube Fitters, or

Old Bushmills

PURE MALT

WHISKEY.

ONE of Nature's greatest wonders is the Giant's Causeway, quite near to which the world-famed Old Bushmills Distillery is situated.

The geological formation of the adjoining country is such that barley of an extraordinary fine quality is grown there, and the water obtained from this region possesses wonderful medicinal qualities; hence the great superiority of the Whiskey made at Bushmills over any other in the World.

Old Bushmills may be obtained from the accredited Agents throughout the World, or direct from the Company's Chief Offices and Bottling Stores, Hill-street, Belfast.

ABRIDGED PROSPECTUS.

This Company has been formed for the purpose of acquiring, by the purchase of all the Shares as from 31st March, 1897 (old style) the entire interest in the well-known Petroleum business carried on at Baku, Moscow, and elsewhere, by the Russian private Limited Liability Company known as Messrs. S. M. Schibaieff & Co.

The Russian Company was established in 1884, with Statutes approved by Imperial Ukase. The present Share Capital is 2,500,000 Roubles (about £265,000), divided into 2,500 Shares of 1,000 Roubles each, fully paid.

Mr. Boverton Redwood, the well-known Petroleum Expert, assisted by Mr. Eastlake and Mr. Palmer, has made an exhaustive survey, valuation and Report as to the assets of the Russian Company, a copy of which accompanies the Prospectus, from which it will be seen that the principal assets comprise the following valuable freehold and leasehold properties:—

(1.) An important Refinery at Baku, covering an area of 74 acres, with complete equipment for treating a maximum of nearly 35,000,000 poods (about Tons 564,516) of Crude Petroleum per annum.

(2.) A Sulphuric Acid Factory, for the manufacture of about 260,000 poods (about Tons 4,193) of Sulphuric Acid and plant for dealing with 60,000 poods (about Tons 968) of Acid Liquor per annum.

(3.) Lands in the oil-producing districts at Balakhany, Sabountschy, Romany, and Bibi-Eibat, comprising in all about 9 desiatines (25 acres more or less).

(4.) 40 desiatines (about 108 acres) of promising Petroleum Territory at Khidershindeh, where drilling is now being carried on by the Russian Company, and favourable results expected.

(5.) 10 desiatines (about 27 acres) of promising Petroleum Territory, situate at Binagadi, close to Balakhany, Baku.

(6.) A pumping station at Balakhany, covering about 2¾ acres, with 6 miles of pipe lines, connecting the Oil Fields with the Refinery.

(7.) Extensive storage and distributing installations and offices at Astrakhan, Tzaritzyn, Saratov, Nijni-Novgorod, Yaroslav, Moscow, and Oufa.

The aggregate storage capacity at the different Towns amounts—in Iron Reservoirs ... ... to about 4,384,390 poods, equal to about 70,715 tons.

in Brick & Earth Reservoirs " 23,140,000 " " " 373,225 "

(8.) Well equipped storing and shipping installations at Batoum, on the Black Sea, with pumps, pipe lines, &c.

(9.) Residence and offices situate in the town of Batoum.

(10.) 98 railway tank wagons, 2 steamers, and 10 tank barges.

There are additional Assets as shown by the Balance Sheet to 31st March, 1897 (old style), compared with the books by Messrs. Turquand, Youngs, Bishop, & Clarke, consisting of cash, Government Bonds, stock of oils (taken at considerably below market price), book debts, &c., amounting to £116,177 (after making provision for all liabilities, including an advance from Madame Schibaieff on current account).

The purchase includes the profits that may result from the working of the business during the current financial year ending 31st March, 1898, which the present Managing Director of the Russian Company estimates at about £90,000, from which depreciation only has to be deducted.

The above properties form one of the most complete organisations for the production of Crude Petroleum, and the manufacture of Petroleum products and liquid fuel, and their distribution in Russia, as well as their export abroad.

Mr. Boverton Redwood's report points out that, whereas the present valuation of the existing plant, machinery, and buildings alone, leaving out altogether the freehold and leasehold lands, as well as freehold and leasehold Petroleum Territories, is put down at £273,877, it would cost £410,751 to construct similar plant. He also states that "the buildings throughout are of a substantial character, and are in good condition."

Attention is directed to the following extracts from Mr. Redwood's Report:—

"In this valuation no account has been taken of the value of the freehold land, or payments made in advance in respect of the leasehold properties. The value of the site of the refinery alone has been already stated to be estimated at about £123,000. The aggregate value stated is also exclusive of the value of movable plant (other than barges, steamers, and tank wagons), and tools, and of the goodwill of the business, though the property has, as regards the plant, &c., been valued as a 'going concern.'

"I am therefore, on the whole, distinctly of opinion that the business of Messrs. Schibaieff would be a highly desirable and very valuable acquisition."

From the foregoing it appears that although the subscribed capital of Messrs. Schibaieff & Co. is only 2,500,000 Roubles (say £265,000) the amount of expenditure on the construction and development of the business has been £565,832, in addition to which there existed on 31st March, 1897, the other assets above referred to of the value of about £116,000, which, with the addition of the estimated profits for the current year ending 31st March, 1898, of about £90,000, would give a grand total of about £771,000, of which £265,000 only is represented by original capital put into the business.

It is therefore evident that the business in the past has yielded considerable profits, which have been utilised to develop the enterprise and bring it up to its present high state of efficiency.

Of the present Issue £110,000 will be available for introduction into the business of the Russian Company, when that Company's working capital, after providing for all liabilities, would stand at about £300,000, which is considered ample. The benefit of Messrs. Schibaieff's policy of leaving the profits in the business will be reaped by the Shareholders of this Company, who will acquire a going concern with very valuable assets and a large working capital, with every prospect of substantial dividends, especially as it will be the policy of the Directors to develope the production of Crude Oil. This production during the current year, as per Mr. Redwood's Report, amounted to about 14,300,000 poods in 9 months, which after deducting the proportion payable by way of Royalty, left 11,500,000 poods for the Schibaieff Company, as compared with 8,908,805 poods for the whole of the previous 12 months. Moreover, the Directors believe that the administration expenses can be materially reduced.

The Petroleum Industry in Russia has very much developed in recent years, mainly owing to the large demand for Astatki or Petroleum Residuum which, from 3¼ Kopecks per pood in 1891, has risen to its present price of 9 Kopecks per pood. This residuum is used as fuel for Railways, Factories, and Steamers, and the demand for it is constantly increasing. Besides, in order to aid the Petroleum industry, which has become one of the staple industries of the country, the Russian Government has lately considerably reduced the railway freights on refined Petroleum between Russia and Germany and Baku and Batoum.

The Vendors, who are the promoters and are selling at a profit, have fixed the purchase price of the 2,500 Shares representing the entire nominal capital of S. M. Schibaieff & Co.—say Roubles 2,500,000, with all rights as from 31st March, 1897—at the sum of £640,000, payable as follows:—£620,000 in cash, and £20,000 in fully-paid Ordinary Shares, and the Company will guarantee the outstanding debt to Madame Schibaieff, estimated to amount, on 31st March next, to about £126,000, but for which provision has already been made in arriving at the assets of the Russian Company.

All expenses incidental to the formation of the Company, and the issue of the Capital up to allotment, will be borne by the Vendors.

The following Agreements have been entered into: an Agreement dated the 5th September, 1897, between Alexander Ivanovitsch Klein and Eudoxia Vukolovna Schibaieff; an Agreement of the same date between Alexander Ivanovitsch Klein and Labouchere, Oyens & Co., and H. Oyens & Zonen; an Agreement of the same date between Alexander Ivanovitsch Klein and Ivan Sidorovitsch Schibaieff; an Agreement of the same date between Alexander Ivanovitsch Klein and Labouchere, Oyens & Co., and H. Oyens & Zonen; and an Agreement dated 17th February, 1898, and made between Labouchere, Oyens & Co., and H. Oyens & Zonen, of the one part, and George Grinnell-Milne, contracting on behalf of the Company, of the other part. Mr. Rahusen, one of the Directors, is a partner in H. Oyens & Zonen, and Mr. Lane, another Director, is a member of the firm of Lane & Macandrew, which firms are interested in the sale.

During the negotiations for the purchase of the property and the formation of the Company, Agreements have been entered into with various parties as to participation in the profits of the sale and the issue of the capital now offered, to none of which the Company is a party. Applicants for Shares must be deemed to have had notice of these Agreements, and to have waived all rights to any particulars thereof, whether under Section 38 of "The Companies Acts, 1867," or otherwise, and applications for Shares will only be received and allotments made on that footing.

The Reports, copies of the Memorandum and Articles of Association, and the above-mentioned Agreements, can be inspected at the Office of the Solicitors of the Company.

Applications for Shares should be made on the form accompanying the Prospectus, and sent with the deposit direct to the Company's Bankers. In any case where no allotment is made, the deposit will be returned in full; and where the number of Shares allotted is less than the number applied for, the surplus will be credited in reduction of the further amount payable on allotment.

Application is intended to be made to the Committee of the Stock Exchange for a special settlement, and an official quotation of the Company's Shares.

Copies of the Prospectus and Forms of Application for Shares may be had from the Bankers, Brokers, Solicitors, and at the Offices of the Company, 6, Princes-street, E.C.

PROSPECTUS.

This Company was formed in 1896, to acquire the Albion Brewery, Burton-on-Trent, together with 135 licensed houses, 121 unlicensed houses, stores, and cottages, and about 119 acres of freehold and long leasehold building and other land.

The demand at Burton-on-Trent for so important a block of licensed properties as now owned by the Company is such that a favourable offer has recently been accepted, and an Agreement entered into by the Company for leasing the whole of its licensed houses to Messrs. Thomas Salt & Co., Limited, of Burton-on-Trent. The term is for 21 years from Michaelmas, 1897, with the option to the lessees of renewing in perpetuity.

The Brewery is let on favourable terms for a period of 79 years as from January 1st, 1898, and the whole of the Company's other properties (with the exception of the building land, certain maltings, stores, &c.) are also let to produce a good rental.

The rents and royalties payable by Messrs. Thomas Salt & Co., Limited, will secure to the Company from the 29th September, 1897, a satisfactory income, which, as to the major part, is practically fixed and determined; and rights have been retained by the Company of acquiring further licensed houses, and letting the same on lease, as opportunities may arise.

In pursuance of this policy, and with a view to further increasing the income of the Company, contracts have been entered into for the acquisition of 55 additional licensed houses, and agreements have also been secured for leasing the same for 21 years to Messrs. Ind, Coope, & Co., Limited, and others, upon terms favourable to this Company.

The whole of these houses, with the exception of 12, are either freehold, or leasehold for upwards of 900 years, and to enable the Company to complete the purchase of these properties the present issue of Debenture Stock is made.

The Debenture Stock now offered for subscription will be irredeemable, and will be secured by:—

An absolute specific first mortgage on the above-mentioned fifty-five Freehold and Leasehold Properties, valued at		£101,607 10
A floating charge on the effects taken with the above properties, valued at		3,024 14
A fixed charge (subject only to an existing issue of £180,000 of irredeemable debenture stock) on the Albion Brewery, all the licensed and unlicensed houses, land, and all other properties included in the prior fixed charge; and a floating charge (subject only to the existing debenture stock) on all other the assets and properties of the Company, including stock-in-trade, plant, book debts, and goodwill, together standing in the books of the Company on the 29th September, 1897, at	£329,143
Deduct amount of existing debenture stock	180,000
		149,143 0
		£253,775 4

The present issue is £110,000 of Debenture Stock.

The Rents and Royalties receivable by the Company from Messrs. Thomas Salt & Co., Limited, Messrs. Ind, Coope, & Co., Limited, and other tenants, are calculated, under the terms of the tenancy agreements, to produce, together with interest on the Company's investments, an income of at least		£20,170 per annum.
Deduct the interest payable on the existing Debenture Stock, viz.	8,100	"
Leaves	£12,070	"
To pay the interest on the present issue of £110,000 4 per cent. Debenture Stock requires	£4,400	"

In addition to the above, a further revenue is expected to result from the extension of the business, and from the development of the Company's Building Estate at Burton-on-Trent.

The Company's existing debenture stock is officially quoted on the London Stock Exchange, and it is intended to make prompt application for a quotation of the present issue.

If the debenture stock shall at any time become payable owing to the voluntary winding-up of the Company, for amalgamation purposes or otherwise, it shall be redeemed at a price to be calculated according to the average mean market price in London of the stock during the three years immediately preceding the date when the security became enforceable, but so that the price shall not be less than £110 per £100 of the stock.

The directors have instructed Messrs. Hoskins & Son, brewery valuers, to make a valuation of the additional properties about to be acquired by the Company. The report is as follows:—

49, King William-street, London Bridge, E.C.
February 7th, 1898.

To the Directors of the Albion (Burton-on-Trent) Brewery, Limited.

GENTLEMEN,—We have personally inspected the houses and other properties included in the Schedules (5) herewith, numbering 55 licensed properties.

We have further perused the terms on which these houses have been let, and are of opinion that, taking into account the rents payable by the respective tenants, the aggregate value of the same is not less than one hundred and one thousand six hundred and seven pounds and ten shillings (say) ... ... £ 101,607 s. 10 d. 0

To which must be added the agreed valuation of stock-in-trade, book debts, effects, &c. 3,024 14 0

Total £104,632 4 0

We are, gentlemen, yours faithfully,
HOSKINS & SON.

The draft trust deed, the form of "A" Debenture Stock Certificate, the Memorandum and Articles of Association of the Company, and Messrs. Hoskins & Son's report may be seen at the offices of the Solicitors of the Company.

Applications, accompanied by a remittance of the above-mentioned deposit of 10 per cent., should be sent to the Company's Bankers or to any of their branches. Where no allotment is made the deposit will be returned in full.

In the event of a less amount of Debenture Stock than applied for being allotted to any applicant, the surplus amount paid on application will be appropriated towards the sum due on allotment. Failure to pay any instalment when due will render the previous payments liable to forfeiture.

Prospectuses and Forms of Application may be had from the Bankers, Brokers, or Solicitors, or at the Offices of the Company.

CONDENSED RULES.

All answers to the current Puzzle must be sent in on or before the morning of e Monday week following the date of that Puzzle's publication, to the PUZZLE DITOR, TRUTH Buildings, Carteret-street, Queen Anne's-gate, London, S.W. he answers must be signed by a nom de plume of not more than twelve ters, and must not be sent on post-cards, nor by telegraph, nor by hand; hilst in the case of new competitors the real name and address must be warded with the first reply sent.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 990.

Though, as a result of careful examination, I have found it necessary to reduce nsiderably the total number of the names of towns and cities of England and ales, included in the quotations sent in by COMMA and other competitors, I d that after all deductions have been made, COMMA retains the lead. The ize will, therefore, be awarded to him. He was run very closely by CAM, t managed, in sporting parlance, to win on the post by a short head. I may ld that many of the names sent in by competitors were not those of cities or wns at all. Some merely referred to small villages; some to country seats, d some to parts of large cities; whilst others had not been used by the oted poets as names of places, but as names of individuals. After making deductions, however, I still consider that the competitors are to be con- tulated on the success of their research. I was very much surprised at the mber of quotations they contrived to find, and think that the results ieved testify strongly to the patience and persistence that must have been rcised.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 992.

he prize for the best Up-to-Date Parody of the Heathen Chinee has been ded between OOM PAUL and ETAK.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 996.

correspondent has suggested a form of Puzzle which, though well known in Realm of Puzzledom, has not yet been tried in the pages of TRUTH. Its modus operandi is as follows. First a collection of consonants is given, as, for instance:—

G D L D P R T F R R T H D X X F R D D N S.

Then competitors are asked to convert the above collection of letters into a sensible sentence by adding any one vowel as often as they please, on condition that it must always be the same vowel. Thus, it will be found that by adding the vowel O sufficiently often to the line of consonants given above they can be amplified into the sentence:—

GOOD OLD PORT FOR ORTHODOX OXFORD DONS.

The usual prize of Two Guineas is therefore offered to the competitor who succeeds best

IN CONSTRUCTING A SENTENCE ON THE ABOVE MODEL.

Competitors will do well to bear in mind that it is a sentence and not a paragraph which is wanted; and that the sentence should not be lengthened at the expense of its intelligibility. In sending in their answers competitors are desired to give, first, merely the consonants of their answers, and then to add in another line what these sentences become by the addition of the necessary vowel. All answers must reach me by the morning of Monday, March 7, at the latest.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

 The real name, with the address, of the winner of Prize No. 986 is PHILIP A. MCCARTHY, Esq., Ballyre, Willeagh, Co. Cork.

ALDBARN.—I regret that by a printer's error Conundrum No. 31 was credited to OLDHAM instead of to you. At the same time let me thank you for the novel suggestion you have sent to me.

LUDWIG B.—Thanks for your letter. I have handed your inquiry about the "Rusk" competition to the Editor.

M. L.—Thanks for your letter.

MICAH DOW.—It comes from Goethe's "Faust."

A. S. P.—You will see that I have turned your kind suggestion to practical account.

W. W. R.—I doubt the advisability of such a competition.

BLANCHE.—See Rule 3.

NDERINGS INTO ENGLISH OF THREE FRENCH STANZAS FROM THE LATE MR. DU MAURIER'S "TRILBY."

THE PUZZLE EDITOR.

Trilby—beautiful and good and dear! old her foot. Divine who ever will tender friend, who lately lov'd her here, amed of her (and with a love sincere) charming token, a caprice of skill—hich a mere breath may kill!

t twin: my brother claims a tear.
! Alas! Love wrought us cruel ill.
neet again in the Eternal sphere, together once more, ever near;
at chaste bed no troubles more can thrill lby, asleep and still.*

er friend for thee alone we fear!
loor where Trilby dwelt is closed and chill.
radise is far. . . . On earth so drear right to both, lie lightly on his bier!)
d our equals, veinly search dale, hill—must our fate fulfil.

J. McGrigor Allan.

lby—good and beautiful and dear—er foot. So let him guess who may rmer friend, with many a loving tear, d of her (and of a passion clear) weet remembrance, born of fancy half in play,
must so soon decay!

of my twin-brother who may hear?
Alas! Love led us both astray.
shall bring us ever near;
hall make a pair, as yester-year, in an holy bed, where none shall drive way
y's soft sleep, I pray.

weet friend, is not our parting drear?
r is shut where Trilby once did stay.
ld you seek—so far Heav'n's gates appear—
r like among this earthly gear light on her will lie, which once we found gay) seek till Judgment Day!

Clive.

Poor Trilby, the beloved, the kind, the fair,
Her foot am I. Guess, stranger, if you may,
What tender friend of tender days that were,
Hath here inscribed her love and his despair,
Hath measured in his mood a breath—a simple lay
A breath shall sweep away!

Twin was I; but my mate is otherwhere.
Alas! alas! Love led our steps astray;
But death, I think, shall join what life could tear,
And twain us as aforetime, and prepare
Deeply a chaste, cold bed, and none shall murmur nay,
Where Trilby sleeps alway.

Without us, gentle friend, how wilt thou fare?
The door is shut, for Trilby would not stay.
Heaven is so far . . . . and on this world of care
(To us so sweet—light to her dreaming there)
Seek, stranger, for our likes—but look, and go your way,
Or look in vain for aye!

W. Nevermore.

I'm Trilby's foot—by master rare,
In happy moments pictured here,
Framed by a friend, with thoughtful care,
Lest passing breath my charm impair,
Kept as a mem'ry of my mistress dear—
Kind friendship's souvenir.

Twin sister had I, we were pair.
Love took her with my mistress dear,
From out these ways with him to fare,
Took them, alas! I know not where,
But we shall meet and rest some coming year,
Stainless on flow'r-decked bier.

Dear friend, left sorrowing in despair,
What will you do without us near?
The earth we gladdened no such pair
Has on it, search you ev'rywhere;
And Trilby's door is closed, the earth is drear,
And Heav'n is far from here.

Guillaumette.

Poor Trilby, beautiful, and good, and dear,
I am her foot; let him divine who may
What tender friend, late cherishing her here,
Enframed of her this charming souvenir,
That a caprice inspired, that, like bouquet,
Will fade with breath of day.

I was the twin. Where, brother, dost thou steer
Thy life course? Ah! Love led our steps astray
Eternity will join us. In that sphere
We shall, as in the time of yore, appear
A pair, in some chaste peaceful bed to stay,
Where Trilby sleeps alway.

O tender friend, without us life is sear.
The door is closed where Trilby held her sway.
And Paradise is far, and on earth drear
(Once sweet to us, and will be light and clear
To her) to find our like, should you essay
To search—you may—for aye!

Oom Paul.

Poor Trilby—she was gentle, dear, and fair!
I am her foot. Let him who wishes guess
What tender friend, rememb'ring cherished there
Enframed for love of her (love deep and rare),
This charming trace of Fancy's tenderness
Which a breath might distress!

I was a twin: my brother's gone, ah! where?
Alas! We parted in love's wilderness.
Eternity will join us—'tis my prayer;
And we shall rest together in our share
Of that cold bed where no unhappiness
Grieves Trilby—whom God bless!

Oh! tender friend alone, how wilt thou fare?
The house where Trilby stayed is loneliness.
Heaven is so far—and on this earth so bare ('Twas soft to us, 'twill softly for her care)
To find our equals, search with eager stress,
Vain is your eagerness!

Impérieuse.

Poor Trilby!—beautiful and good and dear!
Her foot am I. Guess, ye who look on me,
What kind friend framed this charming souvenir
Of her he cherished with a love sincere.
A breath would cause this child of freakish fantasy
To vanish instantly!

Where now is my twin brother, once so near?
Alas! Love severed us. Eternity
Will re-unite, I trust, those parted here.
Then, deep in bed of chastity severe,
We'll meet again where Trilby, from all trouble free,
Will slumber peacefully.

What will thou do, fond friend, without us here,
Now Trilby's door no longer ope's to thee?
'Tis far to Paradise, and on this sphere
(Where the soft earth shall lightly press her bier)
In vain a pair like us will any look to see,
Though he search anxiously. Orlando.

Poor Trilby—fair, and good, and dear!
Her foot behold! Guess you who may
What lover, once held kind and near,
Her memory framed (and love's); and here
It lies—a thing a thought would sway,
A breath shall blow away!

I was a twin: alas! but where
Is he, my brother? Far astray
Love leads us; sleep's eternal sphere
Shall draw us side by side—No tear
Trilby's white bed shall trouble—nay,
Calm shall be alway.

Kind friend, no sound of us you hear;
And Trilby's door is closed—the way
So far to Heaven! And should you here
On earth—once soft to us, now near
To her still heart—seek day by day
Two like us; seek you may!
Sydney.

Trilby, poor girl, so fair, so kind, so dear!
This is her foot. It is not hard to tell
The faithful friend, whose ever watchful care
Preserved of her (of his great love as well)
This token of an hour, inspired by fancy's whim—
A lightest touch might dim.

And there were two; where has the other stray'd?
Alas! Alas! 'Twas love did part the twain,
Though sever'd here, may they at last be laid,
United in eternity again,
In that cold narrow bed, where naught shall vex or wound
Trilby's last sleep profound.

Oh, faithful heart, alone what will you do?
The door whence Trilby came is closed and barred
And heaven is very far . . . . this earth below
(So good and kind, 'twill not on her lie hard)
No like to this can show, seek it the best who may,
They'll seek for many a day.
Janet.

Poor Trilby—beautiful and good and dear!
Her foot am I. Let him divine who may
What tender friend, remindful, guarded here
Enframed, this trace of her (and love sincere)—
This charming relic Fancy made one day)—
And winds might blow away!

I was a twin: my brother, oh! what cheer?
Alas! Love made us from each other stray.
Eternity, perhaps, will bring us once more near
To make our pair (as in that yester-year),
In a cold bed where no one will affray
Trilby—asleep for aye.

Where, tender friend left lonely, wilt thou steer?
The door is shut where Trilby used to stay.
And Heav'n so far! . . . and on the earth adrear,
(But soft for us, and light on her—don't fear!)
Seeking our equals, let who will delay—
In vain is his essay!
Kooràli.

Poor Trilby! once so fair, so good, so dear,
Behold her foot portrayed. Divine, I pray,
What tender erstwhile friend, in love sincere,
Perchance hath framed this charming souvenir
Of her which fond caprice inspires to-day,
A breath can blow away.

I was a twin; Where is my brother? Where?
Alas! Eternity may re-unite
What love has parted. This my hope, my prayer.
Then, as of yore, we'll form again a pair
When Trilby rests throughout the peaceful night
In slumber pure and light.

Deprived of us, what may you, will you, do?
The gate is closed where she abode, dear friend.
Through Paradise afar . . . . the world search through—(Earth! sweet to us, lie light on Trilby too)—
Seeking our peers you may long ages spend,
And yet the quest not end!
Whig.

Poor Trilby! she, the fair, the kind, the dea
I am her foot. Guess, curious passer-by,
What tender lover of a bygone year
Encased of her this touching souvenir,
Right faithfully. Inspired by airy fantasy
'Twould flutter at a sigh!

I was a twin. Where, and how fares, my brother?
Alas! Love sent us straying! 'Tis my prayer
Eternity will render each to other—
Make us once more a pair with one another
In a lone bed, where no one more shall dare
Vex Trilby, sleeping there.

O, loving friend! without us, tell me how You'll do? Where, whilom, Trilby dwelt, the door
Is shut—Paradise far—and, well you know,
On earth (soft once to us, light on her now),
You'll never find our like—go search the wide world o'er—
No, never, never more!
Sissie.

Poor Trilby! she the lovely, good, and dear!
I am her foot, and let him guess who may
What tender friend has framed this souvenir
So sweet of her (and of a love sincere
Of one who cherished her), which, due to fancy's play,
A breeze will take away.

I was a twin; my brother, where is he?
Alas, alas! Love set us wandering.
We shall, I hope, meet in Eternity,
And then, as formerly, a pair shall be,
Deep in a modest bed where trouble none will bring To Trilby—slumbering.

Kind friend, without us what is left for thee?
Where Trilby dwelt the doors all closed remain,
And Paradise is far. . . . On earth (which we Found sweet, and which so light for her will be)
To find our peers, although should one a search maintain,
His search will be in vain!
Romeo.

Poor Trilby! the beauteous, good, and dear!
See here her foot—guess who did this portray.
What tender friend, who, loving her while here,
Enshrined (and with a passion so sincere)
This charming souvenir, born of fancy's play,
And which a breath will sway.

I was a twin, what has befallen my peer?
Alas, alas! 'tis Love has made us stray.
I hope Eternity will bring us near,
And, as we were a pair, once more appear
In a chaste bed, where, to no care a prey,
Trilby shall sleep alway.

O tender friend! without us life is drear:
The door is closed where Trilby used to stay;
Heaven is far off, and on this earthly sphere
(So sweet to us, be light for her its clay!)
To find our equals, wheresoe'er you steer,
You will search long, I fear. Esperanza.

Poor Trilby! beautiful, and kind, and dear!
I am her foot, but who can say
What former friend, warm-hearted and sincere,
This charming memory framed, still bold and clear?
Which, swift inspired by passing fancy's play,
A breath might blow away.

I was a twin, but where is now my mate?
Alas! 'twas Love sent us astray.
Eternity, I hope, will re-instate
The link, and make us one pair, as of late,
On a chaste bed, where trouble cannot weigh
On Trilby's sleeping clay.

Fond lover! how without us wilt thou fare?
Door closed, where Trilby erst did stay.
Heaven is far off, and on this earth now bare,
Which we deemed soft, and she feels light as air,
To find our equals, search where'er you may,
Vain is your quest for aye.
Excelsior.

Trilby is gone! the fair, and sweet, and dear!
I am her foot. Now let him guess who may
What skilled and loving hand has pencilled here,
Upon the wall, so frail a souvenir,
Light as a breath upon a winter's day,
As soon to pass away.

Alas! what love is that which could divide
Such faithful friends, the closest and the best
Of brothers? For the world is very wide.
Yet maybe we shall slumber side by side
Upon the narrow couch by Trilby prest,
With none to break her rest.

The door is fastened now of Trilby's home—
A peaceful dwelling, "without fear or stain"—
Heav'n is so far for human feet to roam,
And on the earth (our covering become)
He who would hope to find our like again
May seek, but all in vain.
Vinard.

Poor Trilby! good, and beautiful, and dear!
I am her foot. Come, let who will but say
What tender friend, to whose heart she lay near,
Enframed this relic sweet, with love sincere,
The inspiration of some fancy stray,
And which a breath will blow away.

I was a twin. Where is my brother, where?
Alas! By Love destined apart to keep,
Eternity, I trust, again will join us: there
We'll make, as in the days of yore, a pair
Upon a spotless couch, and safe will sleep
Poor Trilby in a slumber deep.

Dear friend, without us, O what will you do?
At Trilby's fast-shut door you knock in vain.
Heaven is far, yet search the whole earth thro',
(Earth, sweet to us, rest lightly on her too!)
And you will never find, for all your strain,
Search how you will, our like again.
Malignant.

Poor Trilby! beautiful, and good, and dear!
I am her foot, and whoso will may guess
What tender friend, late holding her heart near,
Enshrined of her, and of a love sincere,
This charming memory, whose light impress
(Caprice-inspired) flies 'neath a breathed caress

I was a twin. My brother is not here.
What has become of him? Alas! Love's stress
Reft us apart. Yet shall we both appear,
I hope, united, in Eternity's long, clear
Expanse, one pair, in calm reposefulness,
On that chaste couch which Trilby's sleep doth bless!

What wilt thou do without us, friend so dear,
Since Trilby's door is shut in silentness?
And Paradise is far from this low sphere,
And, though thou search the earth to find our pee (Earth sweet to us, which light on her shall pres
Thou shalt seek long, and vain the searc confess!

ENTRE NOUS.

THE Queen is to leave Windsor Castle next Wednesday afternoon, and her Majesty will arrive at Cimiez on Friday evening. The first night of the journey is to be spent on board the Victoria and Albert in Portsmouth Harbour, and the second night will be passed in the train but as one half of the Queen's saloon is fitted up as a bedroom, with every conceivable comfort, her Majesty can sleep just as well while travelling as if she were in her own room at Windsor Castle, especially as the speed of the train is to be reduced to twenty miles an hour between ten at night and nine in the morning.

There was a remarkably full entrée, at the Drawing Room, and the Queen was in the Throne Room for exactly an hour. The Queen, who looked exceedingly well, did not wear a single foreign Order, whereas her Majesty usually displays the Russian and Prussian decorations at the first Drawing Room. The Princess of Wales, who blazed with diamonds, wore the ribbon (broad pink with silver border) of the St. Catherine of Russia, and also the silver star of that Order, which has a white crown on a red ground. The Princess, was evidently much fatigued by the time the function was over. Lady Helen Vincent was the beauty of the Drawing Room, and Lady Marjorie Carrington (who had the entrée with her mother Lady Carrington) was the most admired of the débutantes. The Duchess of Devonshire and Lady Spencer both looked very well indeed. The Queen spoke to several of the Corps Diplomatique, and to a few of the entrée people. The carriages were grievously shabby, with a few distinguished exceptions, notably the equipages of the Russian Ambassador, the Dukes of Devonshire, Norfolk, and Richmond and Gordon, and Lord Carrington. Hired broughams and hired servants were the rule, and one "unimpeachable female" positively went to Court in a four-wheeled cab!

The second Drawing Room is to be held on Friday, the 11th inst., by the Princess of Wales, who, with Princess Victoria, leaves Sandringham next week for the season. After the Drawing Room the Princess and her daughter will proceed to Copenhagen until the end of April, and the Empress Dowager of Russia and the younger members of her family are also expected there the week after next. Princess Charles of Denmark, who has been suffering from rheumatism, will probably go to Wiesbaden at the end of April for a course of the waters, and King Christian is to be there at the same time.

There is no foundation whatever for the statement of a contemporary that the Queen has been invited to attend the coronation of the Queen of the Netherlands, and it is also utterly untrue that an invitation has been sent to the German Emperor. It would be a flagrant breach of etiquette for any reigning Sovereigns to attend at a Foreign Court on such an occasion, unless they happened to be very near relatives. The Queen will be represented by the Prince and Princess of Wales, and Prince and Princess Albert of Prussia are to attend on the part of the German Emperor and Empress.

Following on what I said last week respecting the Duke of Coburg's recent voyage from Malta to Alexandria in the Surprise, I see it is announced that one of her Majesty's ships will again be placed at the service of the Duke when he returns from Egypt. Considering that he is now a German kinglet, this practice of conveying the Duke on his holiday jaunts at the cost of the British taxpayer is a very questionable, not to say impudent, piece of business; and it is high time a protest was entered against it.

The Empress Frederick, who is still at Berlin, has postponed her trip to England until the first week in May, when she will arrive at Windsor Castle on a visit to the Queen. The Empress is to stay at Windsor until her Majesty goes to Scotland about May 20, and she will then come to Buckingham Palace for a week, after which she is to spend a few days at Sandringham with the Prince and Princess of Wales before leaving for Germany to pass the summer at Friedrichshof. The Hereditary Princess of Saxe-Meiningen and her daughter, Princess Feodore, and Princess Henry of Prussia, will accompany the Empress to England.

The attempt on the life of the King of Greece is a deplorable incident, and every one must rejoice that it miscarried—more especially as it seems to have given the King an opportunity of showing his pluck and self-possession in the face of imminent danger. When, however, Canon MacColl writes to the papers to lay a portion of the blame for this occurrence upon "those persons in this country who have been for some time making accusations against his Majesty," he is as wild and reckless in his aim as the assassins who fired six rifle shots at the King, almost point blank, without getting nearer the mark than the footman's legs. As TRUTH is the only prominent paper in which any accusation against the King has been made, I take it that the Canon's observations are intended as a rebuke and a warning to me. If so, they are absurd. The charges of a treacherous intrigue in connection with the late war that have been made against the Greek Court have long been current in Greece, and there is ample evidence to support them. To suggest that the plot against the King's life was prompted, not by what was known and believed in Greece, but by something which appeared in an English newspaper, is as ridiculous as it would be to suggest that facts unfavourable to a Royal personage ought to be suppressed, lest their publication should provoke some reckless fanatic to take the law into his own hands.

Last week brought an interval in the Dublin Castle season. Not only did all the visitors leave the Castle, but the Viceregal host and hostess betook themselves to London. The unusual sight was offered of Dublin Castle, during the season, without the Royal Standard floating over it for an entire week. Three non-Catholic Lord Justices were sworn in as deputies during the Lord Lieutenant's absence, the assistants at the ceremonial being, strange to say—that is, if anything can be considered strange for Dublin Castle—two Catholic Privy Councillors. With regard to the Privy Councillors, from whose ranks the representatives of the absent Lord Lieutenant are always taken, the case is one of "Turk, Jew, or Atheist, but not a Papist." Why the Catholic Privy Councillors accept this peculiar situation, considering that all creeds in Ireland are on an equality in the eyes of the State, is one of those mysteries that abound in Dublin Castle. It is one more proof that the Irish Catholics are a long-suffering rather than an aggressive body, though a dying-out Protestant Ascendancy affects to believe them the latter.

This week the Castle season resumes its course, a concert and large ball being amongst the entertainments to be given. Lord and Lady Cadogan will again receive a succession of visitors, the last party of them assembling for St. Patrick's Ball, held on the festival of the national saint, March 17. As the saints of early times were not particularly favourable to dancing, it is curious that St. Patrick should be commemorated by a ball. No doubt the words of the national air "St. Patrick's Day," one verse of which commences

> "We will be merry
> All drinking our sherry," are responsible for the festive idea.

Lady Rachel Butler was well known in Society in Dublin, where she lived for many years until the death of her husband, Lord James Butler. In his young days Lord James Butler was a military member of the Viceregal staff; afterwards, during the first Viceroyalty of his brother-in-law, the Duke of Abercorn, he held the post of State Steward at Dublin Castle. Lady Rachel Butler's only daughter died in Ireland little more than a week before her mother. The Dowager Duchess of Abercorn is an elder sister of Lady Rachel Butler.

Although Lord Cadogan is not himself a hunting man, the noble sport does not want for Viceregal patronage under his rule. Quite a squadron of mighty hunters and huntresses—sometimes joined by Lady Cadogan—sets out every morning from Dublin Castle. This week the Army point-to-point races take place in Kildare on Wednesday. Lord Cadogan has presented a handsome cup for the occasion. A large Viceregal party will be present.

The Duke of Richmond and Gordon came up from Goodwood for the Drawing Room in compliance with the rule which requires attendance at the first function over which the Queen herself presides after a visit to any of the Palaces. The Duke was her Majesty's guest at Balmoral last autumn for several days.

The season in Malta has been a gay one, notwithstanding unusually bad weather—for such a southern clime—and the rumours of wars and sudden movements of ships and troops. Sir Arthur Fremantle has been having visitors at the Palace during the season. Lady Mary Sackville has been staying with her sister, Lady Edeline Strickland. As in other Catholic countries, dancing ends in Malta with the beginning of Lent. The season was accordingly brought to a close, so far as concerns balls, by the customary fancy-dress ball at the Palace, given by Sir Arthur and Lady Fremantle on Shrove Tuesday.

It may interest any of my readers returning home from Italy or the Riviera to know that, in the event of the "Rome" or "Mediterranean" express trains de luxe reaching Paris too late for the mid-day train running in connection with the 3.45 p.m. boat from Boulogne, they are now sent on at once to Boulogne, where they arrive at 5.20 p.m. This arrangement enables passengers desirous of arriving in London the same night to dine at Boulogne, and then join the 7.50 p.m. boat in connection with the 3.45 p.m. train from Paris. There was a time when the privilege of dining at Boulogne would not have been valued very highly; but since the notorious buffet at that place has been taken over by the South-Eastern Railway Company, matters have greatly improved, and it will no doubt be a great convenience to travellers from the South to be able to dine there in comfort and reach London before midnight.

Mrs. Goschen, whose death is lamented by a very large circle of friends, was a remarkably clever woman, with much force of character, and she will be an irreparable loss to her husband, for whom the utmost sympathy is universally felt.

My attention has been called to the remarkable historical parallel formed by the two passages given below. The first is taken from one of last week's evening papers; the second from one of our great English classics:—

(1) Probably in view of the serious situation in West Africa, Mr. Chamberlain remained in town for the week-end. It is stated that the right honourable gentleman attended Her Majesty's Theatre on Saturday night with Mrs. Chamberlain, and in connection with his visit a curious incident occurred. During the performance some one drove up hastily to the theatre and sent his card to Mr. Chamberlain, who at once left his box and remained for several minutes in conversation with his visitor. The right honourable gentleman then returned to his seat, whispered to Mrs. Chamberlain, and they both left the theatre. The incident is said to have attracted much attention.

(2) "My boy always rushes into church just before the psalms, when the people have got nothing to do but look about 'em, and calls me out, with horror and dismay depicted on his countenance. 'Bless my soul,' everybody says, 'somebody taken suddenly ill! Sawyer, late Nockemorf, sent for. What a business that young man has!'"

The tenant of some garden ground on a certain East Anglian estate has just been sharply reminded that kotowing to the landlord's agent, though not mentioned in the agreement, was nevertheless an indispensable condition of his tenancy. For a long time this tenant, a small shopkeeper, was in the habit of touching his hat to the agent, but observing that the salutation was haughtily ignored, he ventured to drop it, whereupon he was at once served with notice to quit his ground. The agent in question is a scion of the aristocracy, and though he has to work for his own livelihood, like a mere plebeian, he is evidently determined that nobody shall omit the obsequious attention due to a man of his exalted pedigree.

In connection with the public claim to a right-of-way in Charleville-lane, near Uxbridge, I understand from the secretary of the Uxbridge Centre of the Commons' Preservation Society, that a fund is being raised for the defence of the men against whom Lord Hillingdon has commenced an action. All the defendants are poor men, and in the public interest it is very desirable that they should be assisted, so that the question at issue can be properly fought out.

Apropos of the refusal to allow the use of the Morpeth Town Hall for the Morpeth Hunt Ball unless on condition that no alcoholic drinks were consumed, I am told that a certain hall in the North of London, owned by a temperance lecturer, is frequently let for balls and other entertainments on the same condition, and that the restriction rather popularises the use of the hall for this purpose than otherwise. Very possibly; but the cases are by no means parallel. If people want to give a ball in London, they are not restricted to the use of any particular hall. Many people may be pleased to give, or to go to, an entertainment on temperance lines, and I am not saying that such an entertainment may not be quite as attractive and enjoyable as one where wines and spirits are supplied. But what I object to, and what seems to me legitimate ground for objection, is that where temperance people happen to have the whip hand they should endeavour to use it for the purpose of compelling those who disagree with them to conform to their ideas.

From a statement in the Daily Mail, it appears that New Zealand has already followed the example of Australia in stopping its contribution to the Imperial Institute. Whether the whole amount has been withdrawn is not stated for certain; but, at any rate, the Government has withdrawn from Parliament this year a vote of £200, which appears to be the whole amount recently given. It therefore appears that three colonies have withdrawn, or are threatening to withdraw. A fourth, South Australia, has, I believe, definitely refused to contribute; while many others are in arrears with their subscriptions, and some, if I am not mistaken, although they made promises, have never paid up. If the various dependencies of the Empire take up this attitude, the Imperial Institute loses not only a large slice of its exiguous revenue, but its very raison d'être. An "Imperial Institute of the United Kingdom and the Colonies" which is boycotted by the colonies is a contradiction in terms.

I agree with the writer of the following letter in not being an admirer of the Boadicea group. The Queen is in a car, which is drawn by two rearing horses. They are standing on their hind legs, and pawing the air with their fore legs. One of these animals turns his neck to the right and the other to the left. The Sovereign does not guide them, for there are no reins. Behind her are two females. What they are doing is not clear. They are massive ladies, and (to put it delicately) they are the reverse of top-heavy. Looking at the group from the front, the fore legs of the horses give a spectator the idea of a mass of metal entirely unconnected with the horses. I can only say that if the Queen really did go in advance of her troops in this sort of car, with two horses attached to it without reins, it is no wonder that her army was defeated:—

Will you allow me to ask in TRUTH if it is too late for further consideration as to whether the proposed Boadicea statue group is all that could be desired, and worthy of the subject, the site, and the art of the period at which it is to be erected? It seems to me that the sculptor, in trying to realise heroic grandeur, has treated his subject in too classical a spirit altogether, and has, moreover, not carried out, with sufficient faithfulness to the true principles of art, the substantial embodiment of idealised historical action. There should be grace, harmony, and consistency of detail in combination with the strength and passion which the grouping is intended to illustrate as seen from every point, otherwise the lessons of inspiration and good taste, which truth and beauty in design inculcate, are not effectually taught by the work. The work, in fact, becomes merely a temptation to criticism, and its purpose is lost sight of. I do not deny that there are many good points in this work, but I do think it might be very greatly improved.

A BEAUTIFUL HOTEL AT BOURNEMOUTH.—The "ROYAL BATH." "Hôtel de Luxe of the South." Sea frontage, 1,000 ft.; grounds, 5 acres. Due south. Only Hotel on East Cliff. Moderate fixed tariff.

As to the equestrian side of it, the horses are of too conventional a type. There is too much of the Grecian temple frieze about them, and, seen in profile, their bodies are too light for their necks and heads. If they were made to appear to be starting, with less uniformity of action, and one of them biting at the other, with his forefeet down, the props, which are always a great disfigurement, might be dispensed with; and, as it is common for horses at starting to bear on each other, they might be joined to make the one with his forefeet down support the other. Again, the horses are too thoroughbred for the period; they require to be sturdier, and much less might be made of their tails.

The figure of Boadicea should, I think, be robed more closely; the flying drapery leaving the bent back bare, has a very peculiar appearance in a profile view of the group. The Queen should grasp the reins with her left hand, and her attitude would be more consistent with the action and the pace at which the horses would start, if she were turning to beckon her followers with her spear, as it were, after a final harangue, before plunging into the fray. With regard to the two daughters, cowering one on either side of their mother, and holding on to the chariot, I venture to think nothing could be more defective in design as seen from the back of the figures. It surely is not too late to vary their attitudes, and, at the same time, make their physical proportions here and there less uniform.

"The drama's laws the drama's patrons give." At Gateshead, one night last week, the stage of the Standard Theatre was given up to—"a beef-dressing competition for £50 a side." There was a very large audience at this elevating entertainment, and the performers were loudly applauded. The carcasses of four fat bullocks, slaughtered for the occasion, were skinned and dressed by the rival butchers in the sight of the appreciative audience, who were freely betting on the result of the contest. I can understand butchers and meat-salesmen being interested in such a spectacle, but how anybody else could find a pleasure in witnessing it passes my comprehension. It seems to have been looked upon at Gateshead as a piece of sport. If this is sport, then I thank goodness I am not a sportsman.

It is to be hoped that few literary men—and if any, only those of the minor fry—will sign Mr. Christie Murray's appeal to the French Government to reconsider the verdict and the sentence on M. Zola. In the appeal, it is stated that the verdict of the civilised world beyond the French borders is opposed to that of the jury; that the sentence is a vindictive one; that M. Zola has been moved alone by a sense of duty, and that "we" (the signatories) have watched the case now closed with painful and anxious interest. Assuming that Zola's sentence ought to be reduced, I can conceive nothing more likely to render this improbable than that such an address should be sent by the literary men of this country to France. Mr. Murray may have watched the case with painful and anxious interest, but I doubt whether a dozen literary men in England have read all the facts connected with it, and even if they have, they cannot tell by what motives Zola was actuated; unless it is to be laid down that, whenever a novelist declares a sentence of the Courts of his country to have been the result of a conspiracy against justice, he is actuated by the noblest of motives. A more foolish proposal, in the interest of Zola himself, could not be made.

A stained-glass window is to be placed in the retro-choir of Lincoln Cathedral as a County memorial of Lord Tennyson. It is hoped that a sufficient sum will be subscribed to provide also either a bust or a medallion portrait.

This year's Romanes Lecture is to be delivered in the Sheldonian Theatre at Oxford, on June 1, by Sir Archibald Geikie, whose subject is "Types of Scenery and their Influence on Literature."

Dean Lake has left £1,000 to Newcastle College for the foundation of a theological lectureship. If the late Dean desired to benefit practically an institution in which he took a most hearty interest, it is a pity that he did not leave the money at the free disposal of the President and Council; but the bequest of so inadequate a sum as £1,000 for a lectureship on any subject whatever is simply embarrassing, as the income will be something under £30 a year, which is not a remuneration calculated to attract any one whose discourses would be of any value. It is difficult, moreover, to understand how a lectureship in theology can possibly be established in a college which is most strictly undenominational. Even if this difficulty were overcome, how many students would be likely to attend the (inevitably) flabby and colourless lectures which would be provided?

The Oriel College living of Plymtree, Devon, has been given by the Provost and Fellows to the Rev. Edgar Hay Hay, rector of Carlton Colville. This benefice was held for twelve years (1868–80) by the Rev. Thomas Mozley, the celebrated Times leader writer, and author of the interesting "Reminiscences of Oriel" and other successful works. Mr. Mozley's predecessor at Plymtree was the Rev. Joseph Dornford, who was one of the early leaders of the Tractarian Movement at Oxford, and a tutor at Oriel in the most palmy days of that College, when Newman Hurrell, Froude, and Robert Wilberforce were his colleagues. There is a most entertaining account of Dornford in Mozley's Reminiscences. He was a very brilliant man, but decidedly eccentric. Dornford once had occasion to call upon Bishop Phillpotts, and he appeared at the palace arrayed in white trousers. "Mr. Dornford," said Henry of Exeter, "are those white trousers quite clerical?" "My lord, they must have washed white." "Then, I presume," replied the prelate, "that your neck-cloth has washed black."

During Lent the pulpit of the Chapel Royal, St. James's Palace, is filled on Sundays by a succession of prelates nominated by the Bishop of London (a Dean of the Chapel), whose list is always sent to the Queen for approval before it is printed. The Bishop Suffragan of Stepney preaches next Sunday, the Bishop of Bristol on the 13th, the Bishop of Wakefield on the 20th, the Bishop of St. Andrew's on the 27th, the Archbishop of York on April 3, and the Bishop of Ely (Lord High Almoner to the Queen) on April 10 (Easter Day), unless he is out of town, in which case his place will be taken by Canon Eyton, the sub-Almoner. The Dean of Westminster is to preach on Good Friday.

Bishop Billing literally killed himself by hard work, which made him a hopeless wreck before he was sixty. He became famous by his able and thorough administration of the great parish of Spitalfields, where he laboured for many years like a Hercules, being at the same time in constant demand all over London as a platform speaker, and as a manager of all kinds of Church societies, for he was a first-rate organiser and administrator. The late Bishop was for a long time one of the leaders of the Evangelical party, and he was an admirable preacher. It was considered discreditable that no recognition should have been made of his excellent work until 1888, when the present Primate nominated him as one of his candidates for the Suffragan Bishopric of Bedford, in the place of the late Bishop of Wakefield. It was well known at the time that the name of Archdeacon Sandford, of Exeter, was also sent up to the Queen by Bishop Temple, who placed his friend first, in the expectation that her Majesty would select him, in accordance with the usual practice. The Queen, however, considered—and very properly—that a London clergyman was the right person to fill this post. Dr. Billing became a zealous and a popular prelate, fully maintaining the office at the very high standard to which Dr. Walsham How had raised it, and his success was the more creditable to him, inasmuch as it required considerable tact and savoir-faire to work well with Bishop Temple. The Bishop began his career as a very decided Low Churchman, but he mellowed considerably after his removal to London, and his relations with the High Church party were always most harmonious, while he displayed not a particle of favouritism as a prelate in any sort of way.

The deepest regret is felt in the Isle of Wight at the death of the Rev. C. I. Burland, Vicar of St. Saviour's, Shanklin, who was held in the highest respect by all who knew him. Mr. Burland, who had been Vicar of St. Saviour's for more than thirty years, was honorary chaplain to the Princess Beatrice's Isle of Wight Volunteers at the time the late Prince Henry of Battenberg accepted the honorary colonelcy. The living of St. Saviour's is in the gift of the Vicar of Shanklin.

An incident at Llandudno illustrates what my musical critic lately said as to the inconsiderate treatment which Church organists sometimes experience at the hands of the clergy. Last Christmas the organist at a Llandudno church trained the choir to perform Bach's Christmas Oratorio, and the date of the performance was duly advertised. These preparations were made with the approval of the parson, but at the last moment he forbade the performance, simply because he was affronted at the absence of certain choir-men from the early choral celebration on Christmas Day. When the organist was recently asked to arrange for some Passion-music on Good Friday, he naturally desired to have some assurance that the previous fiasco would not be repeated. To this request the clergyman replied by at once dismissing him from his post; his reverence evidently holding, like not a few of his brethren, that an organist and choir ought to submit humbly, and without murmuring, to any behest of his, however arbitrary and unreasonable it may be.

Four members of the choir of St. Luke's Church, Maidenhead, so far forgot their duty as to attend a lecture by a Wesleyan minister in the Town Hall, and on the following Sunday they went to hear him preach in the chapel. For these heinous offences they were sharply reprimanded by the indignant vicar to whose congregation they belonged, and this ecclesiastic demanded from the erring ones "a distinct assurance that this kind of thing would not occur again." The intolerance and arrogance of a great majority of the Anglican clergy are really beyond all bounds. In many country places members of the Church choir are required to give a solemn promise not to enter a Dissenting place of worship. I remember hearing of some choir boys who had presumed to take part in a Wesleyan school treat, and who were made to do public penance for the outrage on the following Sunday. They entered the church with the choir, but arrayed merely in their black cassocks, and during the service they sat in prominently placed seats of repentance, a warning to future misdoers. On that occasion, however, the reverend fanatic who was responsible for all the fuss found his conduct questioned by the father of one of the culprits, who threatened to "punch his head" if ever his son was thus "insulted" again, the result being that the whole family went over bag and baggage to the neighbouring chapel, and the quondam choir boy is now a Wesleyan Evangelist.

The man Widdows, ex-monk and Protestant lecturer, against whom I have repeatedly warned credulous Protestants, ventured at a meeting at Cardiff last week to answer TRUTH by making five statements. Out of these five statements three were absolutely false, one was partially true, and the remaining one a fact of no significance. From what I have heard of him, I should imagine that the proportion of truth to falsehood in this case is that which is usually to be found in the statements of Widdows. It is an astonishing thing that the more rabid enemies of the Church of Rome should bring themselves into discredit by encouraging anti-Popery lecturers whose methods are so unscrupulous, and whose antecedents are so shady.

A sequel to the strange story I told last week of the sale of the American Cemetery at Jerusalem has since reached me. It was represented by the American missionaries and the American Consul that the bodies of the dead had been reverently and carefully exhumed and removed to the English Cemetery. Owing to the action taken by Lord Salisbury at the instance of the friends of one of the dead, the truth of this statement has now been put to the test. The pit in which the bodies had been reburied at the English Cemetery was opened, with the object of recovering possession of the remains of a British officer and subject, and the result was a most ghastly discovery. All the bodies had been broken up and packed in small wooden boxes, so that neither in the case of this officer nor in any other case was there any means of identification. Both the sale of the cemetery and the removal of the corpses appear to have been carried out in a manner disgraceful in the extreme to those responsible for what was done, and exceedingly painful to the relatives and friends of the dead.

Messrs. Lunn & Perowne are a very enterprising firm, and now that they no longer pose as apostles of religion disguised as tourist agents, I have the greatest admiration for their enterprise. My admiration, however, does not extend to the high dignitaries of the Church who lend themselves to this enterprising firm as advertising agents. Advertisements are now being distributed in all directions notifying that on one of the forthcoming Lunn & Perowne tours, the Bishop of Carlisle, among other distinguished individuals, will be one of the lecturers. The Bishop is, I presume, paid for the job—in kind, if not in cash. He is one of the attractions on the bill, and no doubt he earns his remuneration. But is it a becoming position for a high ecclesiastic to occupy? If it is, Mr. Whiteley and other leading tradesmen should lose no time in engaging other equally distinguished ecclesiastics to co-operate in their own particular lines of business.

When one comes to think of it, this is an idea capable of very extensive development. Not long ago a Scottish divine achieved fame by letting out the galleries and walls of his church as advertising spaces, and I believe the same thing has been done in America. Even more effective would be the introduction of judicious advertisements into pulpit oratory. Imagine the effect of some great preacher —a Haweis or a Parker—pausing in his discourse to impress upon his hearers the virtue of Vinolia soap, or Beecham's pills! I do not say that this should be done as a regular thing for the purpose of adding to the preacher's stipend, or the funds of the church; but it might be very effective in charity sermons, and would not be worse than many of the sins which charity already covers.

I am glad to give a word of welcome to the new edition of the "Annual Charities Register and Digest," which Messrs. Longmans, Green, & Co. publish for the C.O.S. There is scarcely any work which I have to consult more frequently, and there is none to which I turn with greater reliance upon its accuracy. Mr. C. S. Loch supplies a general introduction, dealing with a variety of poor law and charitable questions, and the special introductions to many of the sections or groups of charities also form a valuable feature of the Register. With this publication, and with the arrival also of "Kelly's Handbook to the Titled, Landed, and Official Classes," and "Walford's County Families," my collection of reference books for the present year is, I think, pretty well complete. In its special line each of the latter is an invaluable work.

An answer has now been given to the question I lately asked, in reference to the name of the trust fund of £5,000 which has been applied to the purpose of the Wesley House scheme. The trust in question is one known as the Angel-alley or Wilson-street Trust, and, according to a Wesleyan correspondent, its history is somewhat curious. It seems that a generation or so ago some Wesleyans started a mission school and evangelistic work in Angel-alley, near Old Bishopsgate, and appealed for subscriptions for the purchase of the premises. Soon after the purchase was effected, a railway company required the property and paid £6,900 for it, and this formed the original capital of the trust, which, by loans and grants to various charitable works, has since been reduced to the £5,000 now handed over to Wesley House. It is clear from this that the fund is the outcome of the appeal made in the first place for the slum mission work in Angel-alley; and, to say the least, it is exceedingly questionable whether money so derived can be properly devoted to the totally different object of maintaining a Methodist museum at Wesley House—an object which, if it had excited any real interest in the Connexion, would have been attained by personal subscriptions and donations. In the circumstances, it seems highly desirable that the terms of the Angel-alley trust deed should be published.

I have never been able to see much virtue, or much charity in the true sense, in the pious benefactor, who, not being able to take his riches with him when he departs this life, and having had all he can get out of them while here below, bestows them all in charity at the expense of his relatives when the time comes for him to depart. At the best it is an easy way of getting posthumous credit for a generosity which has never been exhibited during life, and very often it is a mere excuse for gratifying some feeling of spite. A good example of this is shown in a case which has recently been noticed in the Press—the case of the Rev. E. N. Pochin, who died leaving the whole of a fortune of about £109,000 to the British and Foreign Bible Society. As the reverend testator had left a widow and three children utterly unprovided for, the Bible Society were good enough to make over to them one half of the legacy — a circumstance for which they have got quite as much credit as they were entitled to. The fact was that Mr. Pochin, having married a wealthy woman, and amassed a handsome fortune by the use of her money, treated her so abominably that she had to leave him, and for twenty-two years gave not a halfpenny to her or his children beyond what he paid under compulsion of law. He lived in the meantime a disreputable life, and has rounded off his existence by the noble act of bequeathing everything he possessed to a religious society, in order to place it out of the reach of his wife and children. A more striking illustration has rarely been given of the spirit which occasionally animates such benefactions. Neither does it seem to me that the Bible Society are entitled to very much credit for having returned a share of the bequest to the deceased man's dependants.

There is no institution of the same class in London for which I have more sympathy than the Hospital for Sick Children, Great Ormond-street, and I am therefore glad to give publicity to the appeal which is now being made to pay for a large extension of the Hospital premises. Owing to a proposal to rebuild the adjoining Hospital of St. John and St. Elizabeth, which would have gravely affected the light and air of the Children's Hospital, and destroyed its utility in other ways, the bold step has been taken by the managers of the Children's Hospital of buying out the adjoining institution. The purchase affords an opportunity for a much-needed enlargement of the Children's Hospital, which will greatly improve the accommodation of the nurses—an improvement urgently required—besides enlarging the wards. For this purpose, however, the sum of £30,000 has to be paid, one-third of it by April 28 next. There is the strongest need, therefore, for the benevolent public to come at this juncture to the assistance of the Hospital management.

The fact that a cheque for £50 has reached me in aid of the deficit in the Truth Toy Fund from a "Traveller on the Nile," seems to me of exceptional interest. The letter containing the donation was written on one of Messrs. Cook's Nile steamboats, and is dated "Dahabeah Cheops, off Assouan." Charity begins at home, we are told, but in this case it has been continued with excellent effect from abroad. I hope other travellers, on the Nile and elsewhere, will soon give me an opportunity for making a similarly grateful acknowledgment. I have also received £5 from Mr. John C. Bumsted, of King William-street, E.C. Mr. Bumsted, I may add, is a member of the Board of Management of Earlswood Asylum, and his contribution is a particularly exemplary one, which might well be imitated by many of those connected with the management of the hospitals and other charities which have for many years past been receiving Truth toys and dolls.

Attention has been more than once called in Truth to the unauthorised collection of funds for widows, orphans, sick, and others of the Fire Brigade. Commander Wells has taken the matter up, and is engaged in seeking to obtain funds to provide money for a General Benefit Club. The Chairman and the Clerk of the L.C.C., the Hon. G. Hill Trevor, and Mr. Mackworth Praed are the trustees. On Tuesday afternoon, March 15, there is to be a dramatic entertainment at the Haymarket Theatre in aid of the fund. Those who cannot go to it would do well to send money to Commander Wells. Appreciation of the Fire Brigade is all very well, but to be practical it should take a monetary form.

I presume that the question asked last week respecting the alleged traffic in Volunteer commissions, and a recent incident of such traffic in the case of one of the Metropolitan Volunteer Corps, had reference to the honorary colonelcy of the 22nd Middlesex, which was referred to in Truth of December 23. It will be remembered that the case came to light in the course of a prosecution for libel at the Old Bailey, where it appeared that Colonel A. J. G. Kane had undertaken to obtain an honorary colonelcy for a well-known West Australian financier at the price of £600, £400 to go into the regimental funds, and £200 to be the negotiator's commission. It appears that the matter has been inquired into at the War Office, and that the appointment of "an Honorary Colonel"—presumably the Honorary Colonel above referred to—has been cancelled. This is well as far as it goes, but it is a pity that the War Office cannot go to the root of the evil and make such provision for the financing of Volunteer regiments as would obviate the necessity for obtaining wealthy men, and none but wealthy men, as Colonels.

One episode of the North-Western Frontier operations which ought not to be lost sight of is the Tochi Expedition. The force for this expedition was, I think, made up of four regiments. Virtually they have had no fighting at all, and some explanation would seem to be needed, under such circumstances, of the dispatch of a brigade to a spot so remote from the scene of the more critical operations. On the other hand, unstinted honour and glory have been heaped upon the Staff of the force. A despatch published in the middle of January actually mentioned the name of every single officer on the Headquarters Staff, even down to a youngster who only went out as an orderly officer in October, when all the hardest part of the work had been got over. A more conspicuous example has not been seen for a long time of the ridiculous extent to which modern Generals laud the services of their own entourage, to the exclusion of the regimental officers and others who often do the hardest work and bear the burden and heat of the day.

It may be safely said that of all the officers selected for honourable mention in connection with the Tochi Valley Expedition, the only men who thoroughly earned such distinction are the Medical Officers. For reasons which require further elucidation, the force suffered from sickness to an amazing extent, and two out of the four regiments had to be sent back to India decimated by disease. It was stated by Mr. Brodrick last week, in answer to a question on the subject, that the 3rd Battalion Rifle Brigade lost, in the four months ending December 31, 102 men, besides a considerable number invalided. My own information is that the deaths amounted to three officers and nearly 150 men. There is good reason to suppose that this deplorable loss of life was mainly due to the ill-advised selection of the site for the camp, which was close to a native burial ground which polluted the water-supply; and I am told that the Medical Officer of the Rifle Brigade called the attention of higher authorities to the danger, but in vain. The whole management of the Tochi Expedition ought to be made the subject of a special inquiry.

In view of occurrences such as the above, the following extract from "The Soldier's Pocketbook" is decidedly apropos:—

> The sanitary officer is a creation of recent years, and, as a general rule, he is a very useless functionary. In the numerous campaigns where I have served with a sanitary officer, I can conscientiously state that I have never known him make any useful suggestion, whereas I have known him make silly ones. In future, as long as the fad continues, my recommendation is to leave him at the base. . . . .

Such are the enlightened views of our Commander-in-Chief upon a matter which may involve the health of hundreds of men and the efficiency of a whole brigade.

As most of the facts respecting the Indian Government in my last week's article on the Frontier Fiasco were derived from experts, it goes almost without saying that they have been contradicted in one or two particulars by other experts. With all respect, however, I cannot see that the contradiction comes to much. For instance, I am told that the Viceroy is the real Foreign Minister of India, and that, consequently, the Foreign Department has its head in the Council. To this my answer would be that, great as are the objections in England to the combination of the offices of Premier and Foreign Secretary in one Minister, they must be infinitely greater in India, where the Viceroy has a vast number of executive duties to perform which do not fall to the English Prime Minister. The fact that the Viceroy is virtually Foreign Minister of India seems to me only to strengthen the case as stated in last week's TRUTH.

Again, I am taken to task for having alluded to the Indian Foreign Secretary as a "clerk." He is, I am told, always "a member of the Bengal Civil Service"; a man who will always have held a dozen other high offices before he rises to the position of Foreign Secretary, and who will blossom forth from that position to the still more exalted one of Lieutenant-Governor. Really, I cannot see that this is more than a question of names, but if any Civil Servant feels hurt at being called a "clerk," I cheerfully withdraw the offending term.

There was one inaccuracy in my last week's article, which I hasten to correct. It was said that when the first news came of the Afridi rising, and orders were sent for the movements of troops, one regiment at Rawalpindi received its orders at mid-day, and was on the march the same night. This incident, I find, did not occur at the first outbreak, but later on. The correction, however, has no material bearing upon the situation, one way or the other.

It would be interesting to know the precise origin of the Reuter telegram from Peshawur, which found its way into some of the English papers last week, and purported to convey the views of the troops at Peshawur in reference to the recent articles in TRUTH upon the Frontier campaign. The style of the writer is peculiar. He begins:—

> Great indignation prevails throughout the Tirah Field Force at the charges made by anonymous correspondents in TRUTH on January 27 and February 3. It is pointed out that these statements are quite misleading, &c.

The statement "great indignation prevails" is utterly irreconcilable with the communications that have reached me from the Tirah Field Force; and the phrase "it is pointed out" suggests that the correspondent is transmitting something directly communicated to him by one or more individuals rather than the general sentiments of the officers and troops. When he goes on to specify what is "pointed out" as misleading, he does not improve matters. He devotes some space to denying that the Tirah Field Force consisted of 50,000 men—a statement which I cannot find that I or any correspondent whom I have quoted has made; and he then goes on to argue that the baggage-train was not in excess of the requirements of the troops, which does not go to the root of the matter, and does not coincide with the opinion of competent military observers on the spot.

And what end is to be served by publishing such bunkum as this?—

> The force is thoroughly fit and inspired with complete confidence in its commanders, and challenges its calumniators in the Home and Indian Press to publish their names and substantiate their charges.
> The conduct of officers in writing anonymously in the papers is condemned as cowardly and unsoldierlike, inasmuch as the writers well know that the military regulations prohibit those vilified from replying.

If it is against the rules for "those vilified" to reply, what is the use of challenging the vilifiers to publish their names? If it is impossible for the vilified to reply, how do they manage to send their reply to the whole of the English Press through the columns of Reuter? Really, this is a little too thin. Any officer who desired to make a reply could have done it in TRUTH as easily as through Reuter, and even if TRUTH failed to do him justice, there are dozens of other papers which would be perfectly ready to hear him. The channels which are open to one officer, or twenty officers, are open to all.

The author of this Reuter telegram, and those who have inspired him, know perfectly well that the unanimous criticism of the Indian Press, equally with the correspondence that has appeared in TRUTH, merely reflects the prevailing feeling among all ranks of the forces that have taken part in the Frontier campaign. The best answer to Reuter is that all the ugliest facts that have appeared, whether in the Indian papers or TRUTH, are vouched for by the letters of officers in the field, acting openly as newspaper correspondents, and writing with the sanction and under the censorship of the military authorities. In the face of this, it is futile to suggest that any material facts have been misrepresented. Whether the criticism founded on those facts has been unjust or unfair, every military reader, and every civilian of any intelligence, can judge for himself. So far from rehabilitating the reputation of the Staff on the Frontier, the Reuter despatch, with its flimsy evasions and its whining appeal on behalf of parties who are perfectly able to take care of themselves, is only calculated to discredit them further.

The one useful purpose which this telegram seems to have served is to furnish the editor of the Globe with another opportunity of exhibiting his peculiar journalistic talents. Here is a passage which well illustrates his knowledge of what he is talking about :—

> Another venomous statement to which currency was given by the same egregious paper was that the retirement through the Bara Valley amounted to nothing less than a sauve qui peut—that is, a disorderly and demoralised flight. What is the truth? The retrograde march through one of the most difficult countries in the world was carried out with both skill and courage; there was hard fighting, it is true, from first to last, but all trustworthy accounts go to prove that the troops displayed splendid gallantry.

The phrase "sauve qui peut" was not mine, but was applied by one who had been through the "retrograde march," and ought to be as good a judge of the facts as any journalist in the Strand. No one has questioned the courage and gallantry of our troops, of any rank, and the facts that have appeared in TRUTH only serve to accentuate their admirable behaviour. But it is certainly not true that "there was hard fighting from first to last," seeing that perhaps the most successful feature in the operations was the "squaring"—or, as one of the Indian papers called it, the "buying off"—of the enemy by Colonel Warburton. It is a pity that the editor of the Globe was not aware of that trivial circumstance when he aired his virtuous indignation at those who have ventured to criticise the Staff and the Simla authorities.

An Irish officer offers the following contribution to the discussion on Army reform :—

> Some seventeen years ago, when the territorial system was theoretically first introduced into the Service, the recognition of the national claims of Ireland was specially provided for in the uniforms then appointed for Irish infantry regiments: the principal changes in dress then introduced being that the facings were to be green (and consequently the regimental colours also), and the lace of the shamrock pattern.
> These regulations were practically nullified for the following reason. By an old regulation, which was allowed to remain intact, all our Irish regiments, with the single exception of the "Connaught Rangers," being what is termed "Royal" regiments, retained their "Royal" or blue facings—the lace only being of the new pattern. Consequently, the plain intention of the new regulations was frustrated and one regiment only was permitted to bear the national colour on its facings and on its flag.
> What I propose is that we should now fully recognise the claims of Irish regiments from a national point of view, and give the Irish soldier a handsome, distinguishable green coat.

The idea does not seem a bad one, for it would probably do much to promote esprit de corps in the Irish regiments. At any rate, it has the advantage over most other measures of Army reform that are in the air at present, that it would cost very little.

In reference to a statement in last week's TRUTH that the Duke of Richmond had refused the Elgin Volunteers a site for a rifle range at Fochabers, a correspondent writes to say he "doubts very much" whether a "serious request" for a range there has ever been made. He thinks I ought to withdraw what I said. As I mentioned, however, my information was derived from the statement in the Aberdeen Journal, and it will require something more definite and authoritative than the "doubts" of my correspondent to convince me that the statements in that paper were unfounded.

May I suggest to the War Office that, while our military machinery is being overhauled, some definite age-limit should be assigned to the service of warrant and non-commissioned officers? I do not agree with all that I hear on this subject. Junior N.C.O.s, yearning for promotion, naturally think that every man, when he has earned his full pension, should at once be sent about his business. I have a letter before me now in which it is calmly proposed that no warrant or non-commissioned officer should be allowed to serve beyond twenty-one years. That is not to the interest of the taxpayer, and not necessarily to the interest of the Service. A man may complete twenty-one years before he is forty years of age, and he ought to be capable of good work for some years beyond that.

When, however, it comes to a man serving on beyond thirty years, the reasonable limit is certainly exceeded. I could point to one of the southern Depots where at the present moment there is a quartermaster-sergeant who has completed thirty-three years' service, and who has actually held his present rank since April, 1874; while another sergeant on the Militia Staff at the same Depot has completed twenty-eight years' service. Similar cases may be found at the great majority of the Depots. Not only do old stagers of this class block the promotion of other men who have a fair claim to it, but they must get rusty in their duties, and they cannot possibly be in touch with the latest ideas on the subject of drill, tactics, and soldiering generally. A commissioned officer is lucky in these days if he is allowed to remain on the active list beyond five-and-forty. I see no reason why the same rule should not apply to the warrant and non-commissioned ranks.

It seems to be occasionally the practice in India, when bandsmen are in hospital, for the bandmaster to give a hint to the senior surgeon that he wants men on some particular occasion, and for the obliging surgeon to comply by returning a few men to duty. Such a thing has more than once happened in the band of the Devonshire Regiment at Jullundur. On the last occasion, which occurred a few weeks back, several of the bandsmen had been attending the hospital after having been up at Peshawur, some of them having been on the Tirah Campaign. A communication was made by the bandmaster to one of the doctors, and on the following day all the bandsmen, with one exception, were returned to duty. It must be assumed, of course, that the doctor really considered that the men were in a fit condition to rejoin the band, and I suppose that a man, although in the doctor's hands, might play a trombone or a euphonium for a few hours without serious risk; but a doctor ought hardly to be influenced in the performance of his duty by the wishes of any other officer, whatever his status.

Reference was made in TRUTH some few weeks back to the inadequate accommodation for the N.C.O.s at Cambridge Barracks, Woolwich. When the 2nd Middlesex arrived at these barracks recently, on their return from abroad, there was no accommodation available for some of the married N.C.O.s, and one man and his wife had to turn out and look for lodgings in the town at a moment's notice, although perfect strangers to the place. On the other hand, there are barrack labourers and others quartered in the barracks who have apparently no reason to be there, added to which there is, I fancy, other new barrack accommodation at Woolwich which is not yet fully occupied. It reflects no credit on the authorities responsible that a non-commissioned officer arriving with his regiment from India should be turned out in the streets to shift for himself and his family as best he can.

In a reference to Major Hanford-Flood, of the Queen's, in last week's TRUTH, it was stated by a slip of the pen that that officer had been passed over for promotion by a junior, who had been appointed to the command of the 1st Battalion. This is not so. The junior who passed over Major Hanford-Flood's head was appointed second in command of the 1st Battalion. By the way, it is a very extraordinary thing that no less than three majors (including two seconds in command) and four captains have retired from this regiment within about a year. Surely there must be something wrong at the bottom of this?

With all respect to our much aggrieved friend, the Army Medical Officer, I must say that a good deal of the evidence which comes to hand respecting his notions of administering justice does not convey a too favourable impression of his fitness for command. Here is a recent case in point. A corporal in the Medical Staff Corps at Netley, of fourteen years' service, who had been out on pass, came back to the hospital from his home about 5.30 a.m. to attend early morning parade. In his anxiety to be in time the man got into hospital a little too early, and went into one of the wards, where he sat down. He was seen there by the sergeant-major, reported, brought up on a charge of irregular conduct in sleeping in a hospital ward when on pass, and was reprimanded. As witnesses to the truth of his explanation he had a patient in the ward, and the orderly in charge of the corridor, who had seen him come in. He was not, however, allowed to call evidence, and his defence seems to have been absolutely ignored. Feeling naturally aggrieved, he endeavoured to make a complaint to his Commanding Officer, but was not allowed to see him. He then wrote a statement in writing and took it to his company officer with a request that it should be forwarded to the P.M.O. The answer was that his conduct was irregular, that the C.O. would not forward his complaint, and that if he made any further application upon the subject he would be placed under arrest. In the face of such arbitrary, if not illegal, conduct as this, it is not surprising that the staff at Netley figure so often in the columns of TRUTH.

Another instance of Medical Officers' justice came to hand the other day from Crete. For being absent without leave from 9.30 p.m. till 7 a.m. a first-class orderly, with six years' service, and over five years free from any entry, and having two good-conduct badges, was punished with seven days' confinement to barracks, and two days' loss of pay; while a second man for the same offence was punished with seventy-two hours' hard labour, and loss of two days' pay. Neither of these men was given the option of electing to be tried by court-martial, as required by the Queen's Regulations. The sentence in the first case is a particularly harsh one, as it carries with it the forfeiture of a conduct badge and one penny a day, together with the loss of corps pay at eightpence per diem during the time of confinement to barracks, besides spoiling for some time the man's chance of promotion. By the way, it would be interesting to know why a Medical Officer is occupying a portion of a house which does duty as a field hospital in Crete, while patients have on certain occasions had to sleep, and are even said to have been operated upon, in corridors.

In November last Private H. F. Phelps, of the 2nd Wiltshire Regiment, was convicted in the Royal Court of Guernsey, of highway robbery with violence, and sentenced to three years' penal servitude. There was a general impression that the conviction was one of those gross miscarriages of justice to which legal procedure in the Channel Islands so frequently lends itself. An extensively signed petition was forwarded to the Home Secretary, and resulted in a free pardon. Now, by the terms of the Queen's Regulations, Phelps' conviction necessitated his immediate discharge from the Army, which duly took place. One would have supposed that, upon the conviction being practically quashed by the Home Secretary, Phelps would have been at once reinstated. Up to the present time, however, nothing of the sort has been done, and it seems time to inquire what are the intentions of the military authorities in the matter. Under the circumstances, of course, Phelps leaves the Army without a character, and has therefore little chance of obtaining employment. There ought to be no hesitation about redressing this gross injustice.

Some of "Tommy's" grievances are very difficult for a civilian to understand. A most forcibly worded complaint has just come to hand from N Battery, Royal Horse Artillery, in India, in consequence of the following occurrence. In the course of a twenty-two miles' march on January 20 the horse ridden by one sergeant was found to be slightly galled. On the following day, when fourteen miles had to be traversed, the sergeant rode a different horse, but one which had recently been badly galled, and at the end of the day this animal was found to be slightly galled on the old place. Thereupon the officer commanding the battery ordered that on the next day this sergeant was to ride on an ammunition waggon. I gather that this is regarded as an intolerable indignity, for it is described as "utterly illegal," and an "unprecedented outrage.' Speaking for myself, however, if I had to do a march of twenty-two miles I would infinitely rather do it on an ammunition waggon than on a horse.

Another example of the hardships inflicted under the Aliens Order at Gibraltar, to which I referred a few weeks ago, has been brought under my notice. A stationer named Miller is anxious to keep under his roof his widowed sister and her three little children. He is a native, and so is his sister, but her husband was an alien, and, accordingly, on the expiration of a temporary six months' "permit," the woman and her children will be compelled to leave Gibraltar, and the only home open to them. However necessary it may be to restrict the number of aliens admitted to the Rock, the order might surely be relaxed in a case like this—more especially as it is notorious that whilst this poor widow and her children are driven away, hundreds of aliens by birth, not merely by marriage, are allowed to remain with their families quite unmolested.

Two or three years ago attention was called in TRUTH to the "shebbeening" that was going on in sergeants' messes on Sundays in different parts of the kingdom; and there seemed reason to suppose that the result was a considerable abatement of the evil. I hear, however, that it still prevails in Ireland, and Tralee is mentioned as a place where it particularly flourishes. A competent witness tells me that any civilian can get beer at the military messes and canteens at Tralee at any time on Sunday when they are open, and that the privilege is extensively used. Such a trade does a great deal of harm, is very unfair to the civilian publican, and generally disgraceful to the military authorities, who must be very blind indeed if they are unaware of it.

With respect to the paragraph in TRUTH of February 17, concerning the refusal to lend a gun-carriage for the funeral of a man belonging to the Poona Punitive Police, an officer of the Royal Horse Artillery points out that there is no artillery stationed at Poona, and that the Officer Commanding Royal Artillery referred to is probably the O.C.R.A. Kirkee. There is an order requiring the R.A. at Kirkee to supply gun-carriages for the funerals of officers and warrant officers at Poona, but not for any below that rank, and to meet the latter case there is said to be a gun-carriage fitted with coffin board kept in Poona under the order of the station staff officer. The question raised by the fact stated in my paragraph, therefore, seems to be why this gun-carriage was not used on the particular occasion in question.

Although I have again and again declared my inability to take up the grievance of Service men in regard to the payment of income tax, I am still beset with statements and arguments on the subject. In one of the most recent of these a Naval Officer puts to me several questions, of which this is one:—

> Is it just that Naval Officers who are serving on foreign stations where no benefit of income tax is derived should pay that tax? Is it just that an officer on the Persian Gulf or the West Coast of Africa should only draw the same pay as an officer at home? Surely the officers on the foreign stations mentioned should be relieved of income tax. . . .

This is rather a new line of argument, but if it applies to Naval Officers it must apply equally to civilians. At present the principle of the law is that income accruing in England is taxed in England, wherever spent. It is a difficult principle to interfere with, and if it is modified for the benefit of one class of British residents abroad, it must be modified for all. That an officer serving on an unhealthy or otherwise undesirable station should be paid more than an officer serving at home is no doubt equitable in principle, but how on earth it is to be applied in practice I do not know. The only practical way of equalising matters seems to me to distribute the service of all as equally as possible between the desirable and the undesirable posts.

Here is another point made by the same officer:—

> Is it just that Naval Officers should be charged income tax in time of war? If we were to go to war to-morrow with a first-class European Power, nearly all the officers of the Navy would be at once sent to sea to fight. The income tax would also be doubled, if not trebled. Is it then just that officers who, in such a case, would be risking their lives daily, to say nothing of enduring the hardships of a campaign, should be drawing less pay than they drew in time of peace?

This illustration accentuates the grievance, but I cannot see that it touches the principle. Why should a journalist, the circulation of whose paper might be very much reduced in time of war, or any one else whose income is reduced from the same cause, have at the same time to pay an increased income tax? The Naval or Military Officer only suffers in company with nine out of ten income-tax payers, for a great war would probably very speedily reduce most of our incomes. The officer on active service has clearly no special claim to consideration on that ground, for to fight when called upon is part of the terms of his contract, and he is paid in time of peace on the understanding that he will risk his life in time of war. If officers, whether of the Army or Navy, want an increase of pay, they would do better to ask for it on that footing, and make what case they can, rather than strive to get it by a side wind in the form of a remission of income tax, for which there is no valid argument.

The following letter is of great interest to the British taxpayer, and should be of interest to the British Admiralty, although it is not often that that august body pays any attention to criticism from outside its own select circle:—

> With reference to a paragraph in your issue of the 17th inst., just received, anent a boy of H.M.S. Impregnable, who received twenty-four cuts with the birch, imprisonment, and dismissal from the Service, would you be astonished to hear that this insubordination and striking of officers is considered to be an easy and economical way of being discharged from H.M. Service? That such is the case I am in a position to vouch for. Being a visitor to one of H.M. prisons where bluejackets are sent in pursuance of courts-martial sentences, I have often stopped before a good-looking lad on going my rounds of the prison. It is always the same story—insubordination to be discharged the Service! The prisoners do not tell me so, but they speak out to the warders. That various bad men should be discharged the Service is good policy and advisable, but that boys who would make good sailors and honest men—even at the cost of two or three consecutive birchings—are so discharged is a crying evil, a loss to the Service, injurious to discipline, and, in the long run, unkind to the boys themselves, who fall into worse courses. The stoker class appears to me to be particularly addicted to this insubordination.

I have often protested against the iniquity of first punishing a man and then dismissing him from the Service, a treatment analogous to torturing your victim before killing him. But what this letter shows is the utter stupidity of the treatment. The Admiralty in its attempt to pile up punishments for breaches of discipline has so far overshot its own mark that it has really supplied inducements for what it desires to prevent. One has often wondered at the number of cases in which boys serving in the Navy strike a Commanding Officer, or some other person high in authority. The above letter explains the mystery. The boy who strikes an officer does it because he desires to receive the punishment which the Admiralty in its wisdom has assigned to the offence.

It is to be hoped that the Naval authorities are satisfied with the result of the first examination for Naval cadetships under the new regulations, for it is quite certain that nobody else will be. The most startling feature in the result is the utter failure of the majority of the candidates in Mathematics. Seventeen successful candidates below number twenty on the list each made an average of 370 in Latin out of a maximum of 800, and an average of 49 only in Higher Mathematics out of a maximum of 400; four of them getting absolutely no marks at all in this subject, five under 50, four under 75, and not one over 100. On the other hand, eleven candidates, who qualified but did not pass, each made an average of 104 in Latin, and the same number in Higher Mathematics. In consequence of the hopeless failure of so many candidates in Mathematics—only 43 out of 101 lads making 40 per cent. of the marks—the Admiralty had at the last moment to get the Commissioners to covertly reduce the maximum in order to fill up the vacancies—a proceeding which operated most unfairly in several cases.

The recent raising of the age of candidates has also worked out in a most unsatisfactory manner, as may be seen from the following figures:—

Date.	Candidates.	Cadetships.
June, 1896	182	63
December, 1896	175	69
March, 1897	123	70
June, 1897	135	70
December, 1897	108	65

The age limit was increased after March and June, 1897. The result is that while the number of cadetships has increased, the number of candidates has decreased by more than 40 per cent, and this in spite of the fact that candidates to whom nominations had been promised have been pressed to compete at the very earliest period that they come within the age limit. The state of things thus revealed is most unsatisfactory, for the supply of cadets is falling off, while it is evident there is an alarming amount of ignorance among the candidates in those subjects which are most useful for a Naval career. There can be little question that the increased importance recently given to Latin has had much to do with this result. While this useless subject has been altogether dropped out of the Britannia course, it is made the principal qualification for a cadetship, the maximum marks assigned to it being double those allowed to English, French, or Higher Mathematics, and four times as many as for History, Geography, or Drawing.

It was recently announced in the Englishman that the Government of India has sanctioned a sum of Rs. 6,000 "for the town expenses of the Lieutenant-Generals commanding the forces in the four commands for 1898-9 and future years." What is the meaning of this? The summer quarters of the four Generals are respectively at Murree, Dalhousie, Ootacamund and Poona, all healthily situated in the hills. During the winter the Generals spend a great deal of their time on tour, when they are usually the guests of their subordinate Generals or other officers. Even during the period when they occupy their permanent quarters in town, their expenses are hardly of an abnormal character, such as to justify a special allowance. Surely £3,000 or £4,000 per annum is a sufficient sum to meet the requirements of any public official, civil or military, in such a position. The contrast between such an expenditure as this grant of Rs. 24,000 per annum among four officers for town expenses, and the despicable niggardliness of the Indian Government towards its officers and servants in lower grades, is very striking.

It appears from the accounts of the solar eclipse in India, that, in order to witness the phenomenon, the Viceroy, and a large concourse of his satellites, went by special train from Howrath to Buxar. In addition to that, a second special of sixteen carriages was provided for a further party of eighty or ninety passengers, chiefly officials, and a third for "the remainder of the visitors from Calcutta." I am told by one who knows something of the usual practice in India that, while the third train was possibly paid for by the passengers, it is extremely improbable that the other two were. If so, at a time when such widespread distress exists in India, and the finances of the country are in so critical a condition, the expenditure of a large sum of public money on such a purpose is a downright scandal.

The Post Office issues a weekly circular which purports to give notice of all vacancies in and appointments to postmasterships, and invites applications for the former, but warns them not to imperil applicants' prospects by attempting to bring any outside influence to bear in their favour. A Post Office official suggests that it is about time this piece of humbug was dropped. It is notorious in the service that many appointments are still made through outside influence, and made, too, before the vacancies are announced, if they are ever announced at all. There was an amusing proof of this not long since when, by an unfortunate transposition of the notices, the appointment to an Irish office was published in the circular one week, and the vacancy in the following week!

Parents who suppose that the position of a "boy learner" in the Post Office will afford a good opening for their sons will do well to ponder a grievance that a disgusted father has brought under my notice. More than three years ago his son, then a lad of fifteen, entered a small country office as a "boy learner," the idea being that in twelve months at the outside, he would be qualified for an appointment. He served for two years and a half without any salary, except for a few weeks in the summer of the second year, when he was transferred for temporary duty to another town. As there seemed no prospect of advancement in his first office, he last year entered for a competitive examination for boy learners at a bigger office. He passed the examination, and since then he has been employed at this bigger office, where he is paid six shillings a week for performing a clerk's duties, eight hours' work a day.

At each office this "boy learner" has had to sign a document similar to the one from Swansea reproduced the other day in TRUTH, in which he acknowledges that he has no claim upon the Department for a permanent situation. He is now eighteen years of age, he has been in the service three years, and his superiors have testified to his competence; but, apparently, the G.P.O. considers itself entitled to keep him on for an indefinite period at less than the salary of an errand boy. It would be interesting, by the way, to hear why "boy learners" are paid nothing at all in some offices, but a salary—beggarly pittance though it is—in others.

So the notification on the tax-collector's demand-note that a landlord is bound to allow his tenant the amount of income-tax paid by the latter under Schedule A is to be restored next year. In view of the attention that was lately given to the matter in these columns, I scarcely need say that I heard Sir Michael Hicks-Beach's statement with much satisfaction. It was a mistake ever to omit the notice, and its absence from the demand-note has not improbably caused many ill-informed and unbusiness-like tenants to saddle themselves with a liability belonging to their landlords.

The recent edict of the General Medical Council on the subject of unqualified assistants has evidently inflicted very great hardship on a large number of men, and I have had many communications upon the subject from different parts of the country. It is evidently quite true, as the first gentleman who wrote to me respecting this matter stated, that there are a number of men who through unexpected loss of means, or domestic or private circumstances of one kind or another, have been compelled to relinquish their medical studies before finally qualifying themselves, and have since then been earning their living as assistants to qualified practitioners for, it may be, the last twenty or thirty years. Such men probably know quite as much about the ordinary business of doctoring as any general practitioner, and to suddenly deprive them of the means of livelihood is an act of inconsiderate harshness of which only a body dominated by professional prejudice could be capable. Parliament before now has had to interfere with unqualified practitioners—witness the case of the Dentists—but it has always respected the legitimate interests of men already in the field. The General Medical Council ought to have acted in the same way.

It has been suggested by one of the victims of this edict that to mitigate the hardship to men who, although technically unqualified, have been acting as assistants for the best part of their lives, an opportunity should be given to all assistants at present in practice to register themselves, their names being registered on the production of satisfactory certificates or testimonials from the medical men under whom they have served. If mere personal references were not considered sufficient, a practical examination in medicine, surgery, and midwifery might be made a condition of registration. The registered men could then be allowed to serve out their times; no names need be added to the register after a certain date; and in process of time the whole of the present generation of assistants would die out. Subject to some provision of this kind, there can be no objection to the Medical Council making what regulations it pleases with regard to the employment of assistants in future.

Another suggestion has been made to me which may be worth the attention of the assistants who are now threatened with the loss of their livelihood. Why should they not obtain diplomas from Apothecaries' Hall? As was pointed out in TRUTH some months back, the apothecary's qualification is valid for all practical purposes; it does not cost much, and a man who has been practising for years under a qualified practitioner ought to have no difficulty in obtaining it, unless there is some condition attached to it with which I am not familiar.

A return presented the other day to the Lewisham Guardians shows that an enormous reduction has been effected in the expenditure upon stimulants and mineral waters at the workhouse since the matter was discussed in these columns a few years ago. In 1893 intoxicants cost £153 3s. 7d., and mineral waters £179 14s. 6d. In 1897, thanks in a great measure to the persistent efforts of Mr. C. Wilkinson, the vice-chairman of the Board, these figures had dropped to £2 2s. 1d. and £12 3s. 3d. respectively. The return must be grateful and comforting to the ratepayers of the Lewisham Union, whose pockets are being saved to the amount of upwards of £300 a year. It should also open the eyes of ratepayers in other unions where the expenditure upon intoxicants is still unnecessarily high, if not, indeed, so scandalously extravagant as it used to be at Lewisham.

Last week the Carmarthen Town Council discussed certain charges against the borough surveyor, and as a result decided to accept his resignation, but not to institute a prosecution. It is said that there was a difficulty in the way of a prosecution, but if that be so, then a serious injustice must have been done to the surveyor in the report of the committee who recommended his resignation. The truth seems to be that some members of the Council were anxious that the officer referred to should be let off as lightly as possible, and there was even an attempt to hush up the whole affair. This is an excess of mercy which is often displayed by corporate bodies, though the members in their private capacities would probably be the last to overlook such allegations against a servant. There is an idea that where a public officer is concerned it is sufficient to get rid of him and so prevent the recurrence of irregularities. It is a most mistaken and pernicious notion, for the very position of such officials, and the difficulty of detecting abuses of their trust, really render it all the more important that any delinquent should be sternly dealt with.

It is instructive to compare this affair at Carmarthen with a case which happened the other day at Ramsgate. A gardener in the employ of the Ramsgate Corporation was seen to carry some plants to a local nursery garden, and was forthwith arrested, and charged with theft. At the hearing of the case it was shown that the man had been accustomed, with the knowledge of members of the Corporation, to make exchanges of plants with other gardeners, and that those which he took away were given in return for others which he had obtained for the benefit of the town gardens. The magistrates, of course, dismissed the charge. It ought never to have been preferred; but then the defendant was only an employee on weekly wages, and so no hesitation was felt about putting him in the dock.

Very different was the spirit which this same Corporation of Ramsgate exhibited in disposing of a complaint against the Engineer. It seemed that this official had employed the Corporation workmen to level some ground at the waterworks and lay out two lawn-tennis courts. He coolly asserted that "if there was any spare land he had a perfect right by custom to use it," and he appeared also to think that he had the further right to saddle the ratepayers with the expense, which, judging from the particulars given, must have been considerable. One would have expected the Corporation to express their opinion pretty plainly upon such a proceeding, but the Engineer, being a gentleman in receipt of a handsome salary, escaped without any formal censure. In truth, one man may steal a horse while another may not look over the hedge.

Some one sends me a copy of the Stewartry Observer, in which Bailie Hay, of Stranraer, is reported as saying that he once brought me "to my knees," and that, therefore, he could easily crush "gutter snipe second-hand reporters." Judging from the remarks of my contemporary, the local journalists to whom the Bailie so politely alludes are very well able to take care of themselves. For my own part, I do not recollect ever before hearing of this redoubtable magistrate, and I am quite certain he never brought me to my knees. I think, however, that his fellow-townsmen might well go on their knees and pray that he may be blessed with more grace, wisdom, and understanding.

My recent experience of the Irish Grand Jury system caused me to sympathise with the cheers which last week greeted Mr. Gerald Balfour's announcement that, under his Bill the Grand Juries would meet for the last time at the next Spring Assizes. I suppose that the Clare Grand Jury, about which my readers have heard a good deal, is a fairly representative institution of its class. The facts respecting it which have appeared in Truth indicate that a Jury can be moulded very much as those concerned in its proceedings desire, and it follows as a matter of course that a body so constituted is a highly efficient instrument of jobbery. It strikes me that the substitution of more or less democratic County Councils in Ireland for the old county government by Grand Jury will prove far more revolutionary than Home Rule or any local government proposal yet made from the Liberal side. But this is generally the way with Tory reforms.

The abuse of the libel laws was again conspicuously illustrated in a case before the Lord Chief Justice last week. By a curious coincidence the plaintiff, like one who figured disadvantageously in the Courts a week or two ago, was a solicitor with a grievance on the score of an imperfect newspaper police-court report. The object of his wrath was the Daily News, which had, as he contended, done him injustice by condensing too much its report of certain proceedings taken against him. So flimsy was the case, that before the plaintiff had gone into the box Lord Russell intimated that the jury would be asked to stultify themselves if the question whether the report was a libel were put to them. After this the jury at once found that there was no libel, and the proceedings terminated. I trust that the solicitor in question will not now bring an action against me for unduly condensing this account of the libel proceedings, but I really cannot see anything else in the reports which requires reproduction in justice to the plaintiff.

In the course of his remarks, Lord Russell said that he could not understand who advised proceedings of this character, though he was sure it was not counsel. In this he is perfectly right. I have had experience of frivolous libel actions, in which, as soon as the case came into the hands of counsel, it has been abandoned. There are hundreds of actions brought against newspapers every year from which there is never a chance of the plaintiff deriving any benefit.

The fear of such actions is a constant restriction upon the liberty of the Press, and it is as much in the interest of the public as of the proprietors of newspapers that such an abuse of the process of the courts should be stopped.

There was another case before Lord Russell last week which drew from the Bench some sensible remarks. By the present practice, when money is paid into court by a defendant who admits that he is, for one reason or another, bound to compensate the plaintiff, both the fact and the amount of the payment into court are concealed from the jury, who, consequently, have to give their verdict in complete ignorance of a most important feature in the case. It was suggested last week by a well-known barrister that this rule was designed as much for the protection of defendants as plaintiffs, and he instanced particularly the case of actions against railway companies for negligence, where, after a substantial sum has been paid into court, the jury were formerly apt to give the plaintiff a pound or two more in order to ensure his getting his costs. Lord Russell, however, replied to this that it implies a complete distrust of judges and juries, and obviously that is the case. If juries can be trusted to assess damages equitably in any case, they can also be trusted to deal equitably with the question of costs. If a jury holds that the amount paid into court is sufficient compensation for any wrong done, they ought also to hold that the plaintiff was in the wrong in bringing the action into court for trial in the hope of getting more; and, having come to this conclusion, they are clearly disregarding their duty if they add a further sum to the damages for the purpose of compelling the defendants to pay costs which the plaintiff had no business to incur. Speaking for myself, I have every confidence in juries, and I would as soon trust them to deal equitably with the question of costs as with that of damages.

The creditors of Mr. John Crook, of 75, Northam-road, Southampton, have just been gratified with a second and final dividend of one penny in the pound, and I am indebted for this information to one of the creditors who has received the precise amount of one penny in payment of his claim. The position of a creditor who receives the sum of one penny by post at a cost of one penny, and is expected to pay another penny, or at any rate a half-penny, in returning a receipt, is a monument indeed to the success of our bankruptcy system. In this particular case an estate of £890 has been divided between the Board of Trade, the lawyers, the trustee, and a few minor claimants, including the creditors, with the result that the creditors have got £410, and that the other parties concerned have got £479. Every pound therefore paid to the creditors has cost something considerably over a pound to realise and distribute.

A committee has been formed, I understand, at Ashton-under-Lyne for the purpose of receiving donations to enable the defendants in the late case of Andrew v. Whitworth and others to pay their costs. After what has been said in Truth already upon the proceedings of the Messrs. Andrew in connection with this case, I need not say that the defendants have my full sympathy. But I confess I do not see how the defendants are to be paid without paying the costs of the plaintiffs also, and my sympathy does not extend to any public collection of funds which is likely to benefit the Messrs. Andrew. When these gentlemen commenced an action on the very flimsiest grounds against men in humble circumstances, who had already been ruined by the failure of Jonathan Andrew & Sons, Limited, they did so at their own risk. The action has substantially failed—a verdict for forty shillings damages can hardly be regarded in any other light—and the equity of the case requires that the plaintiffs should bear the loss. It seems to me that the best thing would be to let the law take its course, and when Messrs. Andrew have squeezed what they can out of the defendants, public benevolence should come to the rescue of all the victims of the failure.

I referred the other day to the case of a clergyman's daughter who, having had a legacy of £50 left to her whilst she was a minor, was seeking to obtain the money from the Court of Chancery, which had, nolens volens, taken possession of it. The young lady's father now tells me that the costs of getting the money out of the Court, as assessed by the Court itself, have amounted to no less than £7 16s. 6d., which just about swallows up the interest allowed for the five years during which the legacy has been in Chancery. Whether the legatee could have obtained the money without any deduction by applying to the Court in person I do not know. However that may be, it is a monstrous thing that £7 16s. 6d. should have to be paid to secure possession of a sum of £50; and the fact shows that though there may be less red tape than in the days of "Jarndyce v. Jarndyce," there is still a good deal too much of that article about the Court of Chancery.

The Bail Bill, which was read a second time in the House of Lords last week, is a step in the right direction. One of its objects is to empower magistrates to admit an accused person to bail without requiring other sureties; and if this power is employed in all cases where it can be safely exercised, much injustice will, in future, be avoided. The "if," however, is an important one. The matter must, of necessity, be left to the discretion of the magistrates, and, as the judges are continually pointing out, and as the Lord Chancellor repeated in introducing the Bill, magistrates throughout the country exhibit at present a most extraordinary reluctance to allow bail in cases in which it can be and ought to be granted. The danger is, therefore, that many of these self-opiniated wooden-heads will refuse to use the further power conferred upon them by this Bill, just as they refuse to use the powers they already possess. It is one thing for the Legislature to show the Great Unpaid what they ought to do, but quite another thing to get them to do it.

I wonder, by the way, whether bail was offered to two prisoners, named McGregor and Parker, who were tried at the last Salford Quarter Sessions. In each case bail might have been allowed without any danger to the interests of justice, but McGregor was kept in gaol eighty-one days and Parker sixty-six days before they were brought to trial, and then both were acquitted. There were other prisoners at the same sessions who had been in custody for even longer periods than these men; and, apart from the question of bail, it would clearly prevent much hardship if the Recorder would resume his former practice of holding a Court every six weeks or so, instead of only once a quarter.

One Hundred Pieces for £1. 1s.—Send a postcard to the Pearson Pottery Co., Hanley, Staffs., for particulars of the most wonderful package of crockery the world has ever seen. Sold all the world over.

At an inquest at Liverpool last week on the body of a child who had died from burns, it was stated that the deceased was carried, in the first instance, to the Royal Infirmary, but that a doctor there refused to dress the wounds, and directed that the little one should be taken on to the Children's Infirmary. Dr. Martin, of the Royal Infirmary, acknowledged that this was correct. His explanation was that children were not admitted to the Royal Infirmary, unless under exceptional circumstances, and that if they dressed the wounds before sending the child to the Children's Infirmary, the authorities of the latter institution would not receive the case. A nurse from the out-patient department of the Children's Infirmary, denied that this had ever been done. It is to be hoped that Dr. Martin was mistaken; but in any event there ought to be some further inquiry by the managers of the two infirmaries, for the relations between them are clearly not what they should be. It would, indeed, be difficult to imagine anything more discreditable than the state of affairs revealed at this inquest.

A J.P. sends me an interesting letter upon the "foolish leniency" which is so often displayed by his magisterial brethren in dealing with cases of assault. Quoting from my Legal Pillory some recent examples of the trivial penalties imposed for brutal outrages on women, he says:—

> These would be extremely lenient sentences, and some of them absurd, even treating the offences as common assaults. But I go further than this, and maintain that the magistrates who decided them were not justified in treating them as common assaults at all. For what says the Statute? "When any person shall be charged before two Justices of the Peace with an assault or battery upon any male child whose age shall not in the opinion of such Justices exceed fourteen years, or upon any female, the said Justices, if the assault or battery is of such an aggravated nature that it cannot in their opinion be sufficiently punished under the provisions hereinbefore contained as to common assaults and batteries, may proceed to hear and determine the same in a summary way. Punishment on conviction by imprisonment, with or without hard labour, for not exceeding six months, or a fine not exceeding together with costs £20." I may also point out that an assault "occasioning bodily harm" is indictable, and can be punished on conviction by penal servitude.

All this is perfectly true. Not only are aggravated assaults continually dealt with as common assaults, but in the case of such indictable offences as unlawful wounding and occasioning bodily harm it is not at all an uncommon practice for the magistrates to "reduce the charge" to one of ordinary assault, and dispose of it summarily. In this matter, however, as in the matter of bail, it seems of little use to tell magistrates what the law provides and what justice requires in such cases. You may take an ass to the water, but you cannot make him drink. You may pass an excellent law, but you cannot be sure that it will be properly used so long as its administration is left in the hands of the Great Unpaid.

The Dublin Recorder this week occupies the conspicuous position in my Legal Pillory which I last week assigned to one of the Stipendiaries of the same city. It will be seen that at the Sessions, as at the Police-court, offences against the person are held exceedingly cheap, a case of wounding in which the prisoner narrowly escaped a charge of murder being visited by the Recorder with a trumpery sentence of three months' imprisonment. In the scales of justice a woman's life is apparently appraised at precisely the same value as a piece of plate glass, and only half the value of a heifer. Most of the contrasted sentences in the list speak for themselves; but I would specially call attention to the lenity of the penalties imposed for abominable cruelty to coal-pit ponies in the Newcastle district. It is true that the culprits were only young men, but if they had been convicted of poaching, sleeping out, or theft, their youth would not have saved them from imprisonment. I should add that the case from Birkenhead is not inserted in the list for the purpose of reflecting in any way upon the decision of the Bench, who really did the most the law allowed them to do. It is cited to show the absurd inadequacy of the maximum fine, which is, in fact, rather less than the amount of the freight the ship-owner receives for landing the animals alive:—

Dublin City Sessions. Before the Recorder. James Hart, indicted for wounding Jane Cummins by cutting her throat. He knocked her down, rendering her insensible, and then inflicted a deep wound in her throat, almost completely severing the windpipe. The woman's life was in danger for some time. Three months.

Birmingham Police-court. Before Messrs. Lord, Stone, Payton, and Phillips. Harry Portman, a betting man, convicted of assaulting George Williams in a railway carriage. Defendant, who had no ticket, forced his way into a first-class compartment, in which there were already nine or ten persons, and when complainant protested, struck him a violent blow in the face. He afterwards struck complainant a second time, seriously injuring his eye. Fined £3 and costs.

Merthyr Police-court. Before Mr. North and Alderman T. Williams. Gabriel Davies, charged with assaulting his mother. He beat and kicked her, blackening her eyes. The Bench said he was a brutal young coward. Fined £1 and costs, and bound over.

Newcastle County Police-court. Robert Simpson, charged with cruelty to a pony in a colliery. Defendant beat the animal with his whip and then horribly mutilated it with an iron drill, causing its intestines to come out. The pony had, of course, to be destroyed. The Bench "felt that the defendant should go to prison," but as he was young they let him off with a fine of £5.

Tynemouth Petty Sessions. George Snedder, a youth, charged with cruelty to a pit pony. He kicked the animal under the stomach, causing it to suffer great pain. Fined 2s. 6d. and 17s. 6d. costs.

Dublin City Sessions. Before the Recorder. Peter Maher pleaded guilty to smashing a window, value twelve pounds, at a coffee tavern. Three months.

Wm. Rice, convicted of stealing a heifer. Six months.

Birmingham Police-court. Before Messrs. A. Chamberlain, W. Williams, Waterhouse, and Gilliver. Thomas Turner, draper's assistant, charged with stealing six yards of dress material. He had borne a good character, and the prosecutor did not wish to press the case. Fined £5 and costs, or two months.

Boxford Petty Sessions. Before Colonel G. H. Pocklington, and Mr. E. B. Cooke. James Baker, Charles Wright, and John Prentice, charged with trespassing in search of game. Prentice fined 19s.; Baker and Wright, £2 9s. each.

Scunthorpe Petty Sessions. Before Messrs. C. S. Holgate and J. Fletcher. Henry Ogley, aged 14, charged with stealing dinners from a school. Sent to prison for fourteen days.

Tiverton Police-court. Wm. Vinnicombe, charged with wandering abroad, having no visible means of subsistence. Fourteen days.

Abingdon County Petty Sessions. Before Messrs. W. Graham, A. F. Blandy, and General Bailie. John Webb, charged with trespassing in pursuit of game. Fined £2 and costs; in default, one month.

Subscriptions greatly needed by The Royal Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.—6,929 convictions this year; 7,320 last year. Address complaints of cruelty, contributions, letters, &c., to Secretary, 105, Jermyn-st., London.

Chichester City Police-court. Before Alderman Smith, Messrs. J. Coffin and E. M. Street. Arthur Attfield, Frederick Bedford, and George Hutson, charged with cruelty to a dog. The dog was tied to a gate, and defendants threw stones at it and shot at it with a catapult, inflicting such injuries that the animal had to be destroyed. The Bench said their conduct was disgraceful and wantonly cruel, for they had virtually stoned the dog to death. Fined £1 each, including costs.

Spittlegate (Grantham) Petty Sessions. Wm. Mawer, gamekeeper, convicted of assaulting Thomas Catton, a farmer's son, by knocking him down, striking him in the eye with a stick, and jumping upon him. Fined 10s. and costs.

Grimsby Borough Police-court. Before the Mayor, Aldermen Jackson, Louth, and Morton, and other magistrates. Thomas Burns, fishing apprentice, charged with neglecting to go to sea. Twenty-one days.

Ruthin Petty Sessions. Before the Rev. Chancellor Bulkeley Jones and Mr. W. T. Rouw. Peter Jones and Thomas Jones, charged with poaching. Peter Jones, one month; Thomas Jones (a first offender), fined £1 9s.

Petersfield Police-court. Before Messrs. A. W. Still and W. B. Edgeter. Wm. Burgess pleaded guilty to a charge of poaching. One month, and a further six months in default of finding sureties.

Birkenhead Police-court. Before Messrs. J. Pennock and J. M. Kelly. Captain Stubbs, of the steamer Michigan, charged with neglecting to slaughter cattle which were injured on a voyage from Boston to the Mersey. The ship arrived with four sheep and two oxen suffering from broken shoulders, legs, and other serious injuries. Fined £20 and £1 13s. costs, the maximum penalty.

It is a rare thing to hear people complaining of the undue lenity of a sentence by Mr. Justice Grantham; but this has happened at Hastings, in reference to a case at Sussex Assizes. A schoolmaster, named T. K. Gregory, was indicted for obtaining various sums of money by false pretences, and also for a series of offences under the Debtors' Act. Gregory started a school at Hastings, got into debt and borrowed money right and left, and last October became a bankrupt, with liabilities amounting to £7,522, and assets which have realised £1,250. The most serious charge against him was one of obtaining certain loans, shortly before his failure, by means of false representations as to his indebtedness at that time. After the case had been opened he pleaded guilty to one of the minor offences under the Debtors' Act. The prosecution thereupon consented to drop the other charges; and the Judge released the prisoner, binding him to come up for judgment if called upon. It is supposed that his lordship was, to some extent, influenced by the statement of the counsel for the defence that, with the exception of the sums due to the prosecutor, most of the debts were incurred with money-lenders or relations of the prisoner. This was, however, a long way from being an accurate account of the facts, and if the Judge had had before him the story of some of the other creditors, or if the prosecution had persisted with the charges which were dropped, the decision would probably have been very different.

The doctrine of the "anointed person" has received a wide extension at the hands of Bailie Munro, of Pollokshaws. A bold bad man who had "attempted" to strike the Provost was last week sentenced by this magistrate to sixty days' imprisonment for the following reasons:—

Bailie Munro said the magistrates derived their authority from the people. They were also appointed with the approval of the Sovereign and of the Almighty, and any insult offered to them was also offered to the community, to the Sovereign, and to the Almighty.

One has got used to hearing the German Kaiser and the Almighty bracketed together as if their identity could not be easily distinguished; but it is something new to hear that any Justice of the Peace stands in the same position. Without wishing to fly in the face of Providence, I certainly think that this sentence—I do not mean the Bailie's remark so much as the punishment which he imposed—requires the attention of the Lord Advocate.

"There are a lot of fools in the world, are there not?" This question was addressed by my representative to a Mr. Smith, of 6, Station-road, Finsbury Park. Needless to say, Mr. Smith assented to the proposition with a confidence founded upon his experience of the gullibility of the public in the course of carrying on a prize competition from the above address for the past two or three months. Subsequently, in the most genial manner, he unbosomed himself to my representative of some few facts, which form the foundations of his belief. These I have tabulated for the amusement of my readers, and the information of the editors of papers who assist Mr. Smith in taking toll from the simple-minded. Mr. Smith, it seems, starts with an advertisement headed, "£25 to be given away." This sum is to go in "free cash prizes" amongst those who re-arrange nineteen letters to spell the names of three well-known birds. To the person who takes the bait the following circular is sent:—

£25 Free Cash Prize Competition.

Dear Sir or Madam,—We are duly in receipt of your letter, and have much pleasure in informing you that the correct solutions to the nineteen puzzle letters advertised (EGONIPAYRCNAW SAWLOL) are as follows, viz.:—Pigeon, Canary, Swallow. Therefore all your names are correct, and if you comply with the undermentioned conditions, you will be entitled to the first prize of fifteen pounds, or share of same, at the close of the competition, as stated below.

This free competition is offered in order to advertise our new "Eight letter Puzzle," and is absolutely free and open to all purchasers of this fascinating diversion. . . . .

Upon receipt of your order for the puzzle, accompanied by Postal Order for two shillings (or twenty-five penny stamps), and the order form at foot marked "correct" by us, together with stamped addressed envelope for sending you the prize money at the conclusion of the competition, we will at once forward you our new renowned "Eight-letter Puzzle," carriage paid per parcels post. . . .

The puzzle consists of "a highly-finished board" made of cardboard, a dozen discs of the same material, and a few counters, the full retail value of which would be fourpence halfpenny or sixpence, the cost probably not exceeding threepence. This valuable article Mr. Smith is selling at the rate of considerably more than four hundred a day at two shillings each. Calculated upon this basis, it is evident that, excluding the cost of advertising, Mr. Smith's returns must amount to about one hundred and fifty pounds a week. As for the prizes, they will be so infinitesimal as to be scarcely worth notice. In the airest manner Mr. Smith declares that he will add sufficient to the prize money to enable him to send a halfpenny stamp to each prize-winner. Well may he chuckle over the prevalence of folly!

Many people with more money than brains continue to respond, I am sorry to see, to the begging letters of that shady member of the noble order of baronets, Sir Charles Coote. This individual is still located at 15, Summer Hill Parade, Dublin, and is still sending out begging-letters in all directions, accompanied as of old by letters which he has recently received from those who have forwarded cash. Of course, if people knowing all about the distressed baronet choose deliberately to send him cheques and postal-orders, nothing more can be said than that it is a pity that they have not got a better use for their money. But if people receiving Sir Charles Coote's letters, and knowing nothing of his antecedents, assume that he is a deserving object of charity, they make a very deplorable mistake.

I should like to hear from Colonel Turner, late of the Cameronians, whether he still accepts responsibility for the appeals of Mrs. Longshaw, the begging-letter writer whose case has more than once been noticed in TRUTH. It may be remembered that, in consequence of my remarks, Colonel Turner undertook last autumn to receive for three months subscriptions to keep the lady going until the laundry, which she had started at Liverpool, began to pay. The three months have now expired. During the last week or two Mrs. Longshaw has been again pestering people with urgent appeals. She encloses with her letters copies of a communication from the Globe Furnishing Company, Pembroke-place—a Liverpool firm, presumably—dated February 14, and notifying that unless arrears of hire are paid within two days, a cart will be sent to take away all the furniture Mrs. Longshaw has on hire from the company.

In order to heighten the effect of this document, Mrs. Longshaw states that one of her children is ill with what "the doctor fears may turn to rheumatic fever," and she dreads the effect of the shock and chill if the beds are removed. It would seem, however, that the "Globe Furnishing Company" are not such hard-hearted creditors as the letter quoted might suggest. The letter from them threatens seizure on Wednesday, February 16; but on Thursday, February 17, Mrs. Longshaw is sending out one of her appeals, pleading that "unless I can pay £4 by Monday (I have asked for time until then) this furniture will be taken." She did not pay the £4 by that date (i.e., February 21), but the furniture evidently was not seized, for in a later letter, received on February 22, and dated "Monday" (the date having been altered), she writes: "Unless I can pay four pounds by Thursday (I have preyed (sic) for time until then) the furniture will be removed." After this, it would not surprise me to hear that the money remains unpaid down to the present moment, and that the furniture is still unremoved. Another remarkable point is that, although four days had elapsed between these two letters, the doctor was still fearing, when the second was written, that the child's illness "might turn to rheumatic fever"—the words used being exactly the same in both letters.

There is a suspicious look about these documents which is entirely in keeping with all that has previously come to light about Mrs. Longshaw. That being so, the gallant officer who—doubtless from the best of motives—came forward on a former occasion as sponsor for the lady's bona fides, might advantageously let us know whether he is prepared to answer personally for the Furnishing Company, the doctor, and the prospect of rheumatic fever. Luckily, these are facts (or allegations) easily verified. The Globe Furnishing Company will not object, of course, to admit the genuineness of their letters of February 14, and will be able to state whether they extended the time of the threatened seizure, first, to Monday the 21st, and afterwards to Thursday the 24th. The doctor who has been in attendance will no doubt readily vouch for the alarming condition of the sick daughter. Let us have all these points established, and Mrs. Longshaw's veracity will be triumphantly vindicated.

It is no credit to the Press that the misleading and mischievous advertisement of Nicholson's ear-drums should still be appearing in various newspapers. Fully twelve months ago the nature of this advertisement was exposed in TRUTH. At that time these ear-drums were sold from a suburban villa dignified with the name of "Nicholson's Aural Institute," and it was stated that a rich lady had given £1,000 to the "Institute" for the purpose of enabling the poor to get Nicholson's ear-drums free. Those who responded to the advertisement were told that the supply of free ear-drums under the donation was quite unequal to the demand, but were offered the treatment of the "Institute" at a charge of 13s. 6d. for certain appliances and prescriptions which would have been dear at a quarter that sum. Although "Nicholson's Aural Institute" is no longer heard of, the story of the rich lady's thousand pounds is still being advertised, and people who want to avail themselves of her benevolence are now told to apply by letter to a firm in Great Russell-street. The whole thing is an impudent trick, practised for the most part on poor and afflicted people, who have little money to spare for the treatment of their ailments. My attention has been called to the matter by the proprietor of two provincial papers, who has refused the advertisement, and it is a pity that there are not a few more newspaper proprietors and editors with an equally keen sense of their responsibility to their readers.

The following letter seems to merit a word of reply:—

February 23, 1898.

DEAR TRUTH.—I do not agree with you politically, but I often find a great deal of common sense in your weekly paragraphs, and you never do a better public service than when you tilt at the usurers.

So why on earth should it be an unpleasant reflection for Mr. Clay that he was instrumental in causing the man Lewis to lose his money? Why, my dear good man, that a Jew money-lender made a loss is the only redeeming feature in the whole disgusting story.—Yours,

X. X. X.

Against that view I take the opportunity of protesting. I have "tilted at the usurers" because a large number of them prey on the unsuspecting by every conceivable fraud, and are utterly unscrupulous in squeezing their victims when once they have got them into their power. But I am not going to say that no professional money-lenders do a legitimate or honest trade; still less am I going to say that a dirty fraud is any the less black because the victim happens to be a Jew money-lender. "Hath not a Jew eyes, hath not a Jew hands, organs, dimensions, senses, functions, passions?" I recommend my correspondent to read and study the rest of the quotation.

So little has been heard recently of the syndicate who promised to "place hot water within the reach of everybody" through the medium of the street lamp-posts that it was justifiably supposed that the scheme had fallen through. This, however, turns out to be by no means the case; on the contrary, the company have been applying to the Court of Chancery for leave to extend their field of operations. It was argued that the value and utility of this novel idea would be considerably enhanced if, in addition to supplying the poorer portion of the community with hot water, it could at the same time be arranged to provide them—always on the penny-in-the-slot system—with packets of tea, cocoa, &c., to accentuate the usefulness of the boiling fluid. It is really difficult to put any limits to this beneficent enterprise; for instance, the addition of a slot for the delivery on payment of bread and butter would at once convert each lamp-post into a species of coffee-house or refreshment-room.

It is true, I find, that the directors of the London, Brighton, and South Coast Railway have, much to their credit, reduced the normal week of their guards and porters to six days, Sunday work being paid for extra; but the carriage examiners and Westinghouse-brake men are still employed on the old terms, and are told that if they want a Sunday off it will be stopped out of their wages. It would not cost any very formidable sum to extend to these men the concessions already made to the guards and porters, and if the matter is brought before the directors they will, I should think, have little hesitation in doing this.

Without wishing to boast, I think that some of the seed recently sown in these columns for the benefit of railway managers has fallen upon good ground, and is already bearing fruit. A good deal was said in my recent articles on railway management respecting the neglected opportunities of offering small comforts to railway travellers—a direction in which the American lines are much in advance of our own. The Midland Railway Company, evidently recognising this, have just opened at Leeds a sort of afternoon tea-room in connection with their ladies' waiting-room, so that ladies can obtain there any light refreshment they may require without going to the buffet, which many of them do not care to do. In addition to the refreshments various toilet requisites are provided, including curling tongs, which can be used at the reasonable fee of twopence, and I believe there are ladies who would consider this boon cheap at ten times the price.

The Westminster Improvements Bill will soon be before Parliament. The scheme, as I understand it, is to take by compulsory powers a considerable area running back from the river between the Houses of Parliament and the Tate Gallery. In consideration of being granted these powers, the promoters of the scheme agree to make an embankment along the river, and to clear and dedicate to the public as an open space the land within the line of Victoria Tower. Personally I do not want to surrender the humble roof that protects me from the inclemency of the weather, and I should have to do so were the Bill carried. I opposed the proposal of Mr. Lefevre to take my house and build on its site a mortuary chapel, for I honestly thought that a live man ought not to be dispossessed in order to lodge a few corpses. In regard to this new scheme, however, I am not able to deny that, if carried out, there might be public advantage.

I do not hold, with the County Council, that London ought not to be bettered by any private scheme, because such work appertains alone to the Council. If any scheme is suggested, and it were a question whether the Council or private individuals should carry it out, I should be for the former, but only if the Council said it would carry it out. Nor do I agree with the Dean and Chapter of Westminster Abbey, that everything architectural in the neighbourhood of the Abbey should be left to public bodies. The scheme seems to me to depend: (1), whether it is to the public advantage; (2), whether those asking powers to undertake it can show that they have the means to carry it out.

All this can only be threshed out by the Bill going before a Committee. Therefore, desirous as I may be not to be dispossessed, I should not feel justified in voting against the second reading of the Bill. It would be for the Committee to find out whether the promoters have the requisite money behind them; whether they are prepared to provide, as required by law, homes for poor people whose houses they may clear away; and whether all architectural requirements are fulfilled. Should this be done, and the Bill pass through Committee stage, then the House will have the entire scheme before it as settled in Committee, and on the third reading it will be able with full knowledge to say aye or nay.

Close behind my house is a building called the Jewel Tower. I have tried to find out in books on London when, and by whom, it was built, but I have never been able to discover, and I suppose that it is not known. The curious part of the matter is that I doubt whether any one can see this ancient monument, except from my back windows.

Between this tower and the Abbey there is an underground passage, which is now blocked up. Presumably, therefore, the tower formed part of that ancient Palace of Westminster, of which there is no existing plan, and the passage was probably designed to enable persons to take refuge in the Abbey if the Palace were attacked. It is a square tower in stone, and now used, I believe, to keep the standards of weights and measures. If the scheme of the Westminster Improvements Bill is adopted, this old tower should be left standing.

I rejoice to see that the Sunday Society is taking in hand a movement for the repeal of the monstrous Lord's Day Act of George III. Recent events have utterly discredited this enactment, even in the eyes of the less progressive part of the public, and everybody knows that the Act is now inoperative except for mischievous purposes. The whole raison d'être of the statute is to enable a small minority, who hold certain irreligious and unbiblical views as to the proper mode of keeping Sunday, to enforce their peculiar notions upon the majority who disagree with them. Such an Act has no proper place on the Statute Book of a free country, and I trust that even a Conservative and Unionist House of Commons may have sufficient sense to wipe it out.

The petition which Sir Christopher Furness has just presented in connection with the York by-election emphasises the unsatisfactory nature of the law with regard to Parliamentary contests. The object desired is a mere recount of the votes; in order to attain this, the expensive and tedious process of petitioning has to be gone through, and two judges will have to go down to York to deal with the matter. Why should not a recount of the votes in such cases be granted upon an ex parte application to one of the courts, or to the Speaker, the costs to be paid by one side or the other according to the result? There would seem to be no serious objection to such a reform, and it would obviously lessen the expense and simplify matters enormously.

This point is but one of a number which require attention in connection with Parliamentary election petitions. Little more than two years ago the Cause List and the business of the Courts generally were thrown into a state of utter confusion by the time of many of the judges being taken up in hearing lengthy petitions, with consequent delay and inconvenience to ordinary litigants. The appointment of a standing Judicial Commission to take all work of this kind would go far to remedy matters, and the advantages accruing from this or some other step in the same direction would make it well worth the taking.

It is not in Africa only that a reactionary tendency is being manifested in the treatment of native races under British rule. The same process is visible in West Australia. Most of the English papers recently reported the atrocious case at Perth in which a man named Anderson was proved to have brutally flogged three natives to death. Anderson was clearly guilty of murder, but, in spite of a strong summing-up by the Chief Justice, the jury convicted him of manslaughter only. The Chief Justice has since called attention to an "equally revolting" case at Geraldton, in which a worse miscarriage of justice occurred. On that occasion one of the witnesses for the defence was a magistrate, who frankly admitted that he had himself habitually broken the law by thrashing natives. Not only is this law-breaking magistrate allowed to retain his commission, but the Premier has stated in the Council that he sees nothing wrong in the arrangement, "for it is not reasonable chastisement that is to be guarded against, but horrible brutality." It is, of course, left to the law-breaker himself to decide as to the "reasonableness" of the chastisement he inflicts. So long as it stops short of "horrible brutality"—which seems to mean so long as the nigger is not actually flogged to death—it is permissible, though illegal.

It is asserted by a Perth journalist that, though the Anderson case was an extreme one, the brutal flogging of natives is one of "the settled institutions of the north;" and after this amazing utterance of the Premier nobody can be surprised at the fact. The same writer remarks that "the West Australian indenturing system as applied to natives is as near a thing to slavery as flourishes in the British dominions." But it can scarcely be a nearer approach to slavery than the "indenturing system" which the Cape Government has enforced upon the Bechuana "rebels," to say nothing of the slavery, pure and undisguised, which the British Government itself sanctions in Zanzibar. On all questions relating to the freedom and the just and humane treatment of our coloured fellow subjects both in Africa and Australia we seem to be going directly backwards.

I have been told various stories in connection with the Dreyfus matter by persons who profess to know more than the rest of the world. One is that, before Russia entered into the French alliance, it was thought well to discover the precise condition of the French Army, and Esterhazy was employed to send secret information. He, on his part, told his chiefs what he had been asked to do, and received their permission to send information, of course the fact of the information proceeding from the General Staff being unknown to Russia. Dreyfus knew of this arrangement, and, having agreed to reveal General Staff secrets to Germany, wrote the bordereau, so far as he could, in Esterhazy's handwriting, in order that, if suspicion was aroused, it should fall on him. The part that Esterhazy had played in regard to Russia was discovered by the friends of Dreyfus, and hence the endeavour to show that Esterhazy was the traitor, and not Dreyfus. Another story is that Dreyfus did reveal secrets, not to Germany, but to Russia.

What makes me suppose that Russia is in some way mixed up with the business is that, if one Government has a secret invention connected with war, another Government would not hesitate to buy it, if it had the chance, and this would be deemed well within the rules of the game. But in these buyings all accredited representatives of the buying country would keep clear of direct communication with the vendor. A go-between would be employed. Russia's position in respect to France is, however, a peculiar one, and, theoretically at least, it might be held that between such friends there could be no secrets which one would not be willing to reveal to the other.

The accuracy of Mr. Chamberlain's statement that the Cabinet (inclusive of himself) is actuated by the friendliest feeling towards France is somewhat discounted by his accompanying assurance that it is also united in approval of his West African policy and procedure. What he meant by the latter statement evidently was that it was united in the particular vote under discussion. Probably it would have been more exact, had he said that it was united in letting him get the money to play at soldiering in Africa in order to secure some sort of peace and quiet n their Cabinet meetings.

If Lord Salisbury and Mr. Chamberlain are the Damon and Pythias of politics, they most successfully conceal their union of hearts. So admirably do they dissemble their love, that, to the looker-on, there seems to be no love to dissemble.

In the House of Commons Mr. Curzon, as Lord Salis bury's direct representative, has more than once rushed to the front to answer questions addressed to Mr. Chamber lain, which the latter was preparing to answer. The day after Mr. Chamberlain had read his Sokoto-invasion telegram, many were surprised to see Lord Salisbury dashing through the lobby on his way to the Lords at a pace that did honour to his agility, tearing off his outer coat as he rushed along. "What was up?" they inquired of each other. What happened in the Lords furnished the answer. The Premier was on the war-path. But the enemy was not France: it was Mr. Chamberlain. The Lords do not sit long, and he was afraid that he might not be in time to undo the mischief of the telegram read in the House of Commons by Mr. Chamberlain on the previous night, which was making havoc with stocks and shares on the Stock Exchange.

The object of soldiers in war, as far as I understand it, is to put as many as possible of their enemies hors de combat. Gunpowder and guns, bullets and shells, in all their shapes and varieties, are designed primarily for the purpose of killing and maiming the enemy to the greatest possible extent. On principle, therefore, I am not altogether clear why the use of explosive bullets should be interdicted among civilised nations. If, however, such bullets are con sidered a breach of the rules of the game in civilised warfare, it is difficult to see on what ground the Dum Dum bullet of the Indian Government can be permitted. Everybody knows that the effect of this bullet when it hits a man is indistinguishable from that of an explosive bullet. In point of fact, I believe that it does actually burst owing to the air inside it, or for some other reason. But, however that may be, it goes through a process of disintegration which is virtually an explosion inside the man who is struck, and a corresponding process of disintegration ensues in all parts of the human frame within reach the bones in particular being pulverised.

Owing to the fact of the Afridis having captured many thousands of rounds of British ammunition during the late campaign, the effects of the bullet have been exhibited at the expense of our own troops, so that we have the best means of knowing what they are. It may be that the use of such a bullet in European warfare would not be a breach of the St. Petersburg Convention, to which we are one of the signatories; but it is quite certain that there would be an outcry against any European Power which used the bullet against any other; and if the St. Petersburg Convention is to be anything but waste paper, it will have to be so altered as to include the Dum Dum or any similar projectile. That being so, those who object to our using such a bullet against Afridis, or others who are not parties to the St. Petersburg Convention, seem to have reason and justice on their side.

In view of the County Council election, the following question seems timely:—

Dear Sir,—It appears to be now established as a matter of common honesty and commercial morality that a man should not be a director of the Grosvenor Hotel, and also a director of the laundry company which does work for the Grosvenor Hotel.

How then can Mr. Boulnois, a Water Company director, and leading light of the Water Companies' joint committee, reconcile it with his conscience to also represent the interests of the rate-payers who have no choice but to be customers of the Water Companies?—Yours, &c.

Perhaps some Marylebone elector will take an oppor tunity of asking this question.

THE MODERATE WAR-SONG.

With fuss and with fluster
The Moderates muster
At the tap of the Tory big-drum;
Resolved, now or never,
On frantic endeavour,
The hordes of Monopolists come.
Ground-landlords in legions
From rack-rented regions,
Their banner of "Privilege" wave;
Abuses' protectors,
And Water-directors
March wildly their pockets to save.
The slyest House-knacker,
The harshest Rent-racker,
Whose gains in the balance are hung,
Now, visibly bolder,
Stand shoulder to shoulder,
With Gog, and with Bumble, and Bung,
And all of them spouting,
And yelling and shouting
Are eager an audience to find,
For they have good reason
Their chance thus to seize on—
They all have their axes to grind.
And this is the fashion
With more or less passion,
They frankly their motives confess,
As each eager section
On Thursday's election
All London proceeds to address:—

Chorus of Ground Landlords.

You may wonder at our clamour, but we've reason to complain,
And to make the strongest efforts these Progressives to restrain;

For Mosquito Bites nothing allays the irritation so quickly as Scrubb's Cloudy Fluid Ammonia, and it is an immediate remedy for Wasp or Bee Stings.

For remember our position—sure as quarter day's returned,
We for years have filled our pockets with an increment unearned.
By our tenants and their neighbours vast improvements have been made,
T'wards the cost of which no penny has by us been ever paid.
Whatsoever fancy value for our land has been created,
It is understood our ground-rents should on no account be rated.
But these pestilent Progressives have the impudence to say
That we ought a fair proportion of our City's rates to pay.
Was there ever such extortion as these Radicals now lean to?
We have never paid a penny, and we never, never mean to!

So, London voters, if you please,
Upon this great occasion seize,
Or there's no chance remote for us.
Come, simple citizens, befriend
The ground-rents which we would defend,
Come, and to-morrow's polls attend,
And in your thousands vote for us!

Chorus of Water Company Directors.

These same pestilent Progressives dare to us attack as well,
But we're sure that grateful London will such agitators quell.
We are sure that grateful London will remember that our plan
Is to take as much and render just as little as we can;
Is to dole out doubtful water with an intermittent hand,
But to not be intermittent in the rates that we demand;
And to see, when mains are frozen, or when reservoirs run dry,
That we still succeed in charging for a full and free supply.
And if some day, as at Maidstone, typhoid germs should wriggle through,
Surely London for a moment cannot doubt what we should do:
We should all responsibility most certainly disclaim,
And send round our rate collectors every quarter just the same!

So, London voters, if you please,
Upon this great occasion seize,
And all our virtues quote for us!
Come, simple citizens, befriend
The vested interest we defend;
Come, and to-morrow's poll attend,
And in your thousands vote for us!

Chorus of Vestrymen.

In the mighty name of Bumble we appeal for London's aid;
These Progressive chaps mean mischief, and they make us feel afraid.
In the name of Mr. Bumble, help us still to keep at bay
Those reforms which, if effected, would sweep all of us away—
Those reforms which, if effected, would clear out the vilest slums,
And would take away the profits of slum-owners—our best chums.
In the name of Mr. Bumble, help us still to rob and job,
And to stop the busy prying of such fellows as John Lobb!

Brandauer's Circular-Pointed Pens. Neither scratch nor spurt. Glide over the roughest paper with the ease of a soft lead pencil. Assorted sample box, 7 stamps, from the Works, Birmingham.

Help us still to gorge and guzzle, and the public funds to share
In a way that apes corruption quite as closely as we dare!
And oh! help us, as you love us, so that we may soon obtain
That much-longed-for badge of office, and that coveted gold chain.
For they'd bring that social status that at present we so lack,
And our "dignity" might save us when exposed to fresh attack.

So, London voters, if you please,
Upon this great occasion seize,
Or there's no chance remote for us!
Come, simple citizens, attend
To-morrow's polls and there defend
The system which the Rads would end—
Come, and in thousands vote for us!

General Chorus of Monopolists, Contractors, Back-Scratchers, and Axe-Grinders.

You must come and help us, voters, if you wish to see once more
The strong arm of Progress palsied as it oft has been before;
You must come and help us, voters, if your poor you'd still repress,
And would leave them helpless, hopeless in their dirt and their distress:
If you'd stop the Parks and music that have made their lives more bright,
You must vote the Moderate ticket—yes, with all your main and might!
If you'd give a sum immoderate for the tram-lines that you buy
You must send us to Spring-gardens, those Progressives to defy.
If you'd help the rich contractor larger profits yet to hoard
You must vote for the whitewashers of your great Asylums Board:
And, in short, if London's government should still be our disgrace,
We're the men to serve your purpose if you'll give us power and place!

So, London voters, if you please,
Upon this great occasion seize
And our success promote for us;
Muster in thousands to befriend
The rank abuses we defend,
And show that you our aims commend
By polling every vote for us!

SCRUTATOR.

CHAMBERLAIN IN THE HINTERLAND.

THE doctrine of Imperial expansion that Mr. Chamberlain preaches and practises is one which not many years ago would hardly have been regarded as within the area of practical politics. The only field now left for this expansion is in Africa. The greater portion of the interior of that vast continent is peopled by tribes, each claiming ownership in the little district where it lives, or by some collection of tribes, one of which has reduced to its rule the others, when the chief is called a King. According to international law, in the making of which Africans had no voice, the natives of Africa have no absolute right of ownership in their own land. In some cases they are conquered by whites; in other cases they are swindled out of their territory by a treaty that they are induced to sign for a bottle of gin or an old coat, not knowing what a treaty is. Several of the European Powers have divided Africa amongst them, and each claims the exclusive right of shooting or swindling natives in his own sphere. Often, however, these Powers fall out with each other as to the limits of their respective spheres. The plea for all this is the civilising advantage to Africa of being provided with European goods. But these goods have to be paid for, and no African is prepared to work for any goods, unless it may be a little light work to obtain a bottle of spirits with which to get drunk, or a gun with which to shoot his neighbour; therefore, all the European Powers are obliged to tolerate slavery of Africans inter se in these spheres, or to force them to work for the whites. In days past the African exports consisted of slaves, and a very remunerative business was done in this merchandise. We have suppressed this export, and we are surprised that any Christian countries could ever have been engaged in the trade. As it seems to me, however, we have replaced it by making the Africans slaves at home. And our old friend the Nonconformist Conscience sleeps!

On the Bight of Benin, France, Germany and ourselves have colonies upon the sea-board. Behind them, up to the ninth parallel, each colony has its hinterland, and the lines of demarcation are clearly defined. At the thirteenth parallel begins the hinterland of the French Mediterranean possessions. Eastward our Lagos hinterland is bounded by a German hinterland, and the frontiers between both have been agreed to. Westward the line between French and English hinterland has never been drawn between the ninth and thirteenth parallel, although it is admitted that about nine-tenth of the hinterland that we claim is ours. A Commission is now sitting at Paris to draw this frontier line.

In the meantime, each country is sending armed negroes to run up flags in the villages of the disputed region, the right to do so being based upon priority of treaty with the chief of the village. Behind our Gold Coast Colony and the French Dahomey Colony, the same thing is going on; for there, too, further north than the ninth parallel, there has been no delimitation. Titles to land often present a good deal of difficulty in Europe; in Central Africa, where not even the geography is clearly known, the difficulty is, of course, greater. It signifies really very little to whom these hinterlands, or, rather, strips of hinterland, belong. The essential is that the respective frontiers shall be laid down, so that we and the French do not quarrel over what is a bone with very little meat on it. So far as regards ourselves, we have, both behind Lagos and behind the Gold Coast Colony, as much hinterland as the most greedy can desire. Behind the former, we have taken under our Protectorate the Empire of Sokoto, although we do not exactly know what this Empire is. We should have done far better to content ourselves with seeing that there should be free trade in this region. The consequence of our Protectorate is that we are enrolling an Army to aid our feudatory Emperor in his raids. Slavery is the law in all this "happy land," and with this we shall not meddle, for without it, as a field for our commercial enterprise, it would be useless.

Mr. Chamberlain is never satisfied unless he can attract attention to himself. In order to do this, he has been doing his utmost to envenom this question of a frontier line, and this endeavour culminated in his reading telegrams from the region in dispute designed to arouse angry passions between the two countries; and reading them with a dramatic solemnity that convinced me that, had he adopted the stage as a pursuit, he would have run Sir Henry Irving close. Lord Salisbury is not disposed to allow us to drift into war for the benefit of Mr. Chamberlain, and he has poured oil on the waters which had been troubled by these telegrams. But he has weakly yielded, in allowing Mr. Chamberlain to send out nearly two hundred officers to enlist an army of blacks in the Lagos Colony, and in leaving it to him to direct this force. He will have to look very closely to prevent such a use being made of this army that we shall find iourselves embroiled with France.

Last Tuesday £130,000 was voted for the Chamberlain Army, and he explained that we shall have to pay for its maintenance. This will cost us about £200,000 per annum. The vote was challenged, but very few English Members voted against it, and Sir Edward Grey from the front Opposition Bench had nothing but praise for the Colonial Secretary. If, however, the Liberals outside Parliament were polled, I am inclined to think that there would be a majority against all the Africa-raiding that goes on South, North, East, and West in that continent. Africa has become the chief hunting-ground of the Jingoes. Now, Jingoism means this: for democratic reform at home, we are to substitute annexations, raids, and wars in Africa. These cost us huge sums of money, and will cost more, for our Army is to be increased by 23,000 men. One of the reasons why we lost the last election was that the Liberal Party abrogated all its former principles, and declared itself even more Jingo than its opponents. Jingoism is all to the advantage of the Tories. When we profess ourselves believers in the creed, we gain no adherents. We are regarded as mere amateurs, pretending belief in the hopes of catching votes. Naturally, the electors who are of the Jingo persuasion prefer the men who honestly believe in this pernicious faith, and whose interests are bound up in it, to amateurs masquerading in borrowed garments. Until the Liberals in Parliament perceive this, and oppose Jingoism in all its various forms, the Liberal Party will be little more than an historical expression. Jingoism is Militarism; and Jingoism and Militarism are almost identical terms. Democracy means peace, economy, and reform. Toryism means war, expenditure, and no reform. We have surrendered the cardinal principles of our Party, because we found that they were unpopular. Have we gained by it? The result of the last General Election furnishes an answer.

SNARES FOR LONDON VOTERS.

Unionists who are not personally concerned with London politics are apprehensive that a "Moderate" victory in the County Council election will have a disastrous effect on Unionist prospects at the next Parliamentary election. In that I think they are right. The reason is this: the most Democratic and Radical part of the London vote at Parliamentary elections is that of the lodgers, who do not vote for the County Council. The sympathies of the lodgers are in the main with the Progressives in municipal affairs. By using the Unionist name and the Unionist machinery, as they are now doing, the Moderates may possibly gain a majority at the County Council election; but they are alienating at the same time from the Unionist side so many who have no sympathy with the inanities and futilities of "Moderate" municipal politics, that when the lodger vote comes to be thrown in at the Parliamentary election, Unionism in London will be seriously damaged. Let us hope that the event may justify this reasoning. Provincial Conservatives and Unionists are also aghast, and with good cause, at an attempt to identify Unionism with a policy directly opposed to everything that is accepted as good municipal government in the chief provincial towns.

That the Moderates are going to win on Thursday I do not say. Political prophecy is not in my line. There is no doubt that Lord Onslow and his friends have succeeded in awakening most strenuous opposition, and that many of their keenest opponents are convinced Unionists, Looking, however, at the overwhelming majority secured by the Unionists in London at the last General Election. and at the undisguised use now being made of the Party machinery to force every Unionist voter to the poll on the Moderate side, I confess I shall be agreeably surprised if this effort fails.

My estimate of the intelligence of the London elector is not high. He is told in his Times and Standard that the Progressive policy will involve increased rates; and I doubt if he is capable of seeing for himself that rates in London can only be reduced either by starving all existing public services, or by obtaining additional revenue by rating ground-rents, and acquiring for public use the vast profits of the water, tramway, lighting, and other monopolies. Lord Onslow and the Moderate penmen and canvassers din into him every day that the Progressive policy in this respect is a policy of "fads," or "rash experiments," or "municipal Socialism," and he is too ignorant or careless to ask himself in reply why what every great town in the Kingdom has done successfully should be "a fad," or "rash," or "Socialistic" when London attempts it. The Moderate programme is a programme designed chiefly by monopolists, owners of ground-rents, and contractors, for fools and indolent Metropolitan householders, who take their opinions ready-made from their daily papers, who have never seen municipal government as it is organised in other towns, and feel no interest in the subject. It is, therefore, a programme well adapted to London constituencies.

The Brook Hospital case has come to light opportunely as an object-lesson for the County Council Election. The Metropolitan Asylums Board is a body on the pattern of the good old Metropolitan Board of Works. It is thoroughly "Moderate" in constitution and tone. It therefore has a strong belief in the contractor, and a strong feeling that he ought to have a free hand. It would shrink with horror from any idea so "Socialistic" as that of undertaking its own building work itself in order to protect its constituents against the contractor. Its architect estimated the cost of the Brook Hospital at £194,810. The lowest tender that could be obtained was £218,171. The ultimate cost was £268,507. A further interesting fact was that the manufacturer, who, under the specification, was to supply the bricks, was the chairman of the sub-committee of the Board which had charge of the work. This was illegal, and the illegality was pointed out by the officials of the Board before the work was taken in hand, but nevertheless the chairman of the sub-committee did, by a roundabout course, supply certain of the bricks, though he disclaims any knowledge that he was doing so. The Asylums Board has inquired into, and has glossed over, these peculiar facts. One of the whitewashers is Mr. White, himself a builder and contractor. This gentleman also sits on the London County Council as a "Moderate" member for Marylebone. In that capacity he has been a leader in the assault on the Works Department of the Council. The only offence of the Works Department is that on certain jobs it exceeded its architect's estimate. There is no proof that any contractor could have done the work cheaper or better. On the other hand, the Works Department has undoubtedly delivered London and its ratepayers from a ring of contractors, and has done the bulk of its work below the architect's estimates. Accordingly Mr. White and the Moderates, who find nothing objectionable in the little excess of £74,000 of cost over estimate upon one single job done by a contractor for the Asylums Board, are filled with horror at vastly smaller excesses in the case of the County Council Works Department, and one and all unite in beseeching the ratepayers to abolish such a Socialistic fad, and place themselves once more in the hands of their good friends the contractors. On the part of Mr. White, the builder and contractor, and all his friends, this is an intelligible attitude. But that the ratepayers of London should walk into the parlour of Mr. White and his friends simply for the reason that these disinterested gentlemen are opposed to Home Rule for Ireland, denotes a state of mind beyond my comprehension. It has been said on high authority that the snare is set in vain in the sight of any bird. The snare is pretty conspicuous this time, but it has yet to be seen whether the London voter has a sharp enough eye for it.

ARMY TINKERS AT WORK.

The most material point, to my thinking, in Mr. Brodrick's statement on the Army Estimates is the reason for the increase in the Army now proposed. Although three new battalions were raised last year, we are now asked for 23,000 additional men. Why? Because (1) "we have twenty battalions on the North-West Frontier, calling upon us for additional drafts; (2) we have sent two additional battalions and three batteries to South Africa; (3) we have had to furnish three more for active service up the Nile—and may have to send more; and (4) we have sent one to Crete." In other words, we have to furnish twenty battalions on the North West Frontier, with additional drafts, to gratify the Old Forward Party; we have to furnish two battalions and three batteries to the Cape for the benefit of Mr. Chamberlain, the New Forward Party; we have to find another three battalions, and probably more, to gratify our insane Jingo policy in Egypt; and we have to offer up another battalion in Crete as a sacrifice to the Concert of Europe. The whole of the increase in the Army, with its attendant cost, is, therefore, directly due to the blustering and blundering Foreign and Colonial policy of our present rulers.

To criticise here in any detail the Government Army proposals would require more space than I have at my disposal, and is not necessary in view of what has already been said about them in TRUTH. Many of the changes which are to be carried out are undoubtedly in the right direction, more especially those which directly affect our friend Tommy Atkins. But how the taxpayers and their representatives can consent to the enormous outlay now proposed on merely tinkering up a system which leads to such unsatisfactory results as at present, I am unable to understand. Tinkering is the only name for it. For the increase of infantry battalions a twofold reason is put forward, viz., that the number of troops maintained abroad unduly depletes the home battalions, and that we ought to have two army corps at home ready in a moment to attack any Power with whom we have a quarrel. Assuming that we have in India and the Colonies a sufficient force for the defence of our territories—and surely 120,000 men, in addition to the Indian native army, ought to be sufficient for that purpose—what do we want with two complete Army Corps at home? Who are they going to fight? Suppose we were involved in any of the wars with which we have been threatened during the last twelve months, say with Germany, France, or Russia: do our military authorities seriously propose to send a couple of Army Corps to invade any one of those countries? If so, it matters little or not of what troops they are composed, or whether they are perfectly equipped or otherwise. They will most assuredly be annihilated within a few days of their landing, and I should say, under these circumstances, the less money we waste upon them beforehand the better.

On the other hand, if the purpose of the Home Army is merely Home defence, the first object of an intelligent Army reformer would seem to me to be to organise our present Auxiliary Forces in such a way that they may form a trustworthy second line of defence in the event of our first line, the Navy, being broken through. The neglect of the Auxiliary Forces by the War Office is the blackest spot in the record. In the Militia and the Volunteers, properly organised, we have the raw material of an army amply sufficient for all purposes of Home defence. But no attempt has ever been made, nor is there apparently any hope of its being made, to make them anything better than raw material, to organise or equip them so that they could take the field against a modern European army. The money spent on these forces, exceeding, so far as I can make out, £1,000,000 per annum, is virtually wasted. The Militia gets a little place in Mr. Brodrick's programme. But it only seems to be treated as a sort of feeder of the Line. The Volunteers pass altogether unnoticed; although by an expenditure of less than the extra money that is now being asked for the Regular Army, they might be converted into a force capable of holding its own against any foreign enemy that is ever likely to land on our shores. There seems to be an utter lack of intelligent appreciation at the War Office of the necessity of reorganising our forces to meet the altered conditions of our own Empire and of military warfare in Europe. The idea that we can, under present conditions, repeat the exploits of Marlborough or Wellington on the Continent is chimerical, and ought to be abandoned. We should have a foreign service army sufficient for the defence of India and the Colonies, and we should have such establishments of regular troops at Home as are necessary to feed it, and to meet a sudden call on an emergency in any distant part of the world. For the rest, our Home forces should be organised for the purpose of defending our shores in the event of any serious naval disaster, and for this purpose we should employ that modification of the Continental system which we already have in our Auxiliary Forces. Anything short of this merely tides over for the moment a difficulty which is certain to recur at the end of a few years. A system which, by the law of its being, necessarily breaks down as soon as the number of infantry battalions abroad is in excess of that at Home—that is to say, as soon as there is an exceptional call upon it—is a system useless for our purpose. To merely tinker it up every time it breaks down, and to lay with each tinkering operation an increased annual charge on the public exchequer, is an insane policy, which ought to be stopped.

FRANCE, ZOLA, AND DREYFUS.

Judging from the comments on the Zola trial in the English newspapers, I am inclined to think that I am one of the few inhabitants of this island who have taken the trouble to acquaint themselves with facts without any foregone conclusion. In 1894, it became evident that some person was communicating secrets connected with the French Army to a foreign Government. These secrets could only be known to a very few, and amongst them was a certain Dreyfus. Circumstances led to suspicion falling on him, and he was arrested. As is the law in France, a preliminary investigation took place. It was conducted by Colonel du Paty de Clam, and as he came to the conclusion that there was a primâ facie case against Dreyfus, the prisoner was brought before a court-martial. When the charge is that of having treasonable relations with a foreign Government, a French Court, whether civil or military, may conduct all proceedings in secret. The case was therefore tried in secret. Dreyfus had for his counsel a distinguished French lawyer. He was found guilty and sentenced to penal servitude for life. The proceedings were submitted to the officers of the General Staff, and they confirmed the finding and the sentence, as did the then Minister of War, General Mercier, who had it in his power to insist on a new trial if, in his opinion, the verdict was not in conformity with the evidence, or there had been irregularities of procedure.

Dreyfus is a Jew, and his family is a wealthy one. At once a campaign was inaugurated to obtain a revision of the sentence. In this campaign it is admitted that large funds were employed. The ground first taken was that there is so strong a feeling in France against Jews, that no Jew can have a fair trial, and that consequently Dreyfus must have been unfairly condemned. This was supplemented by statements in regard to the procedure before the court-martial, for which there was no evidence, and which, therefore, may or may not be true.

Later on it leaked out that one portion of the evidence against Dreyfus had been a "bordereau." This was a letter written to some person, detailing the secrets, and asking what more was required. This bordereau was alleged by the prosecution to be in Dreyfus' handwriting. By some occult means, a newspaper got hold of a photograph of it, and published what was alleged to be a fac-simile of the photograph, together with the opinion of experts that it was not written by Dreyfus. It was further asserted that the bordereau was the only evidence that had been shown to Dreyfus and his counsel, all other evidence being shown alone to the court-martial, and this, too, may or may not have been true.

Then another development took place. Colonel Picquart had become the head of the investigating department of the General Staff. It was reported that he questioned whether Dreyfus was guilty, and was inclined to believe that the bordereau had been written by a Major Esterhazy. This rumour proved correct, and at once the campaigners charged the Major with having been the guilty man in regard to the charges for which Dreyfus was condemned. In order to clear up the matter, Esterhazy was brought before a court-martial. It was shown that it was impossible that he could have known the secrets that were revealed in the bordereau. All that the campaigners could put forward was that, years ago, piqued at some fancied injustice, he had spoken in unbecoming terms of the French Army in some letters to an aunt, and that, in the opinion of some experts, his handwriting bore a resemblance to that of the bordereau. The court appointed three experts to compare the two handwritings, and they swore that, to the best of their belief, the bordereau was not written by him. Esterhazy was therefore acquitted, and rightly, for no evidence tending to show that he was the guilty man was submitted to the Court.

Then Zola came on the scene. He published a letter in which he asserted, not only that Dreyfus was innocent, and Esterhazy guilty, but that the officers on the two courts-martial, the Generals who confirmed the verdicts, General Mercier, the Minister of War in 1894, and General Billot, the present Minister of War, had all been engaged in a conspiracy to secure this monstrous miscarriage of justice. On this Zola was charged with defamation. The charge was limited to the Esterhazy trial, because the Dreyfus trial had been held in secret, and consequently, as the grounds for secrecy still continued, it was thought undesirable to re-try the case in public by means of a by-issue. Before, however, the trial took place, General Billot stated in the Chamber not only that he was convinced himself of Dreyfus's guilt, but that the man had confessed it.

At the commencement of the trial the Judge laid down that the Court could not go into any question relating to the Dreyfus trial. Zola had called all the Generals and other officers of the General Staff connected with that trial as witnesses. They declined to answer questions put to them in regard to the proceedings before the Dreyfus court-martial. On neither side was anything of what we should call evidence submitted. The Generals made speeches, Colonel Picquart made speeches, and various other witnesses called for the defence made speeches. The proceedings wound up with a speech from M. Zola, in which he swore by his novels that Dreyfus was not guilty; and by a clever rhetorical effort by his advocate, Maître Labori, suggesting and affirming much for which—as would be said in our courts—no foundation had been laid in examination or cross-examination. The main point of the advocate seems to have been that, as the Generals declined to say whether evidence had been laid before the Dreyfus court-martial that had not been shown to the accused man or his counsel, it was to be taken for granted that this had taken place, and that, consequently, there had been such a miscarriage of justice as proved a conspiracy to find him guilty. This contention, however, hardly holds water, for if the Generals declined to state what had taken place on the court-martial on the ground of their obligation to maintain secrecy, it is evident that they could only reply by refusing to answer the particular questions as to what had been submitted, or what had not, to the prisoner and his counsel. In regard either to Dreyfus or Esterhazy no new facts of any importance were elicited. Whether Zola's accusation was true or false, he certainly failed to prove it before the court. The jury, therefore, found him guilty of defamation and he was sentenced to a year's imprisonment.

The above are the plain facts of the Dreyfus-Esterhazy-Zola affair. Zola, we are told, has done a noble work. Where the nobility comes in, I do not perceive. He is a clever writer, but he has a diseased mind. His novels are so foul in their beastiality that I, who am not a blushing young girl, have more than once thrown away one or other of them in disgust. This beastiality was evidently introduced into them with a view to attract attention. Possibly he may believe in this conspiracy against an innocent man, but it is still more probable that he wished to attract attention to himself. He insists that it is monstrous to insinuate that he insulted the Army. Suppose that there had been a secret trial of an officer for treason in England; that the court-martial had found him guilty; that the sentence had been confirmed by Lord Wolseley and Sir Evelyn Wood; and that Lord Lansdowne in the House of Lords had stated, not only that he was convinced that the verdict had been a proper one, but that the officer had confessed his guilt. If, in such a case, an English novelist had come forward, sworn by his novels that the officer was innocent, and charged all concerned in the trial and Lord Lansdowne with being guilty of conduct which would compare disadvantageously with that of Caiaphas and Pilate, I am inclined to think that English officers would have felt that our Army had been insulted, and that in this opinion most Englishmen would have concurred.

I cannot see why the French should be abused for their attitude in regard to this Dreyfus affair. I am not, of course, speaking of mobs who attack Jews, but of the almost unanimous belief that Dreyfus was guilty, and had been rightly found guilty. The friends of this man imported the race element into the issue. They commenced their campaign with the assertion that, because he was a Jew, the verdict against him could not be just. They "worked" the Press, a large portion of which, both in France and elsewhere, is in the hands of Jews. To assert on the evidence that Dreyfus was guilty is absurd, because we do not know what that evidence is; but it is equally absurd to assert on the evidence that he is innocent. Zola has put it clearly: either we must believe that all the officers concerned in the trial acted fairly and honourably, or that they one and all were united in a conspiracy deliberately to disgrace and send to penal servitude an innocent man; and I hold that the first of these two alternatives is the more tenable one. The jury, it is said, in the Zola trial, were afraid to find him not guilty. There is not one single Judge on the English Bench who would not, on the case presented, have summed up in favour of a verdict of guilty. I certainly have no prejudice against Dreyfus because he is a Jew, for I rather like Jews, and I think that the Christian Esterhazy is, on his own showing, a very shady person. I look simply and solely to facts. I believe that French officers are a thoroughly honourable set of men, and that Zola's accusation against a number of them is so improbable that I certainly should require the clearest evidence to believe it, whereas there is none. Of course, it is possible that the courts-martial, the General Staffs, and General Billot may have been mistaken. But here, again, we have no evidence on which to base an opinion, for all proceedings before the Dreyfus court-martial were private. Many of these gentlemen are men of distinguished position, and I see no reason to suppose that they were not perfectly able to come to a right conclusion in regard to Dreyfus's guilt or innocence. It is asserted by the Dreyfus campaigners that certain evidence was shown to the court-martial and not to the prisoner or his counsel. This has not been proved. Possibly it may be true, possibly it may not, for the officers concerned in the court-martial were not lawyers, and the proceedings of courts-martial are often of a rough-and-ready character, which would not be allowed in a civil court. General Billot and General Pellieux have both declared that the proceedings were strictly legal, and until it is proved that they were not, we must accept this statement.

It seems to me that the French Government would act wisely in submitting evidence and procedure to a committee composed of independent men like M. Cavaignac. The committee would then report (1) whether the evidence on which Dreyfus was condemned justified the verdict; (2) whether there were such irregularities of procedure during the man's trial as to justify the demand for a new trial. The declaration of such a committee that the man was guilty, and that the trial was fairly conducted, would set at rest the whole Dreyfus question; whilst, if unable to say this, he ought to be re-tried. Very few persons really doubt that Dreyfus was guilty; but a good many do doubt that his trial was strictly in accordance with legal procedure. By law, it would seem that the chose jugée cannot be reopened, unless new evidence is forthcoming of such weight as would justify the belief that an innocent man has been wrongly condemned, or that there have been such irregularities of procedure in the trial as would justify its finding being set aside and a new trial ordered. But the Government of a country has to look a little beyond the strict law in matters such as this. The whole trouble has arisen owing to the trial having been in secret, and the sooner the law is changed in this particular the better it will be for France. It may be that, when a man is publicly tried for having betrayed secrets to a foreign Government, publicity will create ill-feeling between the two countries. This is an evil, but, as the Dreyfus secret trial has proved, a secret trial is a still greater evil.

"THE WHITE KNIGHT."

An unfortunate and misleading title for Mr. Edward Terry's new play! Theatre goers may be induced to imagine that this delightfully droll actor has taken it into his head to play Lohengrin, Tannhäuser, or Parsifal, whereas he is only a semi-comic, semi-pathetic inventor, with a sensitive conscience and tears in his voice. It is one of the tricks of the trade nowadays for the comic actor to dabble in sentiment. The cobbler can very seldom be induced to stick to his last. One of the oldest and funniest actors on the stage, with a face that might have been modelled for the mask of comedy, has been dying all his life for an opportunity of playing Richard III. The cases of "low comedy merchants" who have been breaking their hearts for a chance of appearing as Hamlet, Prince of Denmark, are innumerable. Edward Terry is no doubt a first-class comedian, gifted by nature with humour and also a pathetic stop. He proved that as dear old Dick Phenyl in "Sweet Lavender." Who will ever forget his wailing utterance of "Clemmy, my boy?"

Mr. Stewart Ogilvie, one of the rising dramatists of the day, has not put Edward Terry into armour, as the posters insist, but has made him an earnest City man, with his busy brain full of inventions, but too honest a man to cope with the scoundrels of the financing world. He is amiable, tender, and lovable. Luckily he secures as his partner for life, after all his troubles are at an end, the sweet-voiced and excellent Kate Rorke, whose charming presence in any play is ever a source of universal delight. There is one fine scene which no doubt brought out the tragic ambition of Edward Terry, where the thinking and inventive man bursts into the board-room, and discovers the swindlers. But the dark cloud has a silver lining, and all Edward Terry's anxieties and worries are driven away by the welcomo sound of marriage bells. Miss Esmé Beringer plays an adventuress, who is rather forced into the comedy with a second plot. She is a capable, earnest, and industrious actress, who has only to guard against excess of expression and over-emphasis, faults on the right side, but still faults that should be fought down. With a clever and well-selected company, the little play was soon lifted to success. Edward Terry is naturally a great favourite, and his friends like to see his upward advance from the wildest of burlesques and extravaganzas in the old Strand and Gaiety days to what I should call in these more responsible and earnest times a combination of Robsonian or Cravenesque humour and pathos. Good acting is never lost on the discriminating public, and Edward Terry is emphatically a good actor; so is Mr. Abingdon, who, alas! is always cast for the stage villain, when his heart hankers after Romeos and Orlandos.

NOTES FROM PARIS.

We have not yet come to the end of the Zola affair. All the Professors who publicly sympathised with him or Dreyfus are trembling for their places. The old Professor Grimaux, of the Polytechnic, who pleaded so ardently at the witness-bar for Zola, trembles lest his pension should be curtailed. He has been, in all but terms, dismissed. Poor old Grimaux is son and nephew of sea-dogs who worried and spoiled the English during the first Empire, and a Chauvin of the Chauvins. What I do not like in those "intellectuels" is their utter indifference to administrative iniquities that do not entail suffering on rich people. Not ono of them raised his voice against the police "raids" and other wicked things got up to show the late Czar what a strong Government France was blessed with. The Government was quite as arbitrary as his own, but in another way. Vaillant was egged on by the police to throw his harmless bomb in the Chamber of Deputies. He was supplied by secret agents of the Government with money to mako it. The "intellectuels" accepted, as a matter of course, the awful laws that the bomb was an excuse for passing. Those laws have never been applied, but were Prince Henri de Chartres King, and Esterhazy Minister of War, they might well be. In that case the "intellectuels" might long for liberty as in Russia. This does not palliate the injustice done to Dreyfus in not giving him a trial in conformity with legal rules. But que voulez-vous? His class, as opportunists, sowed the wind; there is now a reaping of the whirlwind.

To complete my snap-shots of the Zola trial. Were Zola a man of small vanity, he would not have sat beside Labori. I fancy that Victor Hugo in his place would have managed to be detached. He would, to have been in telling relief, have asked for a seat in the dock. The seat of infamy would thenceforth, in his eyes, have been exalted into a glorious pedestal. Such a notion could not present itself to Zola's mind, which has no sense, so far as he himself goes, of dramatic effect. In sitting by Labori ho was at a disadvantage. As I said before, Zola hides power—mental and other; Labori parades it, without meaning to do so. He has a splendid physique, and tho dignity and lusty life of an Assyrian bull with a Royal human head. The fair hair grows down thick on his forehead. This advocate has pliancy and mobility. He possesses the whole keyboard of the passions and emotions. But I do hope he will not practiso much in Assize Courts. Clap-trap and play-acting for jurios are so vulgarising; yet the temptation to indulge in them is scarcely to be resisted.

The only great Assize Court advocate I can remember who managed not to be vulgarised was Lachaud. His exceptional strength of body kept him fresh. Mixing socially with the most clever and brilliant people, he imbibed their tone. It gave charm to his vigour. His mother-in-law had the last salon where conversation was not banished by music, though she had the best musicians going. At the outset of his career Lachaud's eloquence and gift of tears exalted into a heroine a woman who poisoned her husband. As he advanced in life, he sometimes bellowed to a jury and drenched his pocket-handkerchief with tears. But he learned to coax and wheedle in a bland and softly pathetic manner. His effects were touch and go. When he rose to a storm of emotion in declaring the innocence of some guilty wretch, he was really fine, and not a bit vulgar. But it was ruinous to an innocent person to be defended by Lachaud. The jury took for granted that since he retained that advocate, he must be an arrant rascal. Lachaud's tears, somehow, did not flow for an innocent client. There was not uphill work enough to put him on his mettle. His tears flowed less freely. The pathos seemed to lack sincerity. It was said that the most he ever did for a guiltless client was to obtain "extenuating circumstances." But he constantly brought guilt through with flying colours.

Zola has worked thirty-six years in a quiet study. He was at a disadvantage in showing himself in public, and especially in reading. The reflexes of the brain do not operate in the same way when one writes, as when one speaks before a large audience. I almost think that much writing cripples oratorical power, and vice versâ. Dictated literature is poor mechanical stuff. Zola's nerves played him unpleasant tricks as he read his address to the jury. The forehead was lost in those horizontal wrinkles. But he was admirable when judgment was passed, and behaved as a mere disinterested spectator. It calmed him, and he is now quite reconciled to a year's confinement. His admirers are delighted at the ordeal. "Martyrdom for a cause must add to his glory as an author." Mme. Zola has worked horself up not to flinch. She finds consolation in thinking that but for the sentence he might have been lynched. It has been as the lightning-rod in the thunderstorm.

I have noglected Mme. Zola. Ladies should be drawn with crayons made out of the dust of butterflies' wings. But where find them? She is a sweet creature. The natural refinement and charm come of the three thousand years of civilisation to which the descendants of the Gallo Romans are heirs. She looks an Arlésienne, but is a Parisienne. Her figure is tall and flexible; her face expressive, beaming with the pallor of a healthy brunette. A pair of lambent black eyes lights it up. The raven hair, crisp, curly, and so thick, is brushed up high from the forehead. She is in all respects most shapely: shapely features, a shapely waist, shapely hands; and is just as unaffected as Zola. Of all the authors I have ever met, he is the freest from conceit. He is also guileless, not to say innocent. The horrors in which he sometimes deals as a novelist are not painted from personal experience, but from mere glimpses, helped by divination. Those nerves of his enable him to divine. His naturalism often blooms in beauty, as in that Eden in "La Faute de l'Abbé Mouron," or gives out noisome effluvia. In both cases it has germinated and evolved in his inner consciousness.

"Le Nouveau Jeu" represents Paris life "up to date." The author is more useful than Baedecker. In "Viveurs," he shows us the best restaurant in Paris, Durand's, at the Madeleine.

Thus, Zola saw nothing whatever (save in the streets) of the high jinks of Imperial France. Yet, in reading "La Curée" one might fancy that he went to the De Morny and the De Chasseloup-Laubat fancy balls. The first time I saw Zola was at Menier's. But I had heard much of his promising talents, fine character, and truthfulness from a M. Duret, an accomplished historian, who has been all those years my very good friend, and the most intimate friend of Zola. Duret may be said to have "discovered" Zola as the Empire tottered to its fall. He founded then an opposition paper, La Tribune. Zola was asked to furnish the feuilleton, and wrote for it "Thérèse Raquin." This novel is a drama of the conscience, and the strongest thing Zola ever wrote. I subscribed to La Tribune for the sake of the feuilleton. It showed the influence of "Renée de Mauperin," a novel of the Goncourts. But the depth of "Thérèse Raquin" was not to be sounded. Nemesis is brought in with circumstances that almost paralyse one with horror, and yet in the most natural way. Marie Laurent longed to be young again, to come out in "Thérèse Raquin" as adapted to the stage, and teach the world what a penal scourge is a guilty conscience.

Zola's great source of material enjoyment is sumptuous furniture. His taste in this respect is Italian. French country houses are very simply furnished. The curtains, when there are curtains, are generally chintz. Zola's place near Triel is an exception. The study, salon, and dining-room there reminded me, so far as furniture went, of the state rooms at Isola Bella. The bed-rock of Zola's sensorium is Venetian. He has the instincts of the magnifico. This may seem discrepant with what I said about his presence being like St. Paul's. But his mother was a French peasant. She redeemed him from Italian trickiness, and gave him his toughness and love of hard work. He has, in spite of his nervousness, Italian suavity. The agitation is only surface: down deep he is pococurante. No task daunts him. He is as methodic as Anthony Trollope, and writes whether in town or country, so many pages, and no more, a day, and then cycles, boats, gardens, or chats with friends who come down to Triel to pass the afternoon. The house there was at first a one-story roadside cottage, with a room to right and left of the little hall. Addition after addition have made it quite a big place. The garden has been widened and lengthened down to the river, where there is a boathouse. Zola is owner of an island facing his garden. The fine furniture greatly ties him down. It represents, with the villa, the interest of so much money that he thinks he cannot afford to summer, unless at Triel.

The simplicity of La Salle de la Gomme at Ste. Pélagie will be a great change after Zola's domestic sumptuosities. Fortunately, that prison is on a hill, and the air and view extensive. "La Salle de la Gomme" means "the swell's room." Rochefort made there last week a charming halt in his feverishly busy life; and he wrote a preface—an exquisite gem of French literature—for the Caran d'Ache edition of Lafontaine's "Fables."

LETTER FROM THE LINKMAN.

EMPERORS and Empresses, Kings, Queens, and Presidents, dear Lady Betty, are mere puppets; it is Gold that governs, and I have this week been permitted to enter the Holy of Holies in Threadneedle street, where the Gold King rests upon his trolley throne, undisturbed by his subjects, who are skurrying, squabbling, and swindling in his servce overhead.

Some of the curiosities of the Bank of England are well worth describing. In the printing-room a man sits at a little table, and every three seconds a machine hands him two complete five-pound notes. If he sits there six hours he receives over seventy thousand pounds, and in three hundred days over twenty millions in paper money! It is a strange duty for a man to have to perform—to sit at a table to receive from a machine twenty millions a year!

The vaults where the gold is stored are still more curious. In the antechamber to the Gold King's throne-room are a few men attired in almost mediæval costume, commanded by a very modern personage, who wears a frock-coat and a silk hat. The latter, with the assistance of another, who is also sprucely dressed, unlocks the iron gates of the vault. Around the well-whitewashed cellar are ranged trolleys, upon each of which rest bars of pure gold to the amount of eighty thousand pounds, the particular vault to which visitors are admitted containing two millions' worth of bullion. Through the thick walls can just be heard the confused murmur of the myriads above, who are hurrying, working, and worrying, eagerly endeavouring to obtain some trifle of the treasure which rests so placidly on the trolleys. Has there ever yet been a millionaire miser who has built for his gold such a throne-room? and did he sit there through the days thinking out all the good and all the evil which these millions might be made to do? But millionaires are seldom imaginative.

In another vault every note which is returned is stored for five years, and here is kept one, for twenty-five pounds, which stayed away for over a hundred years. It has been calculated that during that period the loss on the note in interest amounted to over six thousand pounds!

As a companion picture the following account of two inquests, which were held in London last week, may be quoted:—

"At Bethnal Green, on Wednesday, an inquest was held by Dr. Wynn Westcott on the body of a woman unknown, aged about sixty years. The woman was found sitting in a doorway unconscious and very cold. In her lap were two boxes of matches, and some crusts which she had evidently picked up in the street. Her clothes were thin and dirty, in fact, merely rags!"

"On the same day, Dr. Westcott also inquired into the death of William Grant, forty-three, dock labourer, Robert-street, Bethnal Green. On February 4 he became ill. His wife did not call in a doctor as she had no money, having only 4s. a week, after paying the rent, to provide food for her husband, herself, and her daughter. The medical evidence attributed death to exhaustion and want of food!"

There are only three living British writers whose works have any chance of becoming classics, to wit, Swinburne, Lecky, and Ruskin; and, it is unnecessary to add, that these authors are scarcely ever mentioned. A few weeks ago there was buried a writer—"Lewis Carroll"—whose creations will live long. Some of his writings will probably be as popular amongst British children for many generations as they have been for the past quarter of a century. A fund is being raised to endow a cot in the Hospital for Sick Children in memory of the author of "Alice in Wonderland" and "Through the Looking Glass," and it is to be hoped that all who have ever derived enjoyment from reading these admirable books will contribute to it. There are numerous children's associations throughout the country, and it would be a graceful tribute of gratitude were all of these to contribute to the fund for the proposed memorial to an author who has an especial claim to be called the Children's Friend.

A topical picture is now being sold in the streets, which should attract the attention of earnest Tories. It is a portrait of Mr. Joseph Chamberlain. Out of one of his pockets there is a small strip of cardboard, and under the picture are the following words:—"Find Lord Salisbury." Upon pulling the cardboard strip a small sketch of the Premier comes out of the pocket of Mr. Chamberlain. The Liberal Unionists did an excellent stroke of business when they seceded.—Believe me to be, very truly yours, MARMADUKE.

SPORTING NOTES.

When the winter betting on the Derby first commenced, backers were warned in Truth not to overlook the fact that M. E. Blanc's smart colt, Manitou, who was one of the best two-year-olds in France last season, is engaged at Epsom. I was quite alone in mentioning the name of Manitou in connection with the Derby, and it is probably assumed that, as is usually the case with French three-year-olds of high calibre, his owner will prefer to "go for" the Prix du Jockey Club (French Derby), which is run at Chantilly on the Sunday before the Epsom race. Of course it is easily possible for a colt to run at Chantilly on Sunday and at Epsom on the Wednesday afterwards; but the result of attempting to "go for" both these races has never been satisfactory. It may, however, be regarded as certain that Manitou will run only at Epsom, inasmuch as his owner has another candidate for the Prix du Jockey Club in the unbeaten Cazabat, who was decidedly the best two-year-old in France last autumn. "Pavo" describes Cazabat as "a most formidable outsider" for the Derby, but the son of Rueil and Clementine is not entered for the Epsom race, and, indeed, he has no engagement whatever in England. If Cazabat was in the Derby, and certain to start, his two-year-old form should entitle him to the position of first favourite, seeing that his running at Longchamps in October proved him to be quite a stone superior to Manitou, the latter, however, being a colt capable of much improvement, and he is said to have done very well during the winter.

Batt was recommended by me for the Derby when he was a complete outsider, and the latest accounts of the Duke of Westminster's colt are so favourable that if it was necessary now to back a horse for the Two Thousand and Derby, I would certainly select him. Batt is one of the few three-year-olds that can be justifiably expected to stay both the R.M. and the Epsom course. He has two engagements at the Newmarket Second Spring Meeting, the Newmarket Stakes and the Payne Stakes, but if he should win the Two Thousand he will probably be reserved for the Derby. The Newmarket Stakes may very likely take a deal more winning than the Two Thousand, as the entry includes both Cyllene and Hermiston, and, although Mr. Low's colt beat nothing when he won the only race for which he was started as a two-year-old, yet it should not be forgotten that in the autumn he was one of the best youngsters in the Kingsclere stable, and decidedly superior to Hawfinch. It is all vastly fine for people to indulge in supercilious sneers about a colt whose only victory was at such a meeting as Warwick, but, after all, it was over this same course that Sterling ran his first race in September, 1870.

"Pavo" is in error in stating that Orzil "is in the Derby but not in the Guineas," for Mr. Brassey's colt is in both races, and also in the Newmarket Stakes. Ever since the doleful collapse of Orzil in the Middle Park Plate I have regarded this colt as a non-stayer, and it is desperate fatuity to back him for either of his great engagements until his stamina has been tested in a satisfactory manner. If Bay Ronald is in form he would be just the sort of animal for Orzil to be galloped with, but the colt has not been doing well lately.

I have reason to believe that Melange will be the best for Lincoln from Mr. Lambton's stable, and Lord Stanley's horse is very well indeed, and is doing an excellent preparation. The course will just suit Melange, who is a good beginner, and he has fine speed, but he also has a vile temper, and if there were many false starts he would probably refuse to try.

Knight of the Thistle has been warmly recommended for Lincoln, but this horse always seemed to me to be preposterously overweighted, and he has been scratched. I fancied he was held perfectly safe by at least half-a-dozen of the probable starters. Knight of the Thistle has no pretensions to give weight to the American horse Voter, and if St. Cloud II. is the better of the pair in Pincus's stable, my opinion is that whatever beats him will win. St. Cloud II. is very fresh and well, and he will be thoroughly fit to run at Lincoln, for he has done plenty of work. He was very unlucky indeed in not being returned winner of the Cambridgeshire.

Lord Rosebery has a very much improved filly in Mauchline, by Ayrshire out of Corstorphine, and she is quite likely to prove a dangerous candidate for the One Thousand and Oaks if she goes on all right. Mauchline made her début last year at York, where she won the Gimcrack Stakes, beating Lowood and Royal Footstep, but Sir Blundell Maple's filly had 12 lb. the worst of the weights. The Baker was among the beaten lot, but this colt's running at York had better be ignored altogether. Mauchline was heavily backed for the Champagne Stakes at Doncaster, but she ran very badly indeed, and it will be remembered that Ayah inflicted severe punishment on the plungers by defeating Florio Rubattino, winner of the New Stakes at Ascot, 20 to 1 being freely offered against Mr. de Rothschild's filly. Mauchline was then very wisely thrown up for the season, and she has been greatly benefited by her long rest, which has allowed her time to develop. She has two engagements in the First Spring week, in addition to the One Thousand, and she might possibly be started for the Hastings Plate on the first day of the meeting, a race which will not take much winning, as none of the Two Thousand horses which are entered are likely to run Manchline will be Lord Rosebery's best three-year-old, for Ebba, the sister to Ladas, seems likely to turn out a failure; and Tom Cringle, by Donovan out of Seabreeze, of whom a very high opinion was once entertained, is a very moderate colt. As to the older horses in this team, Velasquez and Chelandry have both wintered very well indeed. Velasquez will not run before the Newmarket First July Meeting, when it is hoped that he will win the Princess of Wales's Stakes of ten thousand pounds for the second time. That he will beat all the other four-year-olds is certain enough, but the full strength of the three-year-old form will not be discovered until Ascot. If anything happened to Velasquez, Lord Rosebery would have an excellent second string for this race in Chelandry, whose 9 lb. penalty is reduced to 3 lb. by a breeding allowance, whereas Velasquez will have to carry 9 lb. extra. Chelandry, however, will be seen out in the City and Suburban, and, in my opinion, she is the pick of that handicap. There has always been a disposition to underrate Chelandry, in order that Velasquez might be unduly exalted, some writers being perfectly infatuated about Lord Rosebery's colt, whose quand même admirers have invariably evolved plausible excuses for his various defeats out of their fertile and ingenious imaginations. Chelandry carried off last year's One Thousand in a canter, and she ran a good second for the Oaks when amiss, while she made a better fight against Galtee More in the Leger than either Velasquez or any other three-year-old of the season had ever achieved. In the race for the Jockey Club Stakes Velasquez finished second to Love Wisely, but he would assuredly have been beaten by Chelandry if she had been ridden out, a fact which backers might find it profitable to remember as the next season goes on.

Vesuvian, who has been left in for several heavy stakes, is not at all likely to stand training again. Vesuvian's collapse last season was as grievous a disappointment to the Kingsclere stable as the failure of Regret had been in 1896, but the horse was so desperately groggy that it was really a piece of remarkably good fortune to win so rich a race as the St. James's Palace Stakes at Ascot with him. That a very high opinion was entertained of Vesuvian last summer was proved by the lavish manner in which he was backed for the Princess of Wales's Stakes at Newmarket, although he had only 3 lb. the best of the weights with Velasquez, who, however, was then regarded with considerable contempt in consequence of his ignominious exhibitions in the Two Thousand and Derby when running against Galtee More.

I am informed that Lord Rosebery's crack two-year-olds —Corposant, half-sister, by Sheen, to Ladas and Chelandry; and Apennine, own sister to Velasquez—will not be seen out during the early part of the season. Lord Rosebery will probably run his smart colt by Oriflamb out of Armorica at the Epsom Spring Meeting.

A writer in the Sportsman, who has been inspecting the horses at Beckhampton, states that he liked La Fortune "best of the two-year-olds," after Birkenhead, the colt by Orme out of Tragedy, dam of Wild Fowler. The fact is, however, that La Fortune is a three-year-old. Before Lord Zetland's horses were sold last autumn I recommended La Fortune to the notice of buyers, as she was well galloped in August, but she never ran in public within measurable distance of her trial, and she seemed to be a much improving filly. Darling paid 1,250 gs. for La Fortune (by Retreat out of Santa Felice) at Lord Zetland's sale, and no doubt she will get back the money with good interest if she goes on all right. La Fortune is entered for both the One Thousand and the Oaks, but the best policy would be to keep her for the rich Coronation Stakes at Ascot, when she would have a 7 lb. maiden allowance, and the best fillies of the season would have extra weight to carry. There are sixty-two entries for this race, which will be worth £3,900 even if only ten fillies start.

Lord Wolverton was down at Newmarket last week, and some of his horses were galloped, including Ugly, who is being prepared to run for one of the T.Y.C. handicaps at Liverpool; while Maisie, who is a smart filly, will probably be seen out at Lincoln.

The Duke of Devonshire's colt, Carhaix, who was purchased for 600 gs. at the sale of M. Lebaudy's stud last October, will probably be started for the Union Jack Stakes at Liverpool.

Mr. Rose was at Newmarket last week, and he saw Cyllene do a mile gallop with Valerio. Cyllene is certainly the best-looking three-year-old now at Newmarket, and it is much to be regretted that this splendid colt should not have been entered for any of the classic stakes. He will, no doubt, start for the Column Stakes in the Craven week, which race is as much a certainty for him as it was two years ago for St. Frusquin. I shall confidently expect Cyllene to win the Newmarket Stakes, and, whatever Velasquez may achieve in the summer, it will surprise me much if he defeats Mr. Rose's colt for the Jockey Club Stakes. Mr. Rose has a most promising colt in Loreto, by Bona Vista out of Lottie, who was very backward when he was running last autumn, and he has made a prodigious improvement during the winter. Loreto will be quite fit by the end of April, and it is exceedingly probable that he will carry off the Chippenham Stakes, which is run at Newmarket on the day after the Two Thousand, over the D.M. course.

Ninus is going on very well in his Two Thousand preparation, and I fancy Prince Soltykoff's colt will turn out to be the best of the Newmarket horses for that race. If Ninus should be the winner on April 27, the Derby betting will be kept lively, as he is not entered for the Epsom race, which will be more open than it has been for many years past, if both the Two Thousand and the Newmarket Stakes should fall to horses that are not engaged in the Derby.

One sporting writer advises his readers to back Chelandry for the Lincolnshire Handicap, "as she is very likely to win that race," while another scribe announces that she "is doing nice mile work" in preparation for this event. As a matter of fact, Chelandry has been doing only easy canters over five and six furlongs, and I have the best reason for believing that the City and Suburban will be her first race next season.

All prudent people will leave the Grand National alone until the numbers are up. An excellent judge of cross-country sport tells me that Gauntlet will win. This horse is a perfect jumper, and he will have a great advantage in the weights with Manifesto.

The professional lawn tennis match, played on the covered court of the Queen's Club, between Burke, of Paris, and Fleming, of the Queen's Club, came off on Saturday. The visitor won by three sets to two. The first set was decidedly poor, both men being nervous. Afterwards the play improved, but at no time could it be considered exhilarating. There were some excellent rallies, but, in marked contradistinction to the amateur game, there was an utter absence of volleying. The play was all from the back of the court, and this made the match rather monotonous to watch. It would be interesting if a game could be arranged between the winner and Kerr, the professional of the Fitzwilliam Club, Dublin.

The rival crews are progressing favourably, and daily bulletins will be issued until the day of the race. First of all let me say that the Cambridge men are certainly repaying Fletcher for the care he has taken with them. Tubbing has been indulged in every morning, and in the afternoon they have rowed at Ely. The result of practice on waters where there is not a right angle turn every few yards has been at once apparent. They are better together, more lively, and longer, and they have all gone up in weight, which shows that hard work agrees with them. No doubt the change to Bourne End will do them a lot of good. They will become accustomed to a livelier stream, and in the Bourne End reach they will have plenty of opportunities of getting used to rough water. It is a great pity that the pious founders of Cambridge colleges did not select Ely for their building sites. I suppose they considered that too much drainage would be necessary. Such a detail would not trouble the present urban authorities. They revel in drains.

Mr. Woodgate's remarks in the St. James's Gazette should put the Cambridge crew on good terms with themselves, and at the same time show Fletcher what good work he has done. He says, "Fletcher has already made a crew, and a promising one, out of absolute chaos." Vive Fletcher! But in the interests of peace I will not conspuer anybody.

The chief item of rowing news from Oxford is the fact that the University crew tried another set of oars, lighter and better balanced, and at once showed improved form. They became smart and lively. One cannot help thinking how often some such attention is necessary, especially in the October term, when the freshman is first learning how to row. He is innocent of oars and riggers. And yet no care is taken to try to suit him in this respect. He is left to pick up his experience as best he can. How necessary it is to be careful about the details of a boat is shown by the fact that for two years the Cambridge trials were rowed in eights that had been experimentally altered by Mr. J. B. Close. He left for America, but the crews kept on rowing in boats fitted in a way utterly unsuited to them. When such ignorance or inexperience was displayed at headquarters one cannot expect that college boat clubs will be any better off. At both Universities better results would be obtained in training freshmen if more attention were paid to details.

The Oxford crew, with new oars and Carr at six getting into condition and rapidly improving, did some hard work last week, and MacLean now has them in hand. In the Torpids Balliol easily kept head. They had a remarkably heavy eight, five of the crew being over 12 st., and number five was getting on to 14 st. Some people say that brains weigh heavy. At Cambridge the Lent races showed that the rowing is improving, but, judging by the weights, enough care is not taken to look after the heavy men in the October term. Boat captains should bear in mind that every man over 12 st. is worth a lot of care, and the 13 st. fresher should realise that he has a grand chance of a blue. The rowing would, no doubt, improve if the crews in practice did long pieces of work instead of short snatches, against the stop-watch. This defect can be amended when the crews are practising for the Mays.

The third round of the Association Cup ties produced results which were in every way remarkable. Two matches resulted in drawn games, and in the other two the visiting team was victorious. It is indeed singular that in no case could the home team pull the game off. The most unexpected win was that of Notts Forest over West Bromwich. The latter won the toss, and, led by Bassett and Reid, the forwards did such excellent work that at half time they had scored two goals to nil. In the second half the visitors pulled themselves together, and, lasting better than their opponents, scored three goals. As was anticipated, Burnley were defeated by Everton, but the losers had rather bad luck in losing one of their men early in the game. Derby County played a disappointing game on their own ground against Liverpool. They won the toss, but muddled away all their chances by somewhat erratic kicking in front of goal. The team ought to be good enough to win outright if the men did not get so over-anxious. Very satisfactory to Southern footballers was the display of Southampton against Bolton Wanderers. The successes of the former team in the competition had been discounted by the fact that they had been playing on their own ground. On this occasion they were the visitors. A very fast game resulted in a draw. Both sets of forwards showed good attack, but the goal-keepers on either side were in brilliant form, and neither made a mistake. The upshot of the competition at present is that the six leading clubs of the League have been ousted, and the seventh and eighth teams have on Saturday's play qualified for the final. In the competition for the Amateur Cup the play was very poor. The Casuals put a fair team into the field against Middlesbrough, but lack of combination and previous practice told its inevitable tale, and the Northerners won easily. The Old Malvernians put a strong team into the field, and beat Chesham. If the Old Boys keep playing together, and also put in some regular training, they ought to stand a fine chance of winning. Against Sunderland the Corinthians did not have a very stiff game. The professional forwards were off colour, although the backs worked hard.. At the same time the amateur forwards gave a very pretty display.

By the way, the League amateur has not a very pleasant time. Assume that he leaves the local club for which he has been playing, and goes into another district and wishes to play for some other League club in the neighbourhood, he will find he cannot play. In order that he may do so, the club for which he has been playing must execute a transfer. But a professional club will not do so for nothing, and so the unfortunate amateur may find himself without an opportunity of getting a first-class game, because the club for which he has been playing for nothing puts a prohibitive price on his transfer. It is scandalous that the transfer of amateurs should be made a matter of bargain and sale. If the Football Association or the League is managed by such admirable sportsmen as my Derby correspondent recently hinted, one of those bodies will no doubt take steps to prevent the practice to which reference has been made.

It was an excellent move on the part of the Executive of the Rugby Union to play the second trial game at Exeter. The West has felt rather slighted by the choices the Selection Committee made for the team for the first International match. The enormous growth of the popularity of the game of recent years in the West of England fully justified the selection of a town in that part of the country for the second trial game. The ground was in excellent condition, the gate a record one, and the play all that the Southerners could desire. Nor has the West any reason to complain of want of representation in the team against Scotland. It has three forwards and one three-quarter. The match itself needs but little description. The North were beaten at every point. The Southern forwards carried the scrums and left the ball for the halves, of whom Unwin got the ball cleaner away than Rotherham. The three-quarters combined well, and both the wings passed when near touch. Byrne, at back, had so little to do that he got rather careless in the second half, but Pilkington and Forrest, the three-quarters, were always round in time to prevent a score. Forrest only got his place at the last moment, and fully justified the selection. The Northern pack tried to play a tight game and failed miserably. Myers, who got his cap against Ireland at half, showed himself utterly useless for a defensive game. The three-quarters had but few chances, and these they spoilt by knocking on. All footballers will rejoice to hear that England and Wales will meet in London on April 2. Mr. Rowland Hill made the arrangements by wire on Saturday last. The football horizon now looks clearer than that of the world of politics.

The Cardiff and Newport match excited a lot of enthusiasm, as usual. The game was very fast, and characterised by high scoring, Cardiff winning by one goal and five tries to one goal and two tries. This seems to indicate that Welsh defence is anything but strong, and it looks as though England will be successful this year. The Oxford men had a ridiculously easy win over the London Scottish. Cambridge found the Old Merchant Taylors just too strong for them. Although the Old Boys have had bad luck this year, they played a very close match with Oxford last term, and they are to be heartily congratulated on beating Cambridge. They showed a defence worthy of their best days, and in the last few minutes kicked a goal from a mark, the only score. Richmond found the Harlequins at full strength and got badly beaten. Kensington made a much better display against Blackheath than had been expected. The R.M.C. Sandhurst were scarcely wise to play the Old Leysians and Lennox on the same day. The Old Boys won by thirty-one points, two goals, and seven tries, and Lennox, who were meeting the stronger team, ran up nine goals and five tries. A record beating for the College, and one which their temerity richly deserved.

I have been favoured with a lot of literature relating to the secession of the Southern Counties Swimming Association from the parent body. A careful perusal of these papers does not make one much the wiser. Substantial grievances are overshadowed by personal recriminations. Fortunately there seems to be every probability of the breach being healed if certain individuals condescend to be reasonable. The amount of legislation in which swimmers indulge is simply appalling.

Bournemouth now recognises the wisdom of catering for the entertainment of visitors fond of cricket and tennis. Last year a successful cricket week was added to the attractions of this delightful watering place. During the present year the cricket week will be repeated, and arrangements are also being made for a first-class lawn tennis tournament, winding up with a ball, in the latter part of August. The committee hope to rival the glories of Eastbourne, and to draw the crack players on their way round the coast.

MAMMON.

From MOSES MOSS to BENJAMIN BOSS.

Sunday.

MY DEAR BEN,—I hope that the advice which I urged last week, to keep cool, and not to take all the wild rumours as regards foreign politics as gospel, has been taken to heart, for it was only by so doing that it was possible for any one engaged to any extent in the Stock Markets to escape heavy loss. It is unfortunate that so many untoward events should have happened in close succession, thus generally shaking confidence and causing the public to keep aloof. The combination of the West African scare and of the Maine disaster brought about a full-fledged panic last week, which happened precisely to break out on the first days of the settlement, thus coming on the markets with its full force.

After the Panic.

The West African crisis has now passed its serious stage, and, looking back, one cannot help expressing surprise that the Colonial Secretary should have initiated it by the mysterious manner in which he replied to certain questions concerning events in the Lagos Hinterland. But during the few days that this scare lasted, the flames were fanned by a most injudicious attitude on the part of the English Press, whose hysterical shouting was for once in contrast with the dignified calm of the French papers. The French Government has since disavowed the whole matter, and there is little doubt but that a complete settlement will be arrived at through the negotiations in Paris. All the same, this storm in a teacup did its share in alarming the Stock Markets, and the subsequent semi-panic which originated in Wall-street, owing to mischievous and false rumours, was aggravated by it. It boots not to discuss the various reports which are current as regards the probable finding of the U.S. Court of Inquiry now sitting, but, notwithstanding all the lies which have been told, there is so far absolutely no proof that the catastrophe was anything else but the result of an accident. A certain portion of the American Press has undoubtedly behaved shamefully in propagating lying rumours, and doing its utmost by misrepresentation to bring about a war between the United States and Spain. Fortunately, President McKinley has kept his head cool, and there is now a fair prospect of the matter blowing over, always provided that the report of the Court does not disclose any treacherous act. The American market has, of course been well buffeted, and at one time declines of from four to five dollars were frequent, but a steady recovery is now in progress. The continued war of rates between the Canadian Pacific and Grand Trunk roads has caused weakness in these stocks, but the very acute phase which this fight has entered should insure an early arrangement. The Foreign department has weathered the West African intermezzo remarkably well, and the strength of Spanish on the Paris Bourse amidst the rush of warlike rumours has been quite a feature, although this has not been quite maintained at the last. Equally remarkable has been the firmness of Uruguay bonds, which alone in the South American department mark a further advance, and thus fully bear out the recommendation which I gave when the price was considerably lower. Argentines are under a cloud just now, and some of the railway stocks have shown great weakness, thus also confirming the view which I have expressed for some time. Home Rails experienced a severe shake out as a consequence of the West African episode, but an important rally followed, and with such advantages to general trade as the opening up of the Celestial Empire, and the rush of orders in the shipbuilding trade, the position is at present one of considerable promise. The Kaffir Circus is but slowly rallying from the recent slump, which was undoubtedly aggravated by the fact that many of the South African jobbers had taken a large interest in American Rails. That the heavy losses which have been experienced in both these departments have not led to more serious trouble than has actually occurred is distinctly encouraging. Of course, several men had to be helped in both sections, but so far only one small failure has occurred, and that was quite an unimportant one. The esprit de corps which has again been shown by members of the House in giving mutual assistance is certainly very much to be commended. In one case, too, it is said that a brother came to the rescue to the extent of £5,000. By the way, I am afraid that some of the members stand in need of lessons in book-keeping. I am told that a jobber was informed by the clerk who had charge of his books that he was wrong to the extent of £5,000, and he thereupon asked some of his friends to help him. One of these, with a good head for figures, had a look at the books, and discovered almost at a glance that the difference was only £2,000, the clerk having made a mistake. Of course, there was no difficulty in arranging the £2,000, but the jobber is very unhappy, for if the clerk had not made a mistake he (the jobber) would not have needed to disclose his weakness at all, as he would have been able to raise the smaller sum. The Westralian department was at no time affected to any extent by the prevailing scare in the other markets, and a number of shares show a further improvement. The Industrial section was at one time severely affected by the ominous rumours, and a sharp, speculative shake out took place; but it is now rallying again, the feature being a sensational and very dangerous rise in Russian Petroleum shares.

Home Rails—A General Recovery.

What the various Cuban scares and the Far Eastern question did not accomplish, the West African incident brought about, viz., a sharp set-back in Home Railway stocks. A war with France would, of course, have been a very awkward occurrence, not only for Home Rails, but for almost every other security in the Stock Exchange list. It is now evident that there never was the slightest cause to fear even serious complications with our French neighbours, just as there never was any reason for the gloomy forebodings which were expressed at the time when the Chinese question attained such prominence. A war with Russia was then being predicted by people who ought to have known better. Events that have transpired during the last few days show that the Far Eastern question has been easily solved by diplomatic means, and that the Northern Colossus never took up the uncompromising attitude ascribed to it. The concessions made by China will apparently permit the opening-up of the country to trade to a very considerable extent, and while it is a far cry, perhaps, to see in this satisfactory settlement favourable points for the Home Railway market, it is nevertheless evident that eventually our industrial centres will greatly benefit by the new outlet for British manufactures, and the railways will naturally share in this new source of prosperity. Another promising feature is the enormous rush of orders in the shipbuilding and engineering trades. Since the return of the engineers to work the new orders that have been booked on the Clyde during February are stated to be for 50,000 tons, which is double the number booked in January. Trade generally in the North is looking up, and I quite anticipate large traffics for the Scotch lines in the near future. Under these circumstances, I certainly look for an improvement in Caledonian Deferred (Coras) and in North British Deferred. It is true that the Caledonian dividend is imminent, and will probably be declared before this reaches my readers, but recent disappointments in connection with the dividends of the Heavy lines have caused a material reduction in the market estimates of the Scotch distributions, and thus I do not look for any disappointment in this connection, except on the part of the very sanguine operators. Traffic returns during the past week were fairly satisfactory, amounting to £32,000 in the aggregate, which brings the total increase for the seven weeks up to £337,000, but it must be remembered that the resumption of work in the engineering trade has not yet had time to produce anything like a proportion of traffic. At the settlement rates for Home Rails proved generally easy, and a scarcity was more particularly shown in the case of Great Eastern and Dover "A." Had the settlement taken place under more favourable surroundings, a material advance would, no doubt, have resulted. As it is, the payment of several of the Heavy dividends has caused reinvestment on the part of the public to a moderate extent. Dover "A," after touching 110½, have recovered to 111⅝, and in view of the excellent traffics may easily experience a further rise. By the way, it should not be forgotten that the new electric scheme for a line from Charing Cross to Hampstead, which was approved of at the Wharncliffe meeting of the London and North-Western, should prove very important to the South-Eastern, as it would connect Charing Cross with Euston Station. When Brighton "A" were put down to 175 during the scare, large purchases were made by influential firms, and the leading financial house was in the market with a buying order for £50,000 stock. I still consider that Dover "A" are cheaper than Great Eastern, now quoted 122. The stocks of all the Heavy lines are now quoted ex dividend, and look cheap, notably North-Western at 200¼ xd. Great Northern Deferred at 54 xd. should also be a fair purchase, and the demand for Great Central 1894 Ordinary at 41 continues. This stock is being picked up by investors to lock up, and will doubtless yield an excellent result. The speculation in Chatham Ordinary has been checked by the scare, but will doubtless be resumed. Metropolitan Districts are firm at 29, and they should improve, in view of the important extensions that are in progress. Even now the weekly returns show substantial gains, the increase for the seven weeks being £2,400, while that of the Metropolitan is not much more, viz., £2,476. The prospectus has been privately circulated of the Brompton and Piccadilly Railway, and this has been used by some misinformed operators to depress the quotation of Districts. This is obviously a mistake. The proposed line will connect at South Kensington with the District, and thus act as a feeder. It was the City and West End scheme, which did not pass through Parliament, that would have been a rival to the District. The strength of Central London Railway stocks has been a feature, the fully paid Ordinary being quoted 10¾, the partly-paid Ordinary 6¾, the Preferred 1¾, the Deferred 4⅞.

The Yankee Market—A Panic and a Recovery.

Was there ever such a perverse nation as the American? For years they have suffered from a financial crisis, brought about chiefly by the silver craze, which drove away the British investor. When prosperity again began to dawn they nearly picked a quarrel with England over the Venezuelan question, and the sensational message of President Cleveland knocked Wall-street head over heels. Since that time we have had periodical scares, and thus our American cousins are doing their very best to mar the very thing they so ardently desire, viz., the re-introduction of foreign capital into their country. There was reason for hoping that, with the introduction of autonomy in Cuba, an end would be put to the Cuban scares, for a time at least, but we have since had the De Lôme incident, and closely following upon it the Maine disaster and the string of false rumours which have been set afloat in the United States with regard to the cause of this catastrophe. The part which the sensational Press of the States has taken in the propagation of lies in connection with this unfortunate occurrence is monstrous, and the manner in which many of these journals have sought to inflame the public by dint of a whole tissue of lies is almost without a parallel. The proprietors of some of these papers are said to have made large "Bear" sales in Wall-street, and, as a matter of fact, there is not the slightest doubt that Washington statesmen and Senators are continually dabbling in Wall-street. If one could examine the books of the brokers of the Jingo Senators, one would probably discover that they effected large "Bear" sales on the eve of every fresh move in the Senate against Spain; and that perhaps even on the eve of the delivery of a fiery speech by any particular Senator, the latter went "short" of the market. It is some consolation that occasionally the Senators go egregiously wrong with their speculations, as the rest of the world do not always attach the same value to their utterances as they do themselves. The New York Journal of Finance makes an observation on this point which shows that the Senate is estimated at its true value by a number of Americans, when it says that "the Senate of to-day is as revolutionary as that which Julius Cæsar had a run in with. The difference consists simply in stabbing the prosperity of the country rather than the knifing of a man." Another paragraph from the New York Times, dated February 7, is also characteristic:—

> One of the most interesting phases of Stock Exchange activity just now is reflected in transactions made for the account of politicians of local consequence and their brethren at Albany and Washington. In a number of conspicuous stocks the political traders are pegging away with quite an old-fashioned vigour. The Washington crowd are on the "Bull" side now, after having been taught some expensive lessons a little while ago. They all started in at the beginning of the year to gamble on the depressing effects of what the Senate was going to do. It is estimated that they sold a number of the prominent stocks on a large scale. They went short not only of the industrials, but of the standard railroad stocks as well. They counted on Senatorial action to demoralise business confidence generally. At the beginning of last week the most of them flopped over to the "Bull" side, covered their shorts, took their losses; and now they are as vehemently "Bullish" as all through January they were dolefully "Bearish."

This paragraph describes the situation before the latest Cuban scare, but it may be taken for granted that the Washington crowd changed its position to the "Bear" side in ample time. We have during the past week had a large number of rumours which emanated from Wall-street, but were faithfully reflected in the London Press, and when any one walked down Throgmorton-street the words "Grave Situation—War Imminent—Spanish Treachery Proved," &c., greeted him from dozens of posters. As rumour after rumour has been falsified, however, people are taking less interest in these reports, and, according to all accounts, the feeling has also sobered down in New York. The panic was at its height on Thursday, the 24th inst., when, on wild sales from Wall-street, quotations here were knocked down all round. In order to show to what extent prices gave way, I have compiled a table giving quotations of a fortnight ago, viz., on February 11, as compared with the lowest prices touched on that Thursday:—

—	February 11, 1898.	February 24, 1898, Lowest Pnts.	Present Price.

It will be seen that the falls from the level of a fortnight ago to Thursday averaged from $2 to $6, while since a recovery of from $1 to $3 has occurred. European capitalists have doubtless to some extent stemmed the fall, as was indicated by the fact that London has for some days opened and kept prices above parity. President McKinley is fortunately keeping his head cool, and he even appears to have sent his alter ego and election agent, Senator Hanna, to New York to calm the fears of business people there. I am not going to guess what the finding of the U.S. Court of Inquiry will be, but so far everything points to an accident having been the cause of the destruction of the Maine. As regards the suggestion that a submarine mine might by accident have destroyed the ship, the Spanish Government asserts positively that there were no mines in Havana Harbour. Few Cuban Jingoes in the States even now suggest that the Spanish Government had anything to do with the disaster, and there would remain only the possibility of a dastardly deed by private persons. Even if that were to be proved, it should not cause war between the two countries. On the whole, therefore, I am inclined to think that after further see-saw markets, we may look for an improvement again. A sharp advance would doubtless come about should the Court of Inquiry frankly declare that the catastrophe was due to accident, or even that there was no sign of an attempt on the vessel from outside. But until this desirable end is reached, we shall doubtless be treated to another series of sensational rumours. The improvement, when it comes, should affect the whole list, from Milwaukee to Louisville and Union Pacifics, and from Norfolk Prefs. to Northern Pacific Prefs. and Erie Prefs. There are indications that the Standard Oil people have been picking up Milwaukee of late, and the Union Pacific position is one of exceptional promise, now that the Kansas Pacific matter is out of the way. There is no doubt that the new Four per Cent. Preferred stock of the Company will receive the full dividend from the outset, and as the stock has declined to 56½, there is ample margin for a big rise. An American banking firm argues that, allowing for the new Preference stock to be obtained in lieu of the assessment, Union Pacific stock should sell points higher than Northern Pacific Common, while the Four per Cent. Preferred should rank with Northern Pacific New Prefs. This argument is based on an estimate that the Union Pacific will earn $1,000,000 over its Preferred dividend, while the surplus of the Northern Pacific would only be $500,000 more. The The connection with the Vanderbilt roads must further be considered. I also notice in the New York Journal of Finance that the successful sale of the collateral under the Union Pacific notes proved a great surprise. The balance of the securities revert to the Union Pacific treasury from the Colorado Central 7s. down the published list. The sale is a "bull" point on Union Pacific stock, as it puts a substantial sum of money, not less than $1,500,000, and possibly considerably more, into the treasury. Canadian-Pacifics at one time dropped heavily in sympathy with American Rails, touching 83½, and even at the present price of 84⅝ a fall of 8 points from the top is shown. Similarly, Grand Trunks have experienced a sharp decline, the First Prefs. being over 6 points below the best at 63½, while the Guaranteed are quoted 72¾. The fall in Canadian-Pacifics and Grand Trunks is, of course, chiefly due to the war of rates, which has assumed large proportions, the Pacific Roads of the United States having, in alliance with the Grand Trunk, fully met the cut of the Canadian-Pacific. The fight is, however, too hot to last, and I should think that some settlement will shortly be arrived at. But the occurrence fully bears out my warning, given at the time when the highest quotations were touched, to clear profits and leave these stocks alone for the time being.

South Americans.—The Council of Foreign Bondholders' Report.

It says much for the acumen of French Boursiers that they did not allow themselves to be frightened by the West African episode. When prices were breaking here in high-class investment securities the Paris Bourse maintained a very calm demeanour, although it had its own trouble in the shape of the Zola trial. Even Spanish were not allowed at one time to drop more than a fraction below 60, and Paris seemed inclined to put up values all round. A reaction to 59 has, however, since occurred in Spanish. Turks have been fairly steady, and Rio Tinto Deferred, always the bell-wether in Paris, after a sharp relapse, are hardening again. In the South American section the only really strong stock throughout was Uruguay. The news from Monte Video has been scanty, which, under the circumstances was favourable, as ill-news travels fast. Argentine Government and Railway stocks have suffered from the rise in the Buenos Ayres gold premium, which is considerable, the quotation being now 171¼, as against 156 a few weeks ago. The fall in Argentine Government issues for the week amounts to about a point, but some of the Railway stocks have again lost a temporary recovery. Central Argentine have been dull at 82½, and Buenos Ayres Great Southern stand at 154, Buenos Ayres and Rosario at 75. On the other hand, Cordoba Central (Central Northern section) Income Debenture bonds have dropped as low as 52½ on another very unsatisfactory traffic return. Some of the traffics, however, show indications of a larger movement of the crops, notably the Buenos Ayres Great Southern and Central Argentine. The twenty-fifth annual report of the Corporation of Foreign Bondholders has just been issued, and, as usual, contains some matters of South American interest. It records the earlier resumption of the full service on the Argentine Government debt, and reiterates the statement that the Rothschild Committee expect to pay in March the certificates issued in respect of the 1 per cent. unpaid on the 1886 loan during the four preceding years, and to apply the balance to the payment pro rata in July, 1898, of the certificates issued in respect of the 1 per cent. on the Funding loan. Reference is made to the arrangement of the external debt of the province of Buenos Ayres, after a default of seven years. The terms have already been published, and are, unfortunately, very disappointing. Similarly, a settlement of the Buenos Ayres Loan of 1888 is announced. As regards Ecuador, it seems extremely doubtful whether the arrangement made by the Guayaquil and Quito Railway Company, who hold a concession from the Government of Ecuador for the construction of the Transandine Railway, to hand over $175 in Six per Cent. First Mortgage Gold bonds of the railway, guaranteed by the Government of Ecuador, and £2. 10s. for each £100 of the external debt with coupons in arrear from May 1, 1896, will be carried out; or, if carried out, whether the interest will be paid, while the Government guarantee is, of course, worthless. The only comfort for the bondholders is that in that case they will at least be able to stick to the cash bonus of £2 10s. The Costa Rica arrangement, of which particulars are given, is undoubtedly an unsatisfactory one, but as the majority of the bondholders accepted it, no more is to be said. It may be hoped that the fact that Mr. Gonzalo Ramoz Ruiz, the new Consul-General of Colombia, has signed the new converted bonds, will once and for all take Colombia out of the list of defaulting States; but I am not sanguine that this state of affairs will last. Guatemala has recently passed through a severe political and financial crisis, and it remains to be seen whether it will carry out its good intentions. As to Paraguay this hardened defaulter has not yet forwarded the surplus resulting from the Yerba Maté duties, which is to be applied to amortisation in accordance with the arrangement of August, 1895. All that the Council has been able to obtain are promises. No progress has been made with regard to the Buenos Ayres Cedulas, and the offer made by Honduras through an American Company does not appear to present much hope of a satisfactory settlement. Venezuela has suspended remittances, and the promise of a resumption of payments has not so far been kept. Thus there is still a considerable number of Spanish American Republics in default, although there is with most of these at least a show of coming to terms with the bondholders.

Mortlock's (Oxford-st.), Estd. A.D. 1746.—The collection of China and Glass now on view in their Galleries fully maintains the high reputation and pre-eminence enjoyed by "Mortlock's" for the last century and a half, and well repays a visit of inspection.

The Kaffir Circus—A Rally.

All the talk about serious trouble in the South African Market came to naught, and, although it is well-known that a few jobbers who were committed somewhat largely in Chartered and a few other speculative shares had to be assisted, no serious difficulty has come to light. It is no secret that a number of jobbers in the Kaffir Circus have of late taken a hand in the American department, and thus the spasm in Yankees also reacted unfavourably on the South African Market. It may be assumed, however, that the profits which they had made in American Rails in their early connection with the same helped them to pay some of their more recent losses. There is still some rumour as regards possible political trouble with the Transvaal, there being various reports that the question of the suzerainty is to be raised by the Volksraad. Other reports are to the effect that on the urgent representations of the Orange Free State President Kruger has decided to drop this matter for the present. It is not at all improbable that Oom Paul would have raised the question if the rumours of war between England and France had come true, but it looks now as if this country were drawing out of its foreign complications, in which case the Boer Government will probably consider discretion the better part of valour. Should no fresh political trouble ensue, it may be assumed that the South African mining market will further improve. After all, the progress of the mines themselves should chiefly guide the course of prices, and the protracted depression through which we have been passing has yet one redeeming point about it, viz., that it stimulates the efforts of mining boards and managers to increase the production and reduce the working costs where possible. This is precisely what is not generally practised in times of boom, when, on the contrary, extravagance is encouraged, and the efforts to increase production are generally relaxed. I see that Mr. Albu delivered a speech at Johannesburg a few days ago, in which, while expressing his disappointment at the fate of the report of the Industrial Commission, of which body he was a member, he declared himself still optimistic, and "thought that President Kruger would do anything in his power to deserve the goodwill of the people in Johannesburg, and to meet the requirements of the mining industry." If Oom Paul were to give any tangible proof of the sentiment thus attributed to him, the Kaffir Circus would very quickly respond with a rise in quotations. Chartered shares were at one time affected by the publication of the full particulars of the future relations of the Chartered Company with the Government. The market finally came to the conclusion that there was nothing in the new regulations to prevent the commercial development of the country, and the increase of its prosperity. Everything must, however, depend upon the gold-bearing nature of the territory, and crushings at some of the mines, which had been promised for March are now put off until April or May. Until some considerable amount of gold is actually produced, the public will, doubtless, hold aloof from Chartered and Rhodesian shares, and in this they will certainly adopt a prudent course. The lowest price touched by Rand Mines during the height of the scare was 30, from which there has been a recovery to 32, reacting to 31. After touching lower prices, Consolidated Gold Fields are quoted $4\frac{5}{8}$, East Rands $4\frac{5}{8}$. The various shares of the Robinson group, under the lead of Randfontein, have also hardened, while the Barnato group is still dull. From Johannesburg I learn that recent results of the Simmer East are quite satisfactory, for the south reef has been cut in the "Clement" or western shaft at a depth of 2,150 ft., and the main reef was expected to be cut in this shaft during February. Development has been commenced in the "Hammond" or centre shaft, where the south reef was cut last December at 1,780 ft. The north reef, assaying well, has been intersected at 1,900 ft., and driving has been started at the 1,800 ft. and 1,900 ft. levels. It must not be forgotten that the Simmer East owns the dip of the Rose Deep and Glen Deep, the former of which is now crushing and earning substantial profits, and the latter will start milling in April with most favourable prospects. There is no reason to suppose that the Simmer is at all inferior to these mines. My correspondent also states that the Simmer and Jack is now running 220 stamps, and that twenty more were to start in February. A considerable increase both in the output and monthly profit may be confidently expected, and the reef in the lower levels is opening up extremely well. In the Knight's Deep much trouble has been experienced with water, but this is now overcome, as powerful electric pumps have been installed, and sinking will be much more rapid. It is expected to cut the reef in the Robertson shaft on this property some time during March. De Beers have been dull in sympathy with gold shares, being quoted $29\frac{1}{8}$. The absurd rumour that Messrs. Rothschild proposed to buy the holding of Messrs. Barnato Brothers in De Beers has since been denied. New Jagersfontein are quoted at 8.

Golden West Australia.

The West Australian department has distinguished itself as against the Kaffir Circus by the greater strength with which it passed through the slump. Fortunately, operators and investors in Westralians have no political troubles to contend with, and the developments recently reported from the goldfields have been in every respect satisfactory. The shares in the high-class mines are still chiefly in demand, and Hannan's Brownhill have again been very strong at about 8. This is undoubtedly one of the future great mines, and in a month or two such an output is expected that far higher prices will be justified. A cablegram states that the Company expects to cut the reef at 470 ft. this week, and that the construction of the new mill is progressing rapidly. From the Sons of Gwalia, too, the news is good, a British Australasian cablegram stating that the mine is developing splendidly, and that the No. 1 Winze at the No. 1 Level is down 39 ft., all in lode formation, yielding 3 oz. by pan assay, and 5 oz. by fire assay. These shares are currently dealt in at $2\frac{1}{16}$. It is curious that London and West Australian Exploration shares are not firmer in view of the excellent results which are being obtained by its sub-Companies. The firmest group has again been that of the West Australian Market Trust. Northern Territories have improved to $4\frac{1}{4}$, and West Australian Loan and General have been uniformly firm during the week, improving to $2\frac{1}{4}$. The news from the Associated Gold Mines has been very satisfactory, and these shares have also been firm at $4\frac{1}{16}$. Brownhill Central, which have of late worked in connection with the same group, are also on the up grade, and have improved to $2\frac{3}{8}$. My readers will remember that I strongly recommended these shares when quoted $\frac{7}{8}$-1. Similarly, I have been in favour of Hannan's Props. ever since they were quoted in the neighbourhood of 15s., and they have now risen to $1\frac{1}{16}$, while rumours are current that the West Australian Market Trust group are also interested in these. It is further stated that Mr. H. C. Callahan has consented to join the Board of the Ironside North Company, recently formed to acquire the lease of that name from the Hannan's Proprietary Development Company. The list of crushings this week is a short one, being as follows:—

—	Tons of Ore Crushed.	Oz. of Gold.	Assay of Tailings per ton.
Burbank's Birthday Gift	373	505	—
Kalgoorlie Bank of England ...	78	385	—
Mount Yagahong.....	1,200	715	—
Great Boulder Main Reef.....	—	863	—
Lady Loch.....	100	52	6 dwt.
Weld-Hercules.....	163	86	4 dwt.

The news from the Great Boulder has been conflicting. While at first a rich telluride discovery was announced, later advices state that this was only a patch, and it is mentioned that the sulphide lode in which the find was made is 2 ft. wide, and worth 1 oz. per ton. The specimens broken out are described as exceedingly rich. From the North West Australian Goldfields the following is reported:—"Battery ready to start crushing on arrival of shifts, ripple tables; ample supply of water for twelve hours' notwithstanding the prolonged drought; everything progressing satisfactorily." A cablegram from the manager of the Smelting Company of Australia advises that the refinery has started, and that the 60-ton copper furnace is now in full work. The London and Globe Finance group at one time showed considerable weakness, from which, however, they are recovering again. Lake View Consols fell to $9\frac{9}{16}$, but have since rallied to 10. The shares of the sub-Companies have been put down to an absurdly low level, and it is to be hoped that shareholders will not be frightened into selling. With the amalgamation I am dealing specially in another column. Ivanhoe have been firm, and have improved to $6\frac{3}{8}$. The special settlement in these shares should take place in the near future. West Australian Goldfields have been dull at 2, in the absence of the Chairman of the Company, who has been ordered abroad by his medical adviser in order to recover from the effects of a severe attack of influenza. Hampton Plains have also been neglected in the neighbourhood of 1. Advices from the Menzies district are very satisfactory. Not only have, as I am explaining elsewhere, favourable cablegrams been received concerning the Lady Shenton mine, but from the manager of the Menzies Golden Age a cable is to hand according to which heavy rains have fallen on the field, and the railway to Menzies has been completed. Rain was much wanted in the Menzies district, while, on the other hand, the advent of the railway must, as I have already stated, prove of the greatest importance to all the mines on that field. West Australian Venture Corporation shares have improved to 5s. 6d. to 6s., which is, however, still a very low price. The shares of one of the sub-Companies of this Corporation, viz., Field's Find, have suddenly come into demand, apparently on favourable news, of which particulars have not yet transpired. This mine took the place of the valueless property known as the Joker (Yalgoo) mine, and the fully-paid shares are now quoted $\frac{5}{8}$. It will be remembered that the Corsair Consolidated property proved a duffer, and the Colonial Finance Corporation has now transferred a new property to this Company, which has still a considerable working capital, and the shares are now rallying. Golden Horseshoes have fluctuated a good deal, and are lower at $7\frac{5}{8}$, while Great Boulder Perseverance, Kalgurli, South Kalgurli, and Brookman's Boulder have also eased off.

The Lady Shenton Deal.

The vagaries of the market in Lady Shenton shares have of late been so extraordinary that I made it my business to inquire into the position, and I have ascertained that the recent decline had nothing to do with the merits of the mine, concerning which the most favourable information is to hand. But there had happened an accident in connection with the deal, and a breach of faith on the part of somebody. The men chiefly interested in the deal, and all the large Colonial shareholders, who have an unbounded belief in the future of the mine, however, are standing firmly shoulder to shoulder, and the result will doubtless be that retribution will overtake the faithless one and the price take another jump, a much higher price being undoubtedly justified. The last crushing of 552 tons for 1,518 oz. of gold brings the total output up to 25,145 oz. from 7,143 tons, and what is even more important, a careful examination of the mine by the manager shows that large bodies of rich ore are developed, and that the mine has every appearance of being permanent, and therefore, with a 3 oz. yield and 16 dwt. in the tailings, is likely to rival such leading properties as the Lake View Consols, Ivanhoe, Great Boulder, and Hannan's Brownhill. The following is the text of a cablegram which has just been received from the Company's offices at Perth, W.A., dated February 24:—

Rayfield (Manager) reports south drift of Level No. 1 extended to 110 ft.; the vein is fully 3 ft. in width, high-grade ore in the stopes; north the vein is fully 3 ft. in width, of very good stone. Level No. 3, Winze No. 3 North, sunk to a total depth of 28 ft.; the vein is fully 4 ft. in width, high-grade ore; gold can be seen freely; this continuous satisfactory developments proves amply life of reef. North drift of Level No. 4, total distance from crosscut in the main shaft, 107 ft.; the vein is fully 5 ft. in width, ore is rich in gold, face looking well, and it indicates that there is every reason to believe it will continue for a long distance. No. 1 Winze from this level has been sunk 10 ft.; the vein is fully 5 ft. in width, high-grade ore; prospects look splendid. There is everything to indicate many years' work. All machinery in good order and working well. We have been milling ore taken from all parts of the mine—absolutely has not been picked over. Recommend extra ten-stamp mill as soon as water is available for. Also cyanide plant for treatment of tailings. The mine looks splendid. Six months' stoping ground opened up of pay ore. Every week proves mine to be more permanent. Fair rains have fallen. Some very fine specimens from all parts of the mine will be forwarded next mail.

This report speaks for itself, and when I add that the market position is such that a rise to £4 or £5 is quite on the board in the near future, I need hardly impress upon holders to stick tight to their shares and upon those who have not got any to buy at anything like present prices. By the way, the shares in the adjoining Florence Mine have advanced to $\frac{7}{8}$, and, as it has the Lady Shenton lode, a more important rise is expected.

Amalgamation or No Amalgamation.

So many nquiries have ireached me from shareholders in the sub-Companies of the London and Globe Finance Corporation, which it is proposed to amalgamate into one large exploration Company, that I cannot refrain from again referring to the subject, although I should think that with the advice of their Directors and committees the shareholders are well able to decide for themselves. There is considerable danger that the amalgamation will fall through; in fact, owing to the strong objections raised by various speakers at the meetings, the Directors of the London and Globe have now, it appears, withdrawn the amalgamation proposal, and would only reconsider this decision in the case of any Company in which their committee of shareholders advised the acceptance of the scheme. All the meetings have been adjourned, some for this week, some for next. There seems a good deal of divergence of opinion on the point chiefly that the shareholders in this or that mine consider their property better than the others, and are, therefore, inclined to work out their own salvation. If they persist in this view, well and good. But here enter the uncertainties of mining, and it should not be forgotten that all the properties have been reported upon favourably by leading experts, especially Mr. Charles Kaufman. One would therefore think that by joining forces a sort of average would be struck, which would render success more certain, even should one or the other property prove disappointing. Then there arises also questions of ways and means, and, as more working capital will be required, reconstruction will be necessary if amalgamation is declined. I gather from the various balance-sheets which have now been rendered that the Wealth of Nations, Limited, had on September 30 last about £18,000 cash resources (deducting amounts owing on bills payable and to sundry creditors) left, the Wealth of Nations Extended £13,300, the Paddington Consols £5,200, Hannan's Golden Treasure £3,000, Hannan's Golden Group £7,900, and the Golden Crown £2,670, while the Mainland Consols owes something like £24,000. It is hardly likely that any of these Companies will be able to achieve complete success without raising more money. The shareholders will therefore have to ask themselves whether they are prepared to find more capital. I find that at several meetings Dr. Haden-Haden, a large shareholder, raised this very point, and argued that, "instead of keeping the mine in their own hands, and working it themselves, it would be far better to allow a powerful Company like the London and Globe to provide the necessary capital to bring the mines to a successful issue." I notice that in the case of the Wealth of Nations, Limited, the Chairman carried at the last meeting a resolution to the effect that a form inviting an expression of the shareholder's assent to or dissent from the amalgamation proposals should be distributed amongst the shareholders. It will be interesting to watch what will be the result of this inquiry, as there are apparently several thousand shareholders, while only perhaps a hundred attend the meetings. Personally, I am of opinion that the amalgamation scheme is by far the best, with the proviso that the necessary particulars of the properties to be taken into the amalgamation, but not so far yet known on the market, be furnished. But this will doubtless, be communicated to the Boards and committees of shareholders.

Indian, Australasian, and British Columbian Mines.

While the volume of business in Indian mines has been reduced through the surrounding slump, no particular weakness has prevailed. On the contrary, an advance is marked in Mysore, and Nundydroog are better. There has, however, been a decline of 1s. 6d. in Mysore Goldfields, and Mysore West, and Mysore Wynaad are lower. In Australian mines, other than West Australian, Mount Lyell have given way, and Mount Lyell South are also easier; but Mount Lyell North have hardened, and there has been also an improvement in Gallymont of $\frac{1}{16}$ to $\frac{11}{16}$. New Australian Broken Hill have reacted, further particulars concerning the new find being awaited. Broken Hill Proprietary are steady at $2\frac{3}{16}$. In Charters Towers mines Brilliant and St. George United have improved. In the New Zealand section the only notable rise has been one of $\frac{1}{4}$ in Consolidated Goldfields of N.Z. On the other hand, Taitapu, Waihi, Silverton, Kauri, Woodstock, Komata Reefs, and Hauraki, are all lower. Amongst British Columbian shares the principal movement has been a recovery in British American Corporation, which are up again at 3s. premium. I understand that ex-Governor Mackintosh is on the way to this country with all the documents relating to the various options, &c., and that on his arrival some very important information will be published. The British Columbian correspondent of the Financial News furnishes some interesting information concerning the Rossland district. He states that there are at present numerous ore bodies uncovered in these mines, which hitherto have been considered of too low-grade for treatment, but can now be shipped at a profit. The Le Roi Mine he describes as a rich property, but he considers that it is open to doubt as to whether it is the richest, and the British America Corporation has not been long in obtaining some of the best mines. According to this correspondent, the Hon. C. H. Mackintosh has secured many properties, some of which are known to be the most promising in the district, viz., the Josie, West Le Roi, Nickel Plate, Whoop-up, Great Western, Surprise, No. 1, and You Know, besides groups in the Boundary and Ymir districts. Amongst other British Columbian undertakings, British Columbian Development Association and New Goldfields of British Columbia have hardened. The shares of the Waverley Mine, which is, as I have already stated, a rich silver lead property, have maintained their advance to $1\frac{5}{8}$-$\frac{11}{16}$, so that my readers who bought at lower prices stand already at a good profit. It is stated that the first shipment of Waverley ore has arrived at Liverpool, and it will be interesting to notice the results. A similar property is the Tangier Mine, the shares in which have come into demand at $1\frac{3}{8}$. The property is situated twenty-five miles north of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and almost adjoins the Waverley. A large and rich vein of ore, consisting of iron pyrites containing gold and grey copper, and galena carrying a very high value of silver, has been proved to a width of about 15 ft., and when the preliminary work has all been carried out good results are looked for. Fifteen tons of ore, of an approximate value of $1,700, have already been shipped. In the general foreign section Consolidated Gold Mines of California have fallen 2s., and Montana are also easier. Copper shares were dull at one time under the lead of Rio Tinto, but are now recovering again.

Men of Millions and Company Directors.

My excellent contemporary, the Financial Times, presented its readers last week with a supplement under the heading of "Men of Millions," giving the portraits of twenty gentlemen who "during the present decade have been the principal history-makers in the joint-stock world." The background selected was that of a Bank of England note for £1,000,000, and while there may be a doubt about the gentlemen in question all being able to write out a cheque for £1,000,000, there is not the slightest doubt that we should all like to have a bank-note of that amount, were it in existence. The supplement in question does not pretend to exhaust the list of City millionaires, and we might furnish a few names of those who have been history-makers in the joint-stock world which are not included in this very excellent cartoon. Thus Mr. Wernher, of Messrs. Wernher, Beit, & Co., might have appeared side by side with Mr. Beit, and the names of Mr. Cecil Rhodes and of Mr. S. Neumann also suggest themselves. Another gentleman who has been largely connected with the De Beers Company is Mr. Sheil, who is, no doubt, a millionaire, and I should not be surprised if Mr. John Stroyan were to acknowledge the soft impeachment. The last two decades have undoubtedly been productive of new millionaires, but I do not think that, while perhaps being men dealing in millions, Mr. Adolf Goerz or Mr. George Albu would boast of being actual millionaires, and this applies also to several other gentlemen whose portraits appear in the supplement. It may be useful to mention some of the millionaires of older standing in the City of London, such as Messrs. Rothschild, Mr. H. Raphael of the Stock Exchange, Baron Hambro, Mr. Bucknall, Sir Donald Currie, and Mr. L. Cohen of the Stock Exchange. But these gentlemen and many others are of a retiring disposition, and if the Financial Times had asked leave to publish their portraits, they would probably have declined the invitation. One cannot help noticing the disinclination of men of millions to appear as Directors of many Companies, although in numerous instances they are the promoters and chief supporters of such undertakings. Obviously, their profession is that of pulling the strings, while others are undertaking the public direction of their enterprises. Proceeding alphabetically, I notice that Mr. Beit is on the Board of only six South African concerns, and that Mr. Horatio Bottomley is Chairman of three West Australian Companies, while Mr. Harvey Du Cros directs five, which is also the number of Boards on which Mr. Robert English has a seat. Sir Christopher Furness is in a different position, being on the Board of ten concerns, and Mr. Frank L. Gardner distinguishes himself by being on the Boards of fourteen different undertakings, chiefly Westralian. Mr. Adolf Goerz is on the Board of only two Companies (South African), and Mr. E. T. Hooley, the originator of so many new enterprises, figures as the Director of only two. Mr. Isaac Lewis presides over three South African concerns, and Mr. William Mendel has a seat on the Board of five Companies, while Mr. A. C. Moreing has a voice in the direction of eight. Mr. Henry O'Hagan, the founder of countless English and American Brewery Companies, is only on the Board of three undertakings which are not connected with breweries, and Mr. W. F. Orriss directs three enterprises, Mr. Charles D. Rudd one, Mr. Whitaker Wright three. It almost looks as if, in proportion to their millions, the great financiers were occupying a smaller number of directorships, and one might extend the argument and say that the pluralists amongst the Directors are not amongst the most wealthy. This brings me to the "Directory of Directors," the new issue of which for 1898 has just been brought out by Mr. Thomas Skinner. The present volume contains about 17,000 names, of which 3,000 appear for the first time, but the withdrawals amount to 1,500, so that the net increase is 1,500. The "Directory of Directors" is now a well-known vade mecum for all those interested in joint-stock enterprises, and the new issue is as complete as possible. I propose shortly to devote a few lines to some of the guinea-pigs and pluralists amongst Company Directors.

Seventeen Years of Securities.

The sixteenth issue of "Burdett's Official Intelligence" has just made its appearance. It will be the last under the editorship of Sir Henry Burdett, who is handing over the copyright to the Committee of the Stock Exchange; but there is no doubt that this elaborate work will be continued, and it will require exceptional capacity and diligence to keep it up to the standard hitherto attained. A great deal happens in seventeen years, especially on the Stock Exchange, where six months generally, in view of the many events that interrupt the ordinary course of business, are reckoned as a lifetime. As compared with seventeen years ago, the amount of securities admitted to a quotation in the Official List shows an increase of no less than £1,825,000,000. This means that the amount has increased from £3,586,000,000 in 1881 to £5,411,000,000 in 1897. The particulars furnished of new Companies and securities brought out during that period are especially interesting, and I find that the highest amount issued in any one year was £356,321,490 in 1890, when the principal additions were large amounts of Russian Conversion bonds and American Railroad bonds and shares. For 1897 the amount was £313,815,932. "Burdett's Official Intelligence" really represents a life's labour, and it will be a difficult task for Sir Henry Burdett's successor to maintain the same standard. What is of special importance is that the neutral tone which Sir Henry Burdett so scrupulously maintained should be continued, and that also the difference so clearly established by him as between floating charges and effective mortgages should be scrupulously adhered to.

New Enterprises and Issues.

The prospectuses of the following new enterprises and issues have been placed before the public during the week:—

Salviati, Jesurum, & Company, Limited.—This Company is formed to acquire, develop, and carry on as a going concern the businesses of G. Salviati, of London, Venice, Murano, and Paris, with agencies in New York, St. Petersburg, Berlin, &c., Venetian glass and art mosaics manufacturers; M. Jesurum & Company, of Venice, lace, silks, brocades, &c., manufacturers; Testolini Bros., of St. Mark's-square, Venice, dealers in carved wood furniture; the Venice Art Company, antique furniture dealers and Pagliarin and Franco, glass manufacturers, both of Venice. The capital is fixed at £330,000 divided into 180,000 Six per Cent. Cumulative Preference and 150,000 Ordinary shares of £1 each.

Gartsides (Brookside Brewery), Limited.—With a capital of £350,000, in Preference and Ordinary shares of £10 each and £300,000 Four and a Quarter per Cent. First Mortgage Debenture stock issued at £103 per cent., this Company is formed to acquire the brewery known as Brookside Brewery at Ashton-under-Lyne, which was founded in 1830, and converted in 1892 into a private limited Company.

Hudson's Hotel, Limited, is formed with a capital of £125,500, divided into 75,000 Five and a Half per Cent. Cumulative Preference, 50,000 Ordinary, and 500 Management shares of £1 each, to acquire five hotels in and near Scarborough. There is also a Four per Cent. First Mortgage Debenture issue of £125,000.

The purchase price of this lot of hotels is fixed at £240,500, while the profits are expected to realise £13,000. Expectations are liable to be disappointed, and the earnings of hotels in and near Scarborough must necessarily fluctuate. The feature of management shares entitled to a certain proportion of the profits and assets is, moreover, a most objectionable one.

The Brigg Horse Haulage Appliance Company, Limited.—This Company is being formed with a capital of £75,000, in shares of £1 each, for the purpose of acquiring the patents of Mr. T. H. Brigg for minimising draught in connection with horse haulage, the purchase price being fixed at £50,000.

This is admittedly an untried invention, and the purchase price seems preposterous. I strongly advise investors to await the result of a practical trial.

Nicholson & Wordley, Limited.—With a share capital of £35,000 and a Debenture issue of £10,000, this Company has been formed to acquire the business of Messrs. Nicholson & Wordley, drapers, &c., of High-street, Camden Town.

The net profits are stated to be about £2,000 per annum, and as the interest on the Preference shares and Debentures will absorb over £1,350, there is but a small margin left for the Ordinary shareholders, especially if the Company should have a bad season or two. The capital, too, appears excessive for such a concern.

Read Brothers, Limited.—This Company is formed to acquire and develop the export bottling business of Read Brothers, of Kentish Town, London. The capital is £200,000 in 10,000 Five per Cent. Cumulative Preference shares, and 10,000 Ordinary shares of £10 each, and £65,000 Four per Cent. Irredeemable First Mortgage Debenture stock.

The sum to be paid for this business is excessive, and the expected increase in the future business must be looked upon as uncertain. Competition in this business is keen and on the increase.

R. H. & S. Rogers, Limited.—Capital, £165,000 in £1 shares. The Company has been formed to acquire as a going concern the business of R. H. & S. Rogers, shirt and collar warehousemen and manufacturers, of Addle-street, London, Rotherhithe, and Coleraine, Ireland.

My Letter Box.

The following are replies to inquiries from various correspondents:—

Government, &c., Bonds.

A. L.—Although statements have been repeatedly made as regards the proposed arrangement on the part of the Honduras Government, nothing more is known than the statement mentioned elsewhere under "South Americans." J. T., Malta.—The bonds are genuine enough, but you have probably paid more than the market value for them, and in your position you ought not to go in for this kind of speculative security.

Banks, Trusts, and Financial.

C. H. R.—I am not satisfied of the bona-fides of the persons in question, and under these circumstances I cannot communicate the address asked for. I cannot reply by letter. J. W. S.—I cannot reply by letter. I do not see how I can give you any information with regard to these inventions, and I know nothing of the concern mentioned by you. Archipelago.—1. This is a leading and prosperous bank, and I should think that it would do well for some time to come, as the value of money is rising. The present quotation of 56 is ex-dividend. 2. This is also a high-class bank, but I do not know that its management is better than that of the other institution. Mrs. B., Gloucester.—I recommend you to have absolutely nothing to do with the outside brokers mentioned.

Home Rails.

X. Y. Z.—I am surprised that you should not have understood my remarks re Great Central 1894 Ordinary. This stock is of the nominal value of £100, and is now quoted 41. It bears interest at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum until the opening of the extension of the line to London. It is, of course, the old Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincoln Railway, and it remains to be seen what dividends will be paid when the line is opened for traffic.

American and Foreign Rails.

Kingstown.—The nitrate industry has been in a bad way for a considerable time, and this reacts upon the railway. Jumbo.—There is no possibility of any assessments being made on these high-class bonds. It is likely, however, that they will be redeemed. As regards the Baltimore and Ohio, the bonds will certainly not be assessed in the reorganisation.

Mining Shares.

Kent.—1. There is a possibility of these shares improving again, and you had better hold. 2. Fair. Devorgilla.—The South Africans Nos. 1 and 2 are promising mines and likely to improve. Warrington.—1. I do not advise you to average yet. 2. No; I do not recommend a purchase of these shares. 3. Yes, in time, but not just yet. 4. The Glencairn mine is doing well. Miner.—1. Yes, the mine is doing well, and should gradually work into a better position. 2. I am afraid that prospects are not favourable. Nildrof, Norwich.—The present is not the time for selling your South African shares Nos. 1 to 21, hold for an improvement. This also applies to No. 15. Fir.—1. There has been a temporary reaction, but these shares should advance again. Hold. 2. Hannan's Props. are bound for much higher prices, and as they have been taken in hand by a leading group, should go higher. 3. I am glad you did so well in Lady Shentons on my advice, and there is every prospect of your doing so again if you buy at once. Sammy.—You should hold all your South African shares for an improvement, but do not buy any more just yet. When you do buy I will give you a different selection. Amongst the shares mentioned by you I should think that Nos. 4, 6, and 7 would be the best purchase. Ajax.—1. After the reaction I should certainly advise you to hold Lake View Consols, Ivanhoe, and London and Globes, but you must remember that I strongly advised realisations of Lake View Consols when they reached 12. 2. Certainly hold British America Corporation shares and buy more. 3. Yes, the Deferred would be the best purchase. 4. I cannot tell you anything about the present position of the Jubilee syndicates, you should apply to the Official Receiver. Tyke.—I cannot be responsible for any temporary fluctuations, but there is every prospect of these shares again rising to a much higher level. R. P. T.—There is nothing for it but to hold Nos. 1 to 6, this not being the time to sell. You should await a recovery, which is more than probable. Derrymane.—You should hold your Londonderry shares, but not buy any more to average until some more information is available. Dubious.—You should certainly hold your Glencairns (1), Knights (2), Randfontein (3), and the new issue No. 4 is also a good security, as you will have gathered from my remarks under "The Kaffir Circus."

Type-writers and Cycles, all makes, for Sale, Hire, or Exchange, at half makers' prices. MS. Type-written.—Taylor's 74, Chancery-lane, London. Established 1884.

Industrial Shares.

Eden.—1. I am afraid that in the electric department the improvement has already been discounted by the recent advance. 2. A fair investment, but no catch. 3. You cannot obtain more than 3¼ per cent. in good-class Colonial bonds. C. E. W.—1. Yes, it would be advisable to hold these Petroleum shares. 2. In view of the advance in the price of copper it is probable that a further improvement will take place. 3 It would be preferable to hold now. Jack, Cork.—1. This Company is to be reconstructed, and you should apply to the liquidator, Mr. J. H. Duncan, 39, Coleman-street, E.C., for information. 2. These Brewery Companies have been doing badly of late, but there is a hope of improvement.

Mixed Investments.

Sartorius.—1. Yes, Maple Ordinary are a good purchase. 2. Yes, a fairly safe investment. 3. A fair investment, but no catch. 4. John Barker Ordinary are likely to improve. 5. Great Central 1894 Ordinary are a good purchase at the present price. Holly.—1. I have all along warned my readers against buying Coats shares at excessive prices, and you have paid £75 for those you hold. You should take an opportunity of getting out without much loss. 2. A fair investment, but not likely to improve much. 3. No option but to hold for the present. R. D. N.—1. Hold these shares, the directors' report will shortly be issued. 2. Certainly stick to these mining shares. Heron.—The most promising amongst the mining shares mentioned, Nos. 1 to 5 are Menzies Consols (1) and Florence (4), and you had better purchase these two shares. Grey, Batley.—The Brewery Companies, Nos. 1 and 2, are not doing well just now, but I should think that a recovery is not improbable. 3. Hold these shares, but instead of buying more of them, invest rather in Lady Shentons and Florence. 4. I always held an unfavourable opinion of Klerksdorp shares, and still maintain this view. C. M. K.—I do not care for Glenrocks (1). The breweries Nos. 2 and 3 have been very disappointing. Hopeful Sailor.—1. There may be a chance of an improvement now that the Dominion of Canada is looking up. 2. There is every prospect of an advance, but you should be satisfied with a moderate profit. I am glad you did so well in Lady Shentons on my advice, and as you sold at a high figure you should go in again at the present level. J. R.—I referred to your experience with an outside broker in last week's issue under "Various Investments." There is no option but to hold Bovrils for the present; but Hannan's Props. are strongly on the up-grade, and you should hold for a further important rise. They are now 1⅛ bid. Lee.—1. No, I do not advise averaging these shares; instead, you should buy Glencairn and East Rands. 2. Yes, Randfontein might be averaged now. 3. No, I would not buy these for choice. 4. A fair industrial investment, but very speculative. 5. Hold. R. S.—1. I do not advise a purchase of United Alkali, and never have been in their favour. 2. Quite high enough. 3. I do not recommend these. G. A. V.—No option but to hold A to E; they should improve further. F, G, and H should also be held; but I do not think much of I.

Various Investments.

The future of the Money Market is at present being discussed with much concern. Large sums will shortly be released through Government payments, but considerable amounts will also be required in connection with the new Chinese loan for £16,000,000 sterling. It is not expected that Germany will be able to raise its half without assistance from this side, but, on the other hand, large sums will doubtless remain here in order to pay for amounts falling due both on account of China and Japan. The Greek loan is also looming ahead, but, on the other hand, the demand for gold for Russian account has ceased, and a small amount of £91,000 has just been sent into the Bank of England. No importance is attributed to the small gold shipment to New York, which will probably prove exceptional. The Chinese loans have been steady at 101 for the Silver loan, at 106 for the Six per Cent. Gold loan, and at 101½ for the Five per Cent. Gold loan. It remains to be seen what reception the new Four and Half per Cent. Gold loan at its probable issue price of 88-90 will receive. Silver is very little changed at 25⅝d., the forward quotation being 25$\frac{9}{16}$. Rupee paper has hardly moved, being still quoted at 63⅝. Consols have fluctuated to a considerable extent with the varying political rumours. At one time the quotation recovered to 113, and is now but little lower at 112¾. In the cycle section there has so far been no improvement. Humber Ordinary are unaltered at 14s., while the Extensions are easier at 8s. 3d. Cycle Components at 2$\frac{3}{16}$ are also lower, but Swifts remain at ¾, Singers at 13s. 6d. Amalgamated Tyres are dull at 5s., while Dunlop Deferred at 14s. 6d. are slightly easier, the Ordinary being quoted 18s., French Dunlops, 5s. Allsopp Ordinary are lower at 158½, and Bovril Deferred are better at $\frac{13}{16}$, while Schweppe Deferred have been dull at $\frac{9}{16}$. Welsbach Incandescent Gas stocks have also been dull, and the Ordinary have receded to 117, the Preferred to 101, while the Deferred are quoted 21s. 6d. Hudson Bays have rallied slightly to 22, but they are a weak market. A satisfactory announcement is that made by the directors of the Baring Estate Company, that the whole of the outstanding Second Mortgage Debentures of the Company (being the £350,000 not previously drawn) will be paid off, with accrued interest, on April 1 next, at the National Provincial Bank of England, Limited. Immediate steps will now be taken to wind up the Company. With reference to the controversy concerning the issue of shares in the South London Electric Supply Corporation by the Directors at a price considerably below the market quotation, I understand that it is proposed, on the part of a number of important shareholders, to require the Board to call a special meeting of shareholders, under Clause 38 of the Articles of Association. I was one of the first to draw attention to the charges of irregularities in the management of the Grosvenor Hotel. Pending the legal proceedings I was unable to pass any comment. It now appears from the proceedings at the meeting of a body of shareholders, which has just been held, that much obstruction is practised by the Drew party, Mr. Newitt, who was in the chair on Monday, having done his best to stifle publicity and to bring matters to a deadlock. Sooner or later, however, the shareholders, headed by Mr. Kimber, M.P., and by Mr. Spokes, must get their way, and it certainly is quite time that the management should be changed, or that Mr. Kimber's proposal, to put the conduct of the business into commission pending the appointment of a legally constituted board, should be carried out.—Your affectionate Uncle, MOSES.

QUEER STORY.

KLONDYKE CAXTON.

SOME shrewd observer of human nature—I think it was Dr. Johnson—once expressed this particularly well-founded opinion, that every man who has gone out into the world, and there made name and fame, always likes to return and air his celebrity in his native place. I suppose we have all seen the truth of the dictum exemplified in a thousand instances. I know, at least, that I have. But one especially striking example has been brought before my notice lately, attended by circumstances so interesting, as to make it well-worth recording in extenso. I will venture, therefore, to give you the whole story of "Klondyke Caxton."

Klondyke Caxton was a native of X., a largish manufacturing centre in the Black Country. His father, a poor clergyman, had no means to afford his son a good start in life, and he was thankful enough when the interest of certain friends secured him a clerkship in one of the local banks. Young Charlie Caxton (as he was then called), remained in the bank for nine or ten years, until he had achieved the age of twenty-eight, and a salary of £150 per annum. Now—taking into account the conditions of the bank-clerk labour market—this was by no means bad. But Charlie Caxton was a shrewd fellow, and had done even better for himself, in the time, than he might have expected. He was already assistant-cashier, with the prospect of soon becoming chief-cashier, at an increased salary; and, in fact, so well were his business abilities thought of by his chiefs, that he had a very fair hope of being appointed manager of one of the country branches before many years were over. But circumstances occurred just at this time which caused him to throw up his situation and leave the neighbourhood. These circumstances were connected with an affair of the heart.

The young lady was Miss Miriam Wakefield, only daughter of the Vicar of X. She was a very pretty and charming, if somewhat superficial girl, then barely eighteen years of age; and her maiden fancy was soon caught by Charlie Caxton's handsome face and agreeable manners.

On his side, Charles was deeply in love with Miriam, and made no secret of his attachment. But the relatives of both young people naturally viewed the affair with disapproval; for Charles had nothing but his meagre salary, and Miriam had not a penny. However, the enamoured Charles was deaf to all reasoning, and Miriam, being a spoiled daughter and accustomed to have her way, at length coaxed her father into giving a reluctant consent to the engagement.

"But it will be a siege of Troy, my darling," he pointed out. "Charles will not be in a position to marry for ten years."

"I would wait for him, if it were twenty, father," she cried, with sparkling and flushing cheeks.

The Vicar smiled to himself, but said no more. He was a man wise in his generation. He thought he could gauge Miriam's disposition, and—well, ten years was a long time.

Everything went smoothly with the lovers for about a twelvemonth. Then a cloud began to appear upon the horizon of Charles Caxton's happiness. He noticed some slight change in Miriam's demeanour towards himself. At first it was very slight, but gradually it became more marked. Poor Charles was terribly upset. He felt that he was not mistaken, and that Miriam's love for him was cooling daily. In this conviction—as a matter of fact—he was quite correct. Miriam, if the truth must be told, was a young lady incapable of any real intensity of love. She was emphatically not the stuff out of which heroines are made, and that degree of heroism in love which required her to wait an indefinite time for marriage, while the best of her youth was slipping away, and which offered her no better reward at the end than the position of a very poor man's wife, was (as she thought on mature reflection) just a spot beyond her.

In this idea she was sedulously encouraged and supported by all her friends and relations. "You are throwing yourself away on Charles Caxton," they said, "when with your pretty face, my dear, you might marry a fortune." "There are many rich men quite as handsome as Charles," was the tenor of others' remarks. "There is young Silkstone for instance. He has just come into £3,000 a year." Miriam blushed at this. There was young Silkstone, and he was quite as handsome as Charles, and he had £3,000 a year, or rather more. For his father, the retired coal merchant, had only died six months ago, and his personalty, almost the whole of which came to his son, had been sworn at £110,000 net. Also the latter had begun to be very polite and attentive to herself, and—and—and——.

Now reflections of this kind often begin by ending with an "and——." But they seldom end by ending so. Miriam's reflections ended with a letter—a very nice, proper, prettily-worded letter to Charles Caxton. Young Silkstone's name was not mentioned in the letter; but only her (Miriam's) struggles between love and duty, in which Heaven had given her the strength to range herself on the latter's side. Heaven also (it appeared from the letter) had given her not only strength, but conviction; conviction that she had no right—nay, that it would be selfish in her to the point of criminality—to marry him (Charles), and to foist herself as a burden upon his slender means. No, she would not hamper him. She would not ruin his prospects. She cared for him far too much. It was because she cared for him so much that she was giving him his freedom; and when in future years he, married perchance to some rich wife, and become a county magnate, should meet a dowdy, faded little old maid, yclept Miriam Wakefield, he would surely breathe a prayer of thankfulness to Heaven at the merciful escape that he had had of being tied for life to such an incubus. And in conclusion she was always his sincere friend and true well-wisher—Miriam.

That was a very artful little touch about the "old maid," wasn't it? It contradicted the truth of any rumours that Charles might have heard in reference to young Silkstone and herself in the most delicately insinuating manner. Charles read this letter without any external display of emotion; though, to be sure, his face was hard and set, and a bitter smile curled his lip. The blow did not fall unexpectedly. He had been studying the signs of the times in Miriam's demeanour now for months past; and had felt sure that, sooner or later, it would come to this. Of course, he read between the lines of the letter. He saw that Miriam merely wanted to be rid of him. And he had too much pride and self-respect to abase himself by any weak entreaties or protestations. Nor, in his reply, did he indulge in any angry reproaches, or, whatever he may have felt, other exhibitions of mortification or ill temper. Charles always had perfect command of himself, and his answering letter was polite and dignified.

He was deeply grieved (he said) by her communication. But in this, as in all other matters, he bowed himself to her lightest wish. Her letters and presents were returned in an accompanying packet. But one thing he still retained—the sweet memory of what had been. And one privilege he should still claim—the privilege of serving her, if occasion offered, at any future time. Though no longer her affianced lover, he begged permission to subscribe himself her always devoted servant, Charles Caxton.

So that affair was ended, and Miriam congratulated herself on having escaped from her engagement without fuss, unpleasantness, or scandal. Six months elapsed. Then a further announcement was made in the columns of certain London and local papers:—

> A marriage has been arranged and will shortly take place between Londonderry Silkstone, Esq., of Walksend Manor, X., and Miriam, only daughter of the Rev. Theodore Wakefield, Vicar of X.

It was soon after this announcement that Charles threw up his berth at the Bank and suddenly quitted X., without having communicated his intention to any of his friends.

For several years nothing was heard of Charles by his friends in X. Then, one day a letter was received by one of them, dated six or seven weeks previously, and bearing the postmark, "Dawson City." The young man wrote in good spirits. And no wonder! For he had excellent news about himself to tell. It appeared that, soon after quitting X., he had gone out to British Columbia, of which he had heard the highest reports from a friend of his who had settled there previously, and who invited him to come out and see the country for himself. He had accepted the invitation, and, on arriving in the Colony, had first of all, helped his friend with his stock-raising, the pursuit in which he was engaged. But after a few months, they heard, from a traveller, who visited them on his way South, such glowing accounts of the gold-finding prospects in the Klondyke region, that they were caught with the fever to go there themselves and try their luck.

Fortunately, his friend had some capital at command; fortunately, also, they got into Klondyke (though only after considerable hardships), before the boom set in. They had thus been able to acquire a small plot from the Dominion Government on comparatively easy terms; and judge of their delight when they found that they had hit upon one of the richest lots in the whole district. Charlie's friend had had the sense to enlist, at once, the services of a competent mining engineer, to whom they had to pay the modest fee of 3,000 dollars. But in spite of that expense; in spite of the money (4,000 dollars), which they had given for their plot; in spite of a wages bill of about 2,400 dollars; in spite of the enormous price they had to pay for food, they had netted a considerable fortune in their first season. In the next season they had done even better; in the season following better still; and now they were negotiating the sale of their lot to a syndicate at a figure which, when added to their already large takings, would make them both wealthy men (for his friend was most generously going equal shares with himself), for the rest of their lives.

He went on to add that when the sale in question was completed, and other business matters arranged, he should probably run over to the old country; in which event his friends at X. might certainly rely on his looking them up, and he concluded by asking his friend to write and tell him all the news of the neighbourhood.

When the contents of this letter got about, as they at once did, quite a stir was created in Charles' native town; and his friend, in writing back to him, informed him, half jocularly, that every inhabitant of X., especially the marriageable maidens, were dying to have a personal sight of "Klondyke Caxton," as they had already christened him. "I have not much news to send you," said the writer, in the course of his epistle. "Things go on here much as usual. Stay! There is one item, though, that will interest you. Young Silkstone is dead. He was killed by a fall out hunting two years after you went away. So, you see, my dear fellow, your faithless little sweetheart, Miriam, is now a very charming widow. It looks as if Silkstone hadn't left her nearly so well off as was expected. For she is now living in a tiny house in the smallest of small ways, and even what she has is to go from her in event of her marrying again: at least, so it is popularly reported. Rather a shame of Silkstone to treat her so, I must say. Though, to be sure, she deserves it, in a sense, for the way in which she treated you."

No further letter was received from Caxton. The next event was his personal return to X. a few months later. As regards appearance, he was not much altered, except for being somewhat tanned by exposure to the weather. But in his manner, his demeanour, his general air, there was a very decided change. It was, indeed, just the change that might have been expected to result from his completely altered circumstances; a change from the modest diffidence of a poor young clerk into the full assurance of a wealthy and successful man. Not that he was in the least arrogant, or bumptious, or ostentatious. Quite the reverse. But he bore himself, and could not help bearing himself, with that almost unconscious self-confidence that great success inevitably imparts. Some of his friends, who fancied themselves particularly observant, said that they now and then detected a gleam of contemptuous triumph in his eye when he met some acquaintance, who, having been coldly neglectful of him in his poverty, was now obsequiously cordial to him in his wealth. But if such a feeling even betrayed itself for a moment in his eye, it was never exhibited either in his manner or his conversation. He was friendly and affable to every one. Even Silkstone's widow, whom he might have been excused for treating with hauteur, and who had, on the first occasion of their meeting again, been obviously embarrassed, was relieved to find Charles perfectly pleasant and agreeable; and his demeanour towards her was all the more remarkable, because he had previously had the reputation of being a man who did not easily forgive.

"It is really very sweet of Charles to bear no malice," said Miriam to her father the vicar, some weeks later. "He is a good, generous fellow."

"He can afford to be generous, my dear," replied her parent. "His success has been extraordinary; and I should say his wealth must be immense."

"I heard people saying the other day that he was worth nearly half a million, papa."

"Hardly so much as that, my pet. But from what I can hear in well informed circles, he is worth nearly a quarter of a million."

"How much a year would a quarter of a million be, papa?" asked Mrs. Silkstone, carelessly.

"Well—as a shrewd fellow like Charles would invest it, ten or twelve thousand, at least. Certainly Charles is a lucky man."

"He is lucky," assented Miriam, with a sigh.

And, for some reason, the expression of her face grew grave, and even gloomy, as she spoke.

Nothing worthy of record occurred for the next few months, except that people began to talk a good deal and to say how foolish it was of Klondyke Caxton to allow himself to be entangled (as he was apparently doing) into a second affair with the woman who had thrown him over so scandalously five years before. And while they wondered he could be so idiotic, they marvelled how she could be so barefaced. The mothers of marriageables were particularly strong on this point, and swelled, to the full extent of their corsets, with righteous indignation whenever they spoke of it. That he should pass by hundreds of nice girls in favour of that perfidious and designing creature was incomprehensible. But that she should spread her nets for him, without disguise or shame, in the full glare of the public eye, was neither more nor less than an outrage on common decency. Heaven grant her intended victim might come to his senses, and free himself from her toils, before it was too late!

This pious prayer, however, was not destined to be granted. Six months after his return to X., Caxton's re-engagement to Silkstone's widow was duly announced, and the corsets of the mothers of the marriageables were in serious danger of bursting. There was no reason for waiting. The wedding was fixed to take place at a very early date.

But much may happen in a short time; and in this brief interval a very important thing, indeed, occurred. At first, came a vague rumour—a rumour which people whispered into each other's ears with impressive nods and gestures. But soon it swelled and asserted itself into louder utterance and more assertive tones. Klondyke Caxton's wealth had been immensely overrated. If he had ever possessed a quarter of what people had credited him with, it was the outside. But that was not the worst. There were two far graver statements to be made. The one; that the Canadian Bank, with which the bulk of Caxton's money had been placed on deposit, pending investment, had suspended payment. The other: that the negotiations for the sale of his Klondyke diggings to a syndicate, at a high figure, had fallen through, owing to the unexpected exhaustion of the gold, which had suddenly rendered them valueless.

Of course, one cannot believe all that one hears, and had this been only a matter of hearsay, it need not have meant much. But Caxton himself, in talking to his friends, admitted the general accuracy of these rumours. To Miriam he had been more explicit. About a fortnight before their wedding—as soon as the certainty of these disasters reached him—he went to her and told her the truth. From the wealthy man he had hitherto believed himself to be, he was suddenly transformed to a very poor man indeed. A few thousands were left—that was all; enough to bring in a meagre income of, say, £200 a year. Under these circumstances, he could not hold her to her promise. She was free—if she wished to be free. He placed himself, unreservedly, in her hands, and so on.

Miriam's answer quite took his breath away.

"Oh, Charlie!" she said, gazing at him with earnest, eager eyes, and clasping her hands together nervously. "I'm—I'm—I'm so glad!"

Charles started, and stared at her in blank astonishment. He could find no words to express his surprise.

"I don't mean that I'm glad for your sake," she went on to explain, eagerly. "But I'm so—so glad for my own."

"Eh?" gasped Charles, more and more bewildered. "Eh?"

"I must tell you something, Charlie," she said, dropping her voice, and speaking with unmistakable earnestness. "By marrying Mr. Silkstone, because he was rich, I learnt a bitter, bitter lesson. It was not until after I became his wife that I realised how much I had loved you—how much I loved you still. And when he was killed, Charlie, I was not, I could not be, sorry; for I felt—I—I—knew, that—that, when you heard of his death, you would come—come back. You have heard, perhaps, how he left his money to me, Charlie? An income of £3,000 a year during my life or widowhood. But everything to pass from me, if I married again. And knowing that you would return to me some day, I at once took a small house and lived on a tiny income, Charlie, in order that I might save and save and save, and have a little something to bring to you when you returned. But you came back rich, Charlie, and I was so disappointed, and—and—and——"

She said no more; for at that conjuncture, Charles started forward and caught her in his arms. And for the next ten minutes nothing was said on either side that could be of the slightest interest to any except the two immediately concerned.

By and bye, however, Charles had to make a confession. "Sweetheart," he said, "Don't banish me into outer darkness for what I am going to confess to you. It was not until you told me this just now, that I—I realised that—that I loved you still, from the bottom of my heart. I thought that when you threw me over and married Silkstone you had killed my love. And I vowed, that if I ever had the chance, I would punish you for the wrong you had done me. So when I came back here, Miriam, a wealthy man, my design was simply to induce you to become engaged to me thinking I was rich——"

"Oh, Charlie, Charlie! But I have deserved it all. Go on!"

"And then—don't look at me, sweetest, while I confess my baseness—then to—to place you in the position in which you would— would—(oh, forgive me, Miriam! I thought you only cared for money)—incur the odium of throwing me over a second time, because I was poor. It was a blackguardly design. I loathe myself for it. I——"

"Charlie," whispered Miriam, looking up suddenly into his face, "perhaps we both have reason to loathe ourselves for what we were in the past. But don't you think we have—have even better reason to—love each other—for what we are going to be in the future?"

They were married on the day appointed. Charles looked radiantly happy. So did Miriam. The mothers of marriageables did not look radiantly happy; for it had transpired (to the most perilous straining of their matronly staylaces) that Klondyke Caxton's loss of money was merely a myth which he himself had set on foot.

ART NOTES.

I NEED make no apology for devoting my first paragraph to a hearty commendation of the Exhibition of the late Sir Frank Lockwood's sketches and caricatures now to be seen at Mr. Mendoza's Galleries in King-street, St. James's. It is emphatically the most interesting show in London. For genial fun, keen observation, and infinite variety it would be hard to beat these delightful pen and ink drawings. And then, above all, they prove that Sir Frank Lockwood was a genuine humourist. A rapid glance at his exhibited sketches would be enough to convince the most severe of his critics of that. Humour is the saving salt of his drawings, rough and hastily done and unfinished as many of them are. But his humour was never mordant or even unkind. As a matter of fact, it is in many cases the legal and parliamentary comrades he caricatured who have sent the most characteristic of his pen and ink skits, hurriedly pencilled or "quilled," some of them on the margin of Parliamentary papers, some on briefs, some on the backs of envelopes, some even on fragments of blotting-paper. Nothing this genial humourist ever did is more irresistibly comical than his sketches of the well-known and widely-popular Mr. Murphy, Q.C. And some of these, thanks to the good nature of that weighty counsel himself, are now to be enjoyed at Mr. Mendoza's. The skits on Sir Richard Webster, again, are full of the most delightful fun. But it is invidious to particularise where nearly all are so good. The Exhibition, I may add, will only be open to the public for a limited period, and the fact that the proceeds are to be devoted to the aid of an excellent charity—the Barristers' Benevolent Fund—enables me to recommend an early visit with all the more emphasis.

According to Mr. Ruskin, landscape painting is "the thoughtful, passionate representation of the physical conditions appointed for human existence." This dependence of landscape for its power over the human soul upon human association has always been a favourite theme with the author of "Modern Painters," and forms, as his readers will readily recall, the subject of many an eloquent page in his earlier books. There is a very good opportunity just now to see how far Mr. Ruskin's definition applies to the work of some of the greatest masters of our English school of water-colourists—such as Turner, De Wint, David Cox, Varley, and R. P. Bonington—for Messrs. Agnew are exhibiting at their Bond-street Galleries an exceedingly choice collection of water-colour drawings by the artists I have named, and many others of note. There can be little doubt as to what the verdict will be in the case of such drawings, for instance, as De Wint's "Ploughing" (No. 15), or his "Essex Marshes" (No. 118). The Turners on view are not of such masterful quality. Bonington, I think, is seen to far greater advantage. But it is not only specimens of our Classical school of water-colour painting that Messrs. Agnew are exhibiting. The collection at their galleries includes also the works of more recent masters, such as Leighton and Alma Tadema, George Wetherbee, and Dante Gabriel Rossetti. There are a couple of drawings, too, by Sir Edward Burne-Jones, in which his supremacy as a rich colourist may be noted. Nor should a characteristic example of the late Mr. A. B. Houghton's artistic method be overlooked. It is called "The Transformation of King Beder," and like much of Houghton's best work was inspired by "The Arabian Nights."

It is not a far cry from the bottom of Bond-street to the Egyptian Hall, but there is, alas! a great gulf fixed between the two shows that are to be seen at Messrs. Agnew's and at the Dudley Gallery respectively. The Thirty-fourth Annual Exhibition of the Dudley Gallery Art Society is at the best but a depressing one. I doubt if even a Mark Tapleyan art critic would long preserve his sanguine jollity and optimistic high spirits amongst such surroundings. Professor Ruskin, I notice, is one of the Honorary Vice-Presidents of the Society; but it is not much use at the Egyptian Hall to look for any practical carrying out of his already-quoted definition. It is not that there are no works of merit in the exhibition but such as there are unfortunately get swamped, so to speak, by their commonplace surroundings, for the public display of some of which it is difficult to find even a plausible excuse.

At the Dowdeswell Galleries is to be seen a collection of water-colours of Cairo, Damascus, and other oriental places by Mr. Walter Tyndale. One is getting a little sated with drawings of Cairo, but Damascus has not yet been done to death, and there is much that is interesting and attractive in Mr. Tyndale's water-colours of the latter city. He is able to convey the brilliant aspect of outdoor life in the East with a facility and success which show he is in sympathy with his subject. He achieves his effects, too, with a mastery of technique that is often admirable.

MUSIC.

THE WELSH INVASION.

THE present week in musical London has been largely devoted to gallant little Wales. There was on Monday a big festival at St. Paul's, the evening service (including the sermon, which was an exhilarating experience to the humble Sassenach) being given throughout in the Welsh tongue, illustrated by Welsh music. One of the features of this St. David's Day service was the reading by Sir John Puleston of the First Lesson. On Monday, too, at the City Temple, Dr. Parker provided an almost unique "entertainment," the principal feature of which was announced to be the delivery of sermons by no fewer than five eminent Welsh preachers. The worst enemy of a Welsh clergyman will not truthfully deny him the virtue of prolixity; but five Welsh sermons at a sitting must have satisfied the voracity even of the preachers themselves. There has also been an Eisteddfod at Queen's Hall.

Eisteddfodau, so popular in Wales, have, however, never flourished in London. The choirs and the solo singers who took part in the contests last week were certainly not of the first order of merit, and the proceedings were decorous and consequently not a little dull. At the real Eisteddfodau given in Wales things are much more lively. The big choral contests, indeed, create an amount of excitement rivalled only by cricket in Australia or football in Yorkshire. At Queen's Hall things were tame enough. Nobody was pelted or even hooted at. The judgment of the adjudicators was accepted with hardly a murmur, while any attempt to "duck" the judges, unfairly said to be a favourite pastime in the Principality, was evidently considered an impropriety. In short, there was none of the fun of the fair, and a disconsolate Welshman, on leaving the hall, was overheard in a pathetic lament concerning the "waste of his blessed bob." Indeed, although at Easter a modified form of song contest is successfully held in the East End of London, these competitions never flourish here. One was tried by the late Willert Beale at the Crystal Palace nearly thirty years ago; but it attracted comparatively little attention, although one of its "discoveries" was the gifted soprano who subsequently became so popular as Miss Anna Williams. The late Henry Leslie also tried singing competitions, but they were a failure. The greatest fiasco, however, occurred at the Albert Hall in 1887, when the National Eisteddfod of Wales was held, "In the rays of the Sun, in the eye of the Light, in the City of Lud in Britain." I believe that something like 20,000 tickets, at reduced prices, from Wales to London, had been issued by the railway companies, and this was considered amply sufficient to have filled the Albert Hall twice over. But the great building, day after day, presented a beggarly array of empty benches, and it was not until some Welsh wag tried the experiment of starting the National Welsh hymn, "Land of my Fathers," in the big arena then occupied by Buffalo Bill, and the familiar tune was taken up by his countrymen from all parts of the building, that the whereabouts was discovered of some of the supposed visitors to the Eisteddfod. As a matter of fact, Welshmen seem to care little for a London Eisteddfod, and their only National celebration in the metropolis is the very fine service at St. Paul's Cathedral, over which the Bishop of St. David's presided on Monday. Here familiar Welsh hymns were sung in procession by a body of about 200 choristers, ladies for once at St. Paul's being permitted to take part in the service, while Mr. Ben Davies, "chief tenor of Wales," sang the solo in the anthem which boasted the hopelessly incomprehensible title of "Bloeddiwch Cydgenwch." The setting of the canticles was from the pen of a typical Welshman, Owain Alaw. Even the sermon was in the Welsh tongue, a fact which ought to have rendered Cymric reporters at a premium. Indeed, a year or two ago the young and enterprising representative of a great London daily paper received in this respect a crushing disappointment. He engaged a native Welshman to whisper into his ear the English translation of the sermon as it proceeded. But his sub-editor prudently struck it all out, on the ground that he might have been hoaxed. Welsh preachers usually adopt different tactics. They duly provide a written English translation of the sermon for those of the reporters who are conscientiously inclined and like to give a précis of the discourse. On Monday the Bishop of St. David's omitted this precaution, on the ground that he preached extempore. The inevitable result was seen in Tuesday's daily papers.

The cantata "Deirdre," by Signor Esposito, which carried off the prize at the Dublin Musical Festival last year, was produced for the first time in London at Queen's Hall on Saturday. A good many people were surprised that at a purely Irish festival an Italian musician—albeit an old resident of Dublin—should win the prize which was obviously intended for an Irish musician. But the Festival itself resulted in a sort of split in the Irish musical camp, and Sir Arthur Sullivan, Dr. Stanford, and other eminent Irishmen refrained from taking any part in it. Italians have always been favourites in the Irish capital, and besides Signor Esposito, among the professors of music still practising there, are Signor Papini, the well-known violinist, Signor Angelis, and the Brothers Regazzoli.

The cantata "Deirdre" has, in fact, very little of the Irish element about it, and it is for the most part pure Italian, pretty as to its melody, and, except in one entry, where the Queen's Hall choir made a slip, presenting few difficulties to the performers. The story is the national legend, common however to many countries, of a swain who eloped with the betrothed of a king and was tempted back to his native land, where by treachery he was slain. The hero of the present cantata carried the lady off to Scotia, where, after a sort of Gretna Green ceremony and a long honeymoon, he, discovering no human being to kill, became deadly dull. So he went back blithely enough to Ireland, perhaps the happier because he had left his wife in Scotia. The best feature of Signor Esposito's cantata is the dirge sung by the Irishman's hapless wife, who kills herself by falling on her husband's sword. The music, however, merits a better libretto.

The orchestral season in Glasgow is about to close, and it is understood that the enterprise of the Scottish Orchestra Company will then come to an end. This scheme was organised by certain busybodies, more or less in antagonism to Mr. Manns, who had rescued the Glasgow orchestral concerts from the distressful pecuniary state in which they had been left by certain foreign conductors; and who had carried them on for many years with artistic and commercial profit.

The Scottish Orchestra was founded partly to organise a permanent band for Scotland, partly to introduce certain foreign conductors. Its first result was to stifle the old orchestral scheme, for the commercial capital of Scotland was not sufficiently advanced in music to be able to support two symphony bands Its second result was to confine the "Scottish" orchestra mainly to Dutchmen and other foreigners. The, season originally consisting of six months, was reduced to five, then to four, later on to three, and this year to two months, the band filling up time by touring in Holland, where their Dutch was understood far better than their Scotch. In Glasgow various orchestral chiefs have from time to time been employed, particularly Mr. Henschel, who is now almost a British subject, and Herr Kes, of Amsterdam. Both these gentlemen are distinguished conductors, but neither of them was able to permanently establish the orchestra. Now it is said that Mr. Wood, of Queen's Hall, is to be approached, and possibly under his guidance there may be better results. Or, if the directors prefer foreign musicians, they might consult that undoubted expert on such matters, Signor Randegger.

In the course of a discussion concerning the position of orchestral music in Glasgow last week, a proposition was gravely put forward that the Town Council should subsidise the orchestral concerts. It was received with shouts of derision. The canny Scot knows a good deal better than to subsidise public amusements. Those who wish to hear symphonies should be in a position to pay for the entertainment.

Sir Arthur Sullivan's "Martyr of Antioch" was duly produced as an opera at the Lyceum Theatre, Edinburgh, on Friday. It is a pity that in the stage version the beautiful setting of "Brother, thou hast gone before us" had to be sacrificed, but this funeral hymn, the masterpiece perhaps of Milman, is now so frequently used as a portion of the Church service that Sir Arthur preferred it should not be utilised for stage work. Accordingly, another and inferior funeral anthem, "Wreaths for our Graves" was substituted, and the finale to the cantata was slightly altered. The Carl Rosa troupe, who this week are at Brighton, have produced two new operas within a fortnight, not at all a bad record for a travelling party.

"La Poupée" reached its anniversary on Thursday, when M. Audran, its composer, came to London expressly to direct the work, this being his first appearance here as a conductor. A pleasant little surprise was prepared for him, for at the close of the first act in the doll-maker's shop, where all sorts of animated toys are seen in motion, there were revived a series of tableaux from "Olivette,"

China and Glass. — Messrs. Goode, Artists and Designers, solicit an inspection of their collection in their recently-extended South Audley-street premises, now by far the largest and most important in Europe. Messrs. Goode guarantee the excellence of all their productions, and invite a comparison of their prices with those of any co-operative stores.

"La Mascotte," "Miss Decima," and "La Cigale," the works by which M. Audran is best known in England.

Dr. Joachim drew on Saturday to the Popular Concerts the biggest audience of the season, perhaps, to hear that celebrated piece of musical fireworks, Tartini's "Devil's Trill." The Saturday performances still continue to attract a good deal more largely than the Mondays—a fact which one of these days must be taken into serious consideration. Last week Sir Frederick Bridge conducted an admirable performance of the "Redemption" at the Albert Hall. Some of the tempi were taken at a much slower pace than that adopted by the late Sir Joseph Barnby, but they were none the worse for that. Sir Joseph always appeared as a conductor of oratorio to be anxious not to miss his last train to Eton. One of the principal productions of the week was the "Elegiac" pianoforte trio by the young Russian composer Rachmaninoff. It is too long, lasting nearly an hour, and in some places very abstruse, but it is beyond question a fine work. Mr. Mark Hambourg, who has so greatly improved both in power and technique since his visit to Australia, has played at a recital, and the first of a series of concerts has likewise been given by Messrs. Greene and Borwick—the popular Irish basso reviving a series of old Irish melodies which have felicitously been fitted to new words by Mr. A. P. Graves.

LETTERS ON BOOKS.

My dear Mr. Wyndham,—In "Simon Dale" (1) Mr. Anthony Hope has achieved the most brilliant success of the year—though the public who could admire "The Christian" may lack the wit to discover it. As, however, it has the popular and opportune merit of being an historical novel of breathless interest, it must score an ample, if not an adequate, success. What will most charm you in it is a wit worthy of the Merry Monarch, of Rochester, and of Nell Gwyn, who grace its lively stage, and indeed and in truth worthy of Congreve himself. Like Congreve and like Sheridan, Mr. Hope cannot resist the temptation of making all his personages as witty as himself, and the result is that you read the story, as it were, by successive and incessant flashes of sheet lightning. Open the book where you will, and you are dazzled by these coruscations, of which the following specimens of Charles's and Rochester's cynical vein is but an average sample:—

"In defining virtue as the device by which the weak intimidate the strong," observed Rochester, "the philosopher declared the purpose of virtue rather than its effect. For the strong are not intimidated, while the weak, falling slaves to their own puppet, grow more helpless still." "It's a just retribution on them," said the King, "for having invented a thing so tiresome." "In truth, sir, all these things that make virtue are given a man for his profit, that he may not go empty-handed into the mart of the world. He has stuff for barter; he can give honour for pleasure, morality for money, religion for power." "The sum of the matter," said the King, "is that he who refuses no bargain, however iniquitous, and performs none, however binding"—"Is a King among men, sir," interposed Rochester, with a low bow, "even as your Majesty is here at Whitehall."

The only lack of wit shown in the book is exhibited by its hero—not in words, since he also is brilliant in repartee—but in his mutton-headed obtuseness in love. If, however, heroes did not in this way play bo-peep with heroines, most novels would come to an untimely end. By giving the book the form of an autobiography, Mr. Anthony Hope encounters, without overcoming, the difficulty of describing in minute detail scenes and conversations which the narrator could not by any possibility have either seen or heard or had reported to him. While the heroine of "Simon Dale" exhausts in vain all the resources of feminine finesse for the encouragement of the hero, the heroine of "The Kentuckians" (2) has her woman's wit taxed to the utmost to keep at bay her swarming hosts of suitors. Every one loves her, every one proposes for her, and she refuses every one, and most decidedly and repeatedly of all him whom she finally accepts. This difference between the two heroines is all the more striking because of the difference between the fascination each has for the reader. No one can help loving Mr. Anthony Hope's heroine, whereas the heroine of "The Kentuckians" interests you only as a piece of ribbon which is the prize of an exciting competition. The struggle for her hand between Valentine and Orson is exciting, though neither of the competitors is very convincing, and though the prize goes to the less convincing and deserving of the two. What, however, strikes you most in the novel is its picture of the Arcadian manners of Kentucky, where the very members who denounce the Sicilian vendetta, which is carried on incessantly and murderously in the mountains, themselves fire at each other at sight on the steps of the Parliament House to the admiration of the police. As one of the duellists quitted the field of honour—the steps of the Parliament House—and walked towards the gate, "a policeman held it open for him, and touched his corded slouch hat as the mountaineer passed through." And what extorted the policeman's reverence and wrung tears from strong men? The magnanimity of one of the two heroes in refraining from shooting down the other whom the disabling of his revolver left at his mercy! But "The Kentuckians" has go in it, and interests you throughout. "The Broom of the War-God" (3) is all go from the first to the last page. It is a singularly vivid narrative in the form of a novel of the Græco-Turkish War, while every line bears the impress of absolute truthfulness. There seems to be not the slightest doubt that the Greeks were "more sinned against than sinning," and that the arch-sinner against them was not the Turk, nor the Powers, but their own King:—

In an interview published in the "Acropolis" (September 9), writes Mr. Brailsford, the Crown Prince remarked, "I need hardly tell you that when I went to Thessaly I did not believe that we were really going to war." It is now abundantly clear that the King and Delyanni were playing a game of bluff, as they did in 1878 and in 1886. The war was an appeal, not to arms, but to the nerves of an over-drilled Europe. In this light, the half-hearted defence of the frontier, and the withdrawal from Larissa, and then from Pharsala, become explicable. It is now known that it was only after a protest from the Thessalian deputies that any force was sent to Velestino. A serious resistance was not in the programme of the King and his Prime Minister, however much in earnest the nation as a whole may have been. In a book recently published in Athens, "Foreign Rule and Monarchy in Greece," by M. Philaretos, the deputy for Volo, it is stated on the authority of M. Levidis, formerly Minister of Marine, that the instructions sent by the Ministry to the fleet were constantly met by contradictory orders emanating from the Court. He had prepared an aggressive programme, but the King co-operated with the European Concert in "localising the conflagration." This certainly tends to confirm the theory that King George had some understanding with Russia.

After all, it is not these Kings that are chiefly to blame if their peoples allow themselves to be bought and sold and slaughtered like sheep. I cannot resist quoting for you Campanella's fine sonnet:—

The people is a beast of muddy brain
That knows not its own strength, and therefore stands
Loaded with wood and stone; the powerless hands
Of a mere child guide it with bit and rein;
One kick would be enough to break the chain;
But the beast fears, and what the child demands
It does; nor its own terror understands
Confused and stupified by bugbears vain.
Most wonderful! With its own hand it ties
And gags itself—gives itself death and war
For pence doled out by Kings from its own store.
Its own are all things between earth and heaven;
But this it knows not; and if one arise
To tell this truth, it kills him unforgiven.

Finally, let me recommend to you most strongly an admirably told story of a scandal, "The Marchioness Against the County (4), a woman's war, which is the most merciless and remorseless of all. The Marchioness wins a Cadmeian victory; for at the moment of conquering her detractors she loses her loveliness and her serenity; and the naturalness of the effect upon her of the ravages of disease is in keeping with the vivid realism of the entire story. Indeed, its personages are so life-like as to seem portraits drawn direct from life.—Believe me, my dear Mr. Wyndham, ever yours very sincerely,

DESMOND B. O'BRIEN.

GIRLS' GOSSIP.

DEAREST AMY,—The first Drawing Room was neither a very small nor a very large one. Several brides of more or less high degree were presented on their marriage, among them Mrs. Hamilton, who was Miss FitzGeorge. She wore her lovely wedding gown, a creation of Mr. Joyce. You may remember that it was embroidered in fairy-like fashion with pearls and turquoises mingled with crystal. She was presented by her mother-in-law, Lady Hamilton, of Iping, Sussex, who wore a sweet black satin gown embroidered all over with jet scrolls and showing glimpses of a white satin underdress veiled with Honiton. Touches of the lace and white satin on the bodice were deftly added, and a cluster of red geranium repeated the tone of the satin lining of the train.

Mrs. Dighton Probyn, another bride, wore her wedding gown, and carried an exquisite Goodyear bouquet of white lilac, with a cluster of white roses falling outwards at one side. Lady Griselda Cheape, also a bride, proved that she possesses her mother's picturesque taste in dress, for she wore quite a picture-gown of pearl-grey satin, with folds crossing the bodice trimmed with sable and silver. Scarves of silk muslin trimmed the skirt, and the train was edged with light and graceful frills of chiffon.

Mrs. Pierpoint-Morgan was much observed. She is the wife of the multi-millionaire, and is nice-looking with a lovely complexion and golden hair of the true, natural colour. Her dress was lovely, with no false glitter about it, but radiant in simplicity, if I may use an apparently contradictory expression. The white satin bodice and petticoat were veiled with finest, snowy lisse, on which lay lines of cream-tinted lace. The white satin was in a new shape called "Duchess" by its clever inventor, and was lined with pale blue glacé velvet, a tint that exactly suited the wearer's style and colouring. The train was bordered with roses in many shades of pink and crimson. Miss James, niece of Lord James of Hereford, wore a most artistic gown of deep cream-tinted satin, embroidered in burnished steel and diamonds, and veiled with lace in the same soft, deep tone of cream-colour as the satin. The sleeves were lace with pink roses tucked into them. The train, of striped green and silver and white Pompadour, was lined with petal pink, and put on with roses. Mrs. Edward Hope's lovely dress was white satin, the bodice embossed with gold, and silver, and crystal, and divided up to the front, and the edges bordered with a band of pale, bright-green velvet—a lovely touch. The brocade train was white and green. Lady Aline Beaumont's cream-coloured satin was artistically embroidered in silver and crystal in a French design, and trimmed with lovely Mechlin lace, stoles of it falling at either side. The brocade of the train was in a design of white lilac and green leaves on a white ground, and was trimmed with flowers to match those in the pattern. Lady Aline wore a tiara and necklet of rubies and diamonds. Mrs. Dunlop Best had on a sweet bodice, embroidered in silver in a most uncommon design of roses, which presented a very rich appearance. The pale-green satin petticoat was veiled with lisse embroidered all over with diamonds set on in curves. A band of silver tissue formed the belt, and into it was tucked a spray of La France roses.

The Marchioness of Worcester's Arcade châtelaine of Cattleya orchids was one of the prettiest things at the Drawing Room. They were real flowers, and, falling over her white satin crêpe-trimmed dress, they looked delicious. They served instead of a bouquet.

Mrs. Hanbury, of Pontypool, had a wonderful gown. The black lace petticoat fitted tightly over the hips, and thence hung most gracefully. The design, which consisted of cones and panels of embroidered jet sequins, was let in all round. Through the transparent lace pale-blue silk was visible, and the skirt was edged with three rows of pale-blue chiffon bouillonnés, a trimming that is now seen on everything. The black brocaded train was in a design of roses and forget-me-nots in the natural colours, and was lined with pink. All over it strayed bow-knots of rose-pink and forget-me-not blue chiffon arranged in bouillonnés, and interspersed with little bunches of small roses and foliage. A long trail of jessamine fell from the sleeve at one side of the bodice. Lady Caroline Gordon-Lennox wore black, as did the Countess of Normanton, the Countess of Lytton, and Mrs. Clement Royds, who had a satin Princess dress opening in front, with a lattice-work of jet over white chiffon. The black velvet train was trimmed with Limerick lace which looked lovely, so light and graceful and refined. She presented Miss Evelyn Tylden-Wright, her niece, who wore a very pretty white gown, trimmed with silver and white lilac.

Lady Anna Chandos-Pole, in black moiré velours trimmed with chiffon, and a train of pale heliotrope broché, trimmed with Malmaison carnations, was accompanied by her daughter, Miss Margaret Chandos-Pole, who looked extremely well in a Redfern creation. The dress was turquoise-blue satin, with trimmings of white silk muslin, and bouillonnés of the same, and Parma violets—a long spray of which began on the right shoulder, passing across the bodice, and falling over the skirt on the left. The foliage was powdered over with a simulation of frost, which proved very appropriate. The train was ivory satin, trimmed with chiffon and violets. The ornaments worn with this sweet gown were pearls. Mrs. Bolton, of Copped Hall, deserves the acclamations of the patriotic for having chosen Spitalfields brocade. It was lovely mauve and green, and her Arcade bouquet of cymbidium orchids and Parma violets went admirably with it.

The Hon. Mrs. Whateley wore a very beautiful dress of pale eau-de-Nil satin, both petticoat and bodice being embroidered with emeralds, brilliants, and pearls, and trimmed with lace appliqués and carnations. The pale-pink moiré train was sweetly pretty. Mrs. Whateley wore magnificent emeralds and diamonds. Lady Duckworth King's poppy-red satin, embroidered all over with paste, steel, and jet, was beautiful to behold. The pointed bodice, with lines of the embroidery converging at the waist, was draped with red and black tulle round the shoulders, and trimmed with black velvet and shaded poppies. The black velvet train was lined with red satin, and trimmed with red and black tulle and shaded flowers. Lady King's jewels included a diamond tiara, a pearl necklet, and ruby and diamond stars. Her bouquet was made of shaded red poppies and foliage.

The Lady Mayoress wore a charming gown of silver-grey satin shot with mauve and embroidered with steel. The train was violet velvet lined with satin in a paler tone, and trimmed with shaded feathers. She presented a daughter, Miss Violet Davies, who wore a dainty gown of white gauze over satin, frilled almost to the waist and trimmed with white violets and lilies. The flowers formed a ruche round the hem of the skirt and a berthe upon the bodice. Miss Davies wore pearl ornaments. Mrs. Charles Steel's black satin embroidered with steel and fine jet and violet velvet train made a pretty union; and Mrs. Colin BEAUTIFUL TORQUAY.—The Imperial Hotel has the best position, and is the leading hotel in Torquay. Grand climate. Cool in summer, warm in winter, and well known as the "Queen of Watering Places."

Minton Campbell's white and Parma satin embroidered in a feather design, together with her train of petunia velvet trimmed with clusters of shaded feathers, was another distinct success. Very sweet, too, was the ivory satin of Mrs. Staunton, of Dungeith, Panchory, showered with diamonds and trimmed with Alençon, folds of chiffon and pale-pink roses with lily-of-the-valley.

Mrs. Walter Carlile wore yellow satin trimmed with panels of Indian embroidery and some rare old pillow lace. White and yellow chiffon with mauve orchids completed the trimming. The train was white and yellow brocade lined with mauve, matching the tint of the orchids on the bodice. Mrs. Mervyn de Montmorency's Buckingham lace was most covetable. Mrs. Thomas Willans Nussey, presented by Lady Reay, wore a softly beautiful composition in tones of ivory and white. Miss Gertrude Horsfall's presentation gown was trimmed with white heather. Miss Mackenzie's Greek tulle was most effective. The Misses De Burgh D'Arcy were dressed alike in sweet gowns trimmed with white lilies and shamrocks. They enjoyed the privilege of the entrée—no small matter on so cold a day. Lady Violet Brassey had a sweet ivory satin, embroidered with turquoise-velvet bows in true lovers' knots and steel wheat-ears. Her guipure collar was outlined with rows of puckered blue velvet ribbon. The train, in ivory satin, was embroidered to match up one side, and the other was draped with Brussels lace festooned with white and pink roses. Mrs. Hervey Greathed was presented on her marriage, wearing white lace over white satin. The train was trimmed with white chiffon and pink roses. Lady Hartland, wife of Sir Frederick Dixon Hartland, wore a very beautiful Court dress, consisting of a train of satin of a rare shade, Papal red, lined with Easter white, and trimmed with priceless Spanish point (formerly belonging to one of the Cardinal-Archbishops of Toledo). The petticoat, of rich moire antique, was profusely brocaded with coloured flowers, and round the hem hung a flounce of the lovely Spanish point; it was also trimmed with a small tablier, with long sash ends of silken gauze, edged with elaborately ruched chiffon. The bodice of the brocade was draped to match, and a branch of red roses, repeating the colour of the satin train, fell across the front. Her ornaments were magnificent diamonds, and the bouquet consisted of white Lenten flowers.

The Hon. Lady Grey Egerton's ivory satin dress had a lovely pink shade through it by reason of the lining, which was in shell-pink, and was embroidered in sequins and diamonds. Frills of pink mousseline de chiffon and rare old Brussels lace draped the bodice. The train, fastened to the bodice with four embroidered wings, was in rich Lyons velvet in shades of mauve and pansy colours. It was trimmed with pink and white chiffon. Lady Isabel Larnach achieved a highly successful contrast with her petticoat of pale mauve satin and train of yellow silk brocade trimmed with mauve and yellow iris. Lady Inverclyde, presented by the Duchess of Buccleuch on her husband being raised to the peerage, wore a most beautiful dress of rich opal satin, the skirt vandyked with opal passementerie. A spray of rosebuds and mauve primulas held the folds of lace on the bodice. Lady Inverclyde carried a lovely arcade bouquet of La France roses and mauve primulas. She presented her daughter, the Hon. Jane Burns, in a very sweet frock, the bodice of which was turned back in quite a new way with revers tapering to the waist. Lady Galway's black gown had lovely old point on it. Lady Cranborne, in white satin, wore a black satin train. Madame Romaro, wife of the Mexican Minister, in a beautiful dress, presented her daughter, Miss José Romaro, also exquisitely dressed in white moiré glacé silk, trimmed with lily-of-the-valley.

We went to a private view at the depôt of Greek Industries at 39, Marloes-road, Kensington, on Tuesday last, and found there so much that was novel and interesting that we stayed ever so long. This depot was opened last September, with the object of assisting the poor Greeks who had suffered in consequence of the war with the Turks. The factories had to be closed, and commerce was at a standstill. Consequently the sufferings of the poor workers thrown out of employment were and still are very severe. The depot is a small room, quite inadequate to show all the beautiful things brought from Greece, but the Committee hope in time to be able to take larger premises. The carpets and embroideries are hung upon the walls, where one can hardly see their quaintness of design and uncommon colouring. The stair-carpets are extremely pretty, being made with a white ground strewn over with designs in red and blue, which have partly a Russian and partly an Oriental character. Being hand-woven they are very durable. Greece appears to have no machinery whatever. The silks, gauzes, and linens are all hand-spun, and the laces, among them a peculiarly fine torchon, hand-made. Dhurries and narrow strips of embroidery on white wool would be found useful in the home, and large squares in lamb's-wool would be capital as bed-spreads. The colours in which they are worked are red, white, and blue, the designs being quaintly Greek. Shaped leather belts intended for the reception of pistols and dagger would serve as wall-pockets for newspapers and letter-racks. The colour is a deep, rich red, with spaces cut out, through which white leather shows. Small ordinary belts in various tints are ready for wear, some in the Greek mixture of white and blue.

The church lamps appealed to me almost more than anything else, their shape being so curiously antique, and probably unchanged since the early days of the Greek Church. The oil reservoir is fitted with three receptacles for wicks, and for every one of these an extinguisher is provided, being suspended from the upper portion, which is surmounted by the emblematic dove. A pendent pair of snuffers, with quaintly wrought handles, is another item in the whole. The leather shoes are interesting, those for children being ornamented with small rosettes of red, white, and blue wool. We bought some of the Greek soap, and intend to have some of the honey from Mount Hymettus, and olives from Kalamata, considered the best in the world. Already the Committee has been able, through private sales, to send out a thousand drachmas to Greece, but unfortunately the drachma, like the rupee, dwindles considerably in the exchange. It should be worth tenpence of our money, but really only fetches 7½d. Marloes-road is quite near Kensington High-street, and is close to Cheniston Gardens. If any of your London friends want to be good to Greece, you can direct them to the depot.

An Irish lady has just invented a very useful article that will be a boon to mothers. It is a frame of bamboo and netting that can be fitted to a cot of any size, allowing sufficient height to admit of the child standing upright inside, and yet protecting him efficiently from falling out. It well deserves its name of "Happy Thought," for it is as simple as it is useful. It can be had of Maple, Whiteley, and of Pim, Dublin. When not in use, the frame can be folded in four and tucked under the cot.

The Empress Club has just sent out a Jubilee badge to all its original members, a medallion with the two significant dates of which we all heard so much last year, the Crown, and the member's name. The Committee has handed over one hundred guineas to the Prince of Wales' Hospital Fund, in accord with the intention expressed at the outset of giving to that purpose the odd shillings in the members' subscriptions. The success of the club is so great that a considerable enlargement of the premises is to take place at once, in order to accommodate the rush of new members.

Have you tried the combination of hot chocolate sauce with ice cream? It is rather good, and this is the way it is made:—

Steep a piece of vanilla pod in ½ pint of milk on the side of the stove for twenty minutes. Then remove the vanilla, add 4 oz. of sugar, and pour the boiling milk on to the beaten yolks of 4 eggs. Return it to the stewpan, stir it till the custard thickens, and whisk it till cold. Thoroughly blend the custard with ½ pint of whipped and sweetened cream, freeze and mould it in the usual way. Turn the ice on to a dessert paper, and serve the sauce in a boat.

For the sauce:—Dissolve 1 oz. of grated "chocolate menier" in ½ gill of milk, mix the third of a spoonful of potato flour with a little milk, add it to the chocolate, and stir until boiling. Now mix in the yolk of an egg, whisk it till hot, then add, thoroughly and lightly, the whisked white of an egg and a heaped tablespoonful of whipped cream.

Cucumbers farced and larded with kidney and bacon for breakfast are a novelty:—

Choose a large straight cucumber; then peel it thinly, leaving a small strip ¾ in. wide down one side (this is left for larding purposes) Cut it down the middle, lengthwise, scoop out the centre of each half, then fill with this forcemeat: Take the white meat from the breast of a fowl, and mince it small, with green onions or chives, parsley, one or two mushrooms, bread crumbs soaked in cream, the juice of an orange, and the zest of a lemon, sufficient to fill the vacuum. Season with pepper, salt, and nutmeg. Mix altogether with the beaten yolk of an egg. Form the mixture into the shape of a sausage and place it in the cucumber. Set on the other half carefully, so that the stuffing is quite safe; tie each end with tape. Secure the whole with fine skewers, then boil it in good stock until tender, but on no account must the cucumber be broken. Have ready a par-cooked sheep's kidney, cut it into strips with these and narrow pieces of bacon, lard the cucumber alternately, taking the needle straight through. Set the cucumber in a hot oven to finishing cooking. In the meantime prepare a rich, thick, brown gravy. When ready, dish the cucumber, and pour the gravy around it.

These médaillons of veal form a superior entrée, seasonable all the year:—

Cut the best part of a fillet of veal into rounds ½ in. thick and 2 inches in diameter. Lard them through with strips of fat bacon. Put them into a buttered sautépan with a sliced onion, half a carrot, sliced, 1 oz. of minced lean bacon, a sprig each of thyme, marjoram, and parsley, a blade of mace, a glass of Madeira, and a little stock. Cover with a buttered paper, and braise them in a slow oven for half an hour, cool in the liquor, drain and trim. Now coat the surface of each with chicken forcemeat and ornament the top with cut truffles. Arrange them again in a buttered sautépan, moisten with good stock, cover with a buttered paper, and cook them in a slow oven for about half an hour, or until the forcemeat is firm. Make a thin border of mashed potato on an entrée dish, put a macédoine of cooked mushrooms, carrots, and truffles, tossed in a little sauce, in the centre of the dish. Arrange the médaillons round, and pour good suprême sauce over all.

Ever, dear, your loving cousin, MADGE.

The Athenæum says:—"Whatever may be the future of the book, it can scarcely help being far, very far indeed, in advance of anything we now have, and may—we trust will—lead to that study of our naval history which has been so sadly neglected."

Captain Mahan says:—"I wish you all the success your nation ought to give you as a matter of patriotism."

OVER A THOUSAND COPIES HAVE BEEN SOLD IN A FEW DAYS OF

ALL THE WORLD'S FIGHTING SHIPS. Written and Illustrated by FRED T. JANE. With Hundreds of Illustrations. The text is in English, French, German, and Italian, and the body of the work consists of carefully authenticated Portraits of every Warship of any fighting value whatever. Size 8 by 12 inches. Oblong, 10s. 6d. net.

The Scotsman says:—"Must prove invaluable to naval officers."

FIFTH EDITION.—REVISED AND WITH NEW CHAPTER ON THE AMERICAN NAVY.

IRONCLADS IN ACTION. By W. H. WILSON. With Introduction by Captain A. T. MAHAN. Fully Illustrated. Two Vols., royal 8vo, 30s.

The Standard says:—"The naval world will be the wiser for the book, which will take its place as a standard work, and will long retain that position."

PROSPECTUS.

The Company has been formed to acquire as a going concern the old established business of R. H. & S. Rogers, the well-known Shirt and Collar Warehousemen and Manufacturers, of 9, 10, and 11, Addle-street, London, with Factories at Rotherhithe, and at Coleraine, Ireland.

The business was founded upwards of fifty years ago by the late Mr. Thomas Rogers (the father of the present proprietors), who, from a comparatively small beginning, gradually built up and extended the concern until his death in 1876. Since that period his sons, Sir Robert Hargreaves Rogers and Mr. Samuel Rogers, have so successfully conducted the business, that their firm now occupies a leading position in the trade, and gives employment to some 2,000 hands.

The factory at Coleraine was erected only two years ago, and that at Rotherhithe has not been built more than a year, while the laundry there has only just been completed; both of the factories were built in place of smaller ones to provide for the necessities of the increasing trade, and for a similar reason the laundry has been erected at Rotherhithe, adjoining the factory, in the place of one in Bermondsey, which is no longer sufficient for the execution of the work of the firm. All these buildings have been erected under the supervision of Frederick W. Ledger, Esq., A.R.I.B.A.

The warehouses in Addle-street have within the last year been considerably added to and remodelled and fitted anew throughout, while at the factories and laundry, the machinery, plant, and tools are believed to comprise every modern improvement, and have been supplied under the advice of Joseph Crawhill Chapman, Esq., M.I.C.E., M.I.M.E. No expense has been spared to render the works of the firm as perfect in plant and appliances as modern skill and knowledge can provide.

The speciality of the firm has been the promptest execution of orders, thereby supplying a felt want in the trade, and their factories have been built and fitted and their whole business has been organised to this end.

As the firm has hitherto mainly confined its operation to London and a radius of something like twenty miles, it may be well understood that the scope for extending its business is practically unlimited, not only in the particular branches of the trade hitherto carried on, but in others closely allied to it, so that the addition to the capital which the present issue, and the payment by the Vendors of the liabilities provide, will, in the opinion of the Directors, materially increase the profits.

The accounts of the firm have been supervised for many years past by Mr. Thomas Frid Maunder, and amongst the satisfactory features of the business, it will be seen from his Certificate, that while the turnover has increased year by year, the percentage of profits has been maintained and the bad debts have averaged less than half per cent. on the amount of the turnover.

The following is a copy of his Certificate:—

26, Martin's-lane, Cannon-street, E.C.,
28th February, 1898.

To the Directors of R. H. & S. Rogers, Limited.

Gentlemen:—I have audited the books of Messrs. R. H. & S. Rogers' business for many years, and I certify that for the past ten years both the gross turnover and the net profits have steadily increased from year to year, while at the same time the percentage of profit on turnover has been fully maintained, and the bad debts during the whole period have averaged less than half per cent. on the turnover.

I further certify that the net profits for the past three years, after making adequate allowance for depreciation of machinery and plant, have been as follows:—

Year ended 30th September, 1895 ...	£10,246 12 2
" " " 1896 ...	11,401 13 0
" " " 1897 ...	12,440 7 10

In ascertaining the above profits no deduction has been made for interest on capital, income tax, or partners' remuneration.

The profits for the year ended September, 1897, would have been sufficient, after paying a dividend of 5 per cent. on £75,000 of Preference Shares, to pay a 7½ per cent. dividend on £90,000 of Ordinary Shares, leaving a balance of nearly two thousand pounds (£1,946).

I have examined the accounts of the past three months to 31st December, and find that the sales exceed those of any previous year for the same period.

Yours faithfully,
THOMAS FRID MAUNDER.

Mr. Charles Perry Whiteley, F.S.I., Surveyor and Valuer, of 82, Queen-street, London, has valued the fee farm and leasehold property, machinery, plant and fixtures, and a copy of his valuation follows:—

82, Queen-street, Cheapside,
London, E.C. 28th February, 1898.

To the Directors of Messrs. R. H. & S. ROGERS, Limited.

Gentlemen,—In accordance with your instructions, I have surveyed and valued the several properties set forth in the schedule hereto. They are all of substantial construction, in good repair, and well fitted with modern appliances.

I have also valued the engines, machinery, fixtures, fittings, and utensils in trade at the various factories. This plant is of the most approved type, and in excellent condition.

The Cliftonville Laundry has only just been erected, having been built to replace a much smaller building (now disposed of), and the engines, boilers, machinery, &c., are consequently quite new.

I value the whole of the properties referred to, together with the machinery, plant, &c., at the sum of thirty-four thousand four hundred and fifty-five pounds and twelve shillings.

SCHEDULE OF PROPERTIES.

COLERAINE FACTORY.—Nearly equal to freehold, being held in perpetuity, subject to a land charge of £16 per annum.

CLIFTONVILLE WORKS and LAUNDRY, Bolina-road, Rotherhithe.—Held upon lease for a term of 81 years (less 10 days) from 29th September, 1883, at the ground rent of £45 per annum.

Nos. 9 and 10, ADDLE-STREET, with Premises in the rear.—Held upon lease for a term of 21 years from 29th September, 1895, at the rent of £775 per annum.

No. 11, ADDLE-STREET.—Held upon lease for a term of 12 years (less 10 days) from 25th December, 1895, at the rent of £550 per annum.

Yours faithfully,
CHAS. P. WHITELEY.

The Company take over the Vendors' business and business assets, with the benefit of all their existing contracts as from the 30th of September last, up to which date the Vendors discharge liabilities. The Company will be entitled to the profits since that time subject to the Vendors receiving from that date their remuneration and interest on the cash portion of the purchase money at 5 per cent. per annum up to the completion of the transfer to the Company.

The purchase price for the assets of the business and goodwill has been fixed by Sir Robert Hargreaves Rogers and Mr. Samuel Rogers, the Vendors, at £160,000, payable as to £25,000 in preference shares, £29,998 in ordinary shares, and the balance in cash.

The assets on the 30th September last (apart from the fee farm and leasehold premises and plant, machinery and tools since added to and now valued at £34,455 12s. 0d., and also apart from goodwill) comprised stock-in-trade (taken by the Vendors at or under cost) £29,243 4s. 8d.; book debts (guaranteed by the Vendors) £21,839 1s. 10d.; and cash, £2,048 7s. 10d.

The sale price of the old Bermondsey laundry business, which has been sold since the 30th September last, the sale of the leasehold interest being carried out by way of underlease has been applied towards the completion and fitting of the new one, any further moneys that were required having been paid out of the business, and the Company will therefore be credited with this sale price and debited with any payments since the 30th September last, connected with the erection and fitting of the new one.

The present members of the firm, to whose management the continued and increasing success of the business is due, have agreed to act as joint Managing Directors of the Company for at least five years, taking as remuneration, after a fixed minimum, a share of the net profits after paying the Preference Shareholders a dividend at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum, and the Ordinary Shareholders a dividend at the rate of 7½ per cent. per annum (the first dividend being calculated on the instalments payable on the Shares from the dates fixed for the payment thereof respectively) as provided in detail by the agreement between the Vendors and the Company mentioned below. Mr. Heffill, who has for many years had the management of the laundry department of the business, is joining the Board as Director, and will continue to manage this branch.

The Vendors will pay all expenses of every kind incidental to the formation and registration of the Company, and up to the first allotment, except the stamp duty on the agreement for sale to the Company.

No promotion money has been or will be paid, and no portion of the capital has been or will be underwritten.

Application for a settlement and quotation on the London Stock Exchange will be made in due course.

An agreement dated 1st March, 1898, has been entered into between Sir Robert Hargreaves Rogers and Mr. Samuel Rogers (the Vendors) of the one part, and the Company of the other part, and on the sale (since completed) of the old laundry an agreement for sale dated the 10th November, 1897, and made between Sir Robert Hargreaves Rogers and Mr. Samuel Rogers of the one part, and Charles Kingstone and James Maunder Kingstone of the other part, was entered into.

The business will be taken over subject to all existing contracts. They are of the ordinary trade character and necessary for the working of the concern, but including as they do contracts with employés, agents, representatives, customers and others they cannot be specified. There may be also other contracts which may technically fall within section 38 of the Companies Acts, 1867. Subscribers will be held to have had notice of all these contracts and to have waived all right to be supplied with particulars of such contracts, and to have agreed with the Company as trustees for the Directors and other persons liable not to make any claim whatsoever or to take any proceedings under the said Section in respect of any non-compliance therewith.

Copies of the above agreements dated the 1st March, 1898, and the 10th November, 1897, the Memorandum and Articles of Association and the Accountants' Certificate and the Valuer's Certificate can be inspected at the offices of the Solicitors to the Company.

Application for the Shares should be made on the form accompanying the prospectus, and forwarded to the Company's Bankers, Messrs. Glyn, Mills, & Co., with a remittance for the amount of the deposit.

If no allotment is made the deposit will be returned in full, and when the number of Shares allotted is less than that applied for, the surplus deposit will be appropriated to the amount due on allotment, and any excess will be returned to the applicant.

Prospectuses and forms of application may be obtained from the Solicitors, Brokers, Auditor, and Bankers of the Company, and also at the Office of the Company.

London, 1st March, 1898.

The SUBSCRIPTION LIST will Open To-day, TUESDAY, the 1st day of MARCH, 1898, and Close on or before FOUR o'clock on THURSDAY, the 3rd day of MARCH for Town and Country.

SALVIATI, JESURUM, & CO., LIMITED.

Incorporated under the Companies Acts, 1862 to 1893.

CAPITAL, £330,000,

Divided into 180,000 Cumulative Six per Cent. Preference Shares of £1 each, and 150,000 Ordinary Shares of £1 each.

Of the above 150,000 Ordinary Shares, the Vendors stipulate that 140,000 shall be allotted to them as fully paid up, the remaining 10,000 being retained by the Company to be issued as further Working Capital as and when required.

The Preference Shares will be entitled, out of the Profits, to a fixed Cumulative Preferential Dividend of Six per Cent. per annum, payable half-yearly, and will rank in respect of Capital and Dividend on the Property and Assets of the Company in priority to the Ordinary Shares.

The Preference Shares will be also entitled to 25 per Cent. of the surplus Profits after payment of 6 per Cent. per annum on the Preference and 8 per Cent. per annum on the Ordinary Shares and providing an amount equal to 10 per Cent. of the Balance for Reserve Fund.

It is not intended to create any Debentures, and no Debentures will be issued without the consent of the holders of three-fourths of the Preference Shares given at a Meeting duly convened for the purpose of giving such consent.

PREFERENCE SHARES HAVE ALREADY BEEN APPLIED FOR IN LONDON AND VENICE.

ABRIDGED PROSPECTUS.

This Company is formed to acquire, develop, and carry on, as a going concern, the following well-known businesses, viz.:—

G. SALVIATI, 213, Regent-street, London, trading as Salviati & Co., at Venice, Murano, and Paris, with agencies at New York, St. Petersburg, Berlin, &c.

M. JESURUM & CO., Venice, with agency in Paris.

TESTOLINI BROS., Nos. 65, 66, 67, 76, 77, 101, 102, 103, 110, 111, and 112, St. Mark's-square (containing 45 show rooms) and the Palace Labia, Venice, and at Murano.

THE VENICE ART CO., Successors to A. Marcato, Venice.

PAGLIARIN AND FRANCO, Venice.

The businesses of G. Salviati and Salviati & Co., have been established for many years. Their specialities in Venetian glass and art Mosaics have attained a world-wide reputation by reason of their beauty and artistic excellence.

Mosaics by the Salviatis can be inspected at St. Paul's Cathedral, Westminster Abbey, Kensington Museum, Wolsey Chapel, Windsor, the Mausoleum, Frogmore, and many other places, both here and abroad. The Mosaic decorations of Budapest Cathedral and the New Basilique, at Antwerp, are now being executed by Salviati.

Signor Salviati has recently been honoured by an important order from Her Majesty the Queen, for the Mosaic decoration of Frogmore Mausoleum at Windsor, and is now executing the same.

Messrs. Jesurum & Co., established in 1879, in Venice, are manufacturers of hand-made point, pillow, and polychrome laces, silks, brocades, tapestries, damasks, velvets, stuffs, embroideries, dress silks, &c., and have gained pre-eminence for the beauty and novelty of their designs and exquisite taste, while for excellence of workmanship they are unsurpassed. They make a special feature of the reproduction of the old patterns in these beautiful fabrics, and are also dealers in antique lace, of which they have a very valuable stock.

The magnitude of the business of Messrs. Jesurum & Co. may be gathered from the fact that they give employment to some thousands of workpeople for the production of their fabrics and laces. In addition, they dispose by special agreement the lace made at the Lace Schools of Burano, which are presided over by Her Majesty the Queen of Italy. M. Jesurum & Co. are lace manufacturers to many of the Sovereigns and Courts of Europe.

Testolini Bros. are old-established manufacturers and dealers in carved wood furniture, their speciality being the reproductions of furniture from the old Venetian models. The firm is also noted for its ornamental marbles, mirrors, and ornaments, bronzes, upholstery, fancy hammered iron, armour, &c., and they have gained a prominent name for table glass and glass for table decoration.

The Venice Art Co. are successors to the celebrated firm of A. Marcato, and possess a superb collection of antique furniture, tapestries, bronzes, and works of art, which is reputed to be one of the most varied of the kind in Europe. They are also manufacturers of modern furniture reproduced from old models.

Since the arrangements for purchasing the four first above-named businesses were completed, the Directors in Venice had offered to them the glass factory of Messrs. Pagliarin & Franco. After careful investigation, they were satisfied that the average profits derived from this establishment have been £2,000 and upwards during the last two years. The Directors hold what they consider an ample guarantee that the profits from this business, during the next three years, shall not be less than £2,000 per annum. As its acquisition will strengthen the combination, it will be acquired by the Company.

Many of the articles manufactured by the above firms are peculiar to Venice, and are only produced by native workers, who inherit the methods of manipulation acquired through generations. Their skill imparts a distinctive character to their work, stamping it as Venetian, and causing it to be sought after in every country.

The principal object of this amalgamation is to do away with the competition at present existing between the above firms in the payment of commissions, advertising, and other expenses; and also to establish a large and important depot in London, as well as to extend the branches in other cities.

The premises at present occupied by Salviati in Regent-street being insufficient for the requirements of the combined businesses, it is intended to select more suitable premises in a leading West End thoroughfare in London, where the manufactures produced can be properly displayed. The directors feel confident that by the establishment of such a depot in London a considerable increase in the sales of the various goods will be effected and the profits increased in proportion.

M. Jesurum, in Venice, and G. Salviati, in London, independently of their positions as Directors, will superintend the business for a period of five years, and thereafter as long as they shall remain Directors without any extra remuneration. Arrangements have been made with the other proprietors who have been managing their businesses to continue as managers for a period of not less than five years, and the Company will thus secure the benefit of the assistance of those who have brought these businesses to their present state of prosperity.

The bulk of the sales being affected for cash, the risk of bad debts is reduced to a minimum.

Messrs. C. F. Kemp, Ford, & Co., Chartered Accountants, of London, have examined the books and accounts of the firms mentioned in their certificate, of which the following is an extract:—

The combined profits of the five firms for the period averaging about three years show an average annual profit of Lire 673,627.03 which at the exchange of 26, are equal to £25,908 14s. 6d. sterling.

The profit for the last year of the periods examined amount to Lire 755,783.86, or £29,068 12s. 2d. sterling.

The Directors have every reason to believe that the above profits of the years 1896-97 will not only be maintained, but largely increased. To these must be added the profits to be derived from the acquisition of the business of Pagliarin and Franco—viz., £2,000, and the rental received from property to be acquired by the Company, and let to tenants at total rentals of £465 7s. 6d., thus giving a total net annual profit of £31,533 19s. 8d.

Taking the above figures as a basis for calculation, the following dividends can be paid:—

On £180,000 Preference Shares at 6 per cent....	10,800	0	0
On £140,000 Ordinary Shares at 8 per cent.	11,200	0	0
Leaving a margin of...	9,533	19	8 per annum, which will be available for reserve fund, additional dividends, Directors' fees, &c.

In the above calculation no account has been taken of the economies which can be effected by this amalgamation, nor of the profits which it is believed will accrue to the Company by preventing competition and extending its business.

Messrs. Cadel & Padoa, of Venice, sworn valuers to the Law Courts of Venice, have valued in Venice and Murano the freehold properties in the occupation of M. Jesurum & Co., Testolini Brothers, The Venice Art Company, and Pagliarin & Franco, now to be acquired by the Company, at 668,000 lire, which is equivalent to £25,692 6s. 2d.

In addition to the above, the Company also acquires the numerous and valuable leasehold properties. All the properties are situate in the best positions in Venice.

The businesses will be taken over as from the 1st January, 1898. The stock-in-trade held by the several firms, at absolute cost price, amounted on the 1st January, 1897, to the sum of £101,686 18s. 4d., and the book debts to the sum of £8,699 1s. 6d. The stock-in-trade and book debts will be taken over by the Company at these figures, the later being guaranteed by the Vendors.

The plant and fittings will be taken over at a price not exceeding £11,438 9s. 2d. Their original cost was greatly in excess of this amount, and proper allowances have been made for depreciation from time to time.

The plant and fittings will be valued by a competent valuer on behalf of the Company after allotment, and any excess in value shall be retained by the Company, but should the stock and valuation of the plant and fittings be less than the above sums, the purchase money will be reduced accordingly, and the difference between such sums and the valuation will be applied to additional working capital.

In addition to the sum of £20,000, provided by the present issue for working capital, which, with the valuable stock now held and book debts guaranteed by the Vendors, is considered ample for all purposes, £10,000 in Ordinary Shares are left in the hands of the Directors for future issue as and when required.

The Company incurs no liability or expense relative to the formation, promotion, or registration of the Company except the stamp duty on the contract.

Copies of the Memorandum and Articles of Association and of the contracts, together with the report of Messrs. Kemp, Ford, & Co., and sworn valuation of the freehold by Messrs. Cadel & Padoa, may be inspected by intending subscribers at the Office of the Solicitors to the Company.

It is intended to make application in due course for a Stock Exchange quotation and settlement of the Preference Shares.

Applications for Shares should be made on the form accompanying the Prospectus, and sent with deposit to the Company's Bankers. If no allotment is made, the deposit will be returned in full; and if a less amount is allotted than that applied for, the deposit will be credited towards the amount due on allotment.

Prospectuses and forms of application, &c., can be obtained at the Bankers, Brokers, Solicitors, Auditors, and the Offices of the Company.

Out of the proceeds of this issue £25,000 will be provided as additional working capital, and the balance of the Ordinary Shares—viz., £25,000, will be reserved for future issue as further working capital if required.

Mr. Henry Gartside, the Chairman of the old Company, will subscribe for and take an allotment of one-third of the Cumulative Preference Shares, one-third of the present issue of Ordinary Shares, and one-third of the Debenture Stock.

The Debenture Stock will be secured by a specific First Mortgage to Trustees for the Debenture Stockholders upon the freehold and leasehold properties, having more than seven years to run, comprised in the valuation of Messrs. William Wilson and Son set out below, and by a floating charge (subject to a power reserved by the Trust Deed to charge hereditaments other than the freeholds and leaseholds specifically mortgaged) upon the other assets and general undertaking of the Company, but not including its capital for the time being uncalled. The Stock will be redeemable at the option of the Company, on or at any time after December 31, 1915, at the rate of £110 per cent. on six months' notice, and in the event of a voluntary winding up for the purpose of reconstruction or amalgamation, it will be redeemable at the like rate. The Debenture Stock will be registered in the books of the Company, and the interest will be payable half-yearly on every January 1 and July 1, the first payment (calculated from the due dates of payment of the several instalments) being made on July 1, 1898. The last instalment of the Debenture stock may be paid in full in advance under a discount of 2 per cent. per annum. Failure to pay any instalment when due will render the amounts already paid liable to forfeiture. Power is reserved by the Trust Deed to issue a further £300,000 Debenture stock, ranking pari passu with the present issue, but this power is not to be exercised unless additional properties approved by the Trustees be conveyed to them, as provided by the Trust Deed, and then only to the extent of three-fifths of the cost of such additional properties. The Preference Shares are entitled to a cumulative preferential dividend at the rate of 5 per centum per annum, and will rank both for capital and dividend in priority to the Ordinary Shares. The interest on the Preference shares will be paid half-yearly on March 1 and September 1 in each year. The first payment will be made on September 1, 1898, and will be calculated from the due dates of payment of the several instalments.

PROSPECTUS.

This Company has been formed for the purpose of acquiring as a going concern, and carrying on the old-established Brewery known as Brookside Brewery, Ashton-under-Lyne, situate near to the Guide Bridge Railway Station, fuller particulars of which are mentioned in the valuation of Messrs. William Wilson & Son, set out below. The brewery was founded by the late John Gartside, in 1830, and was in 1892 (for family reasons only) converted into a private Limited Company, under the title of "Gartsides (Limited)" and has since been successfully carried on by the family under that name.

The properties to be acquired by the Company comprise the following:—

1. Freehold brewery offices, stables, fixed plant, and machinery, called Brookside Brewery, Ashton-under-Lyne, and freehold and long leasehold public-houses, beer-houses, and other properties, valued by Messrs. William Wilson & Son, auctioneers and valuers, Manchester, at	£411,350 19 2
2. Properties held on short leases and yearly tenancies, valued by Messrs. William Wilson & Son at.....	21,508 0 0
3. Horses, drays, vehicles, harness, casks, and working plant, &c., valued by Messrs. William Wilson & Son at.....	13,043 7 8
		£445,902 6 10
4. Book debts and loans, rent and interest guaranteed by the old Company.....		60,415 0 0
5. Rolling stock and stocks of brewing materials taken at cost price		7,114 0 0
6. Shares in hotel companies taken at par		1,000 0 0
7. Extra working capital provided from this issue		25,000 0 0
		£539,431 6 10

The following is a copy of Messrs. William Wilson and Son's valuation, referred to above:—

29, Fountain-street, Manchester, December 31, 1897.

To Messrs. Gartsides (Limited), Brookside Brewery, Ashton-under-Lyne.

Gentlemen,—We, the undersigned, in accordance with your instructions, have made a valuation of the "Brookside Brewery," situate at Ashton-under-Lyne, in the county of Lancaster, together with the fixed plant, stables, and premises adjoining. In connection with the Brewery are sixty fully-licensed hotels and public-houses, forty-five beer-houses, some with wine licences, six beer-houses with out-door licences, forty-three shops and premises, and 182 dwelling-houses and cottages, and several plots of vacant land, all freehold of inheritance or held on lease for long terms, the whole of which are situate in Ashton-under-Lyne, Stalybridge, Hooley Hill, Dukinfield, Hurst, Hyde, Oldham, Austerlands, Denshaw, Delph, Diggle, Saddleworth, Greenfield, Mossley, Newton Heath, Gorton, Middleton, Mottram, Haughton Green, Hadfield, Glossop, Broadbottom, Marple, New Mills, Furness Vale, Blackpool, Poulton-le-Fylde, and Liverpool, in the counties of Cheshire, Lancashire, Derbyshire, and Yorkshire; together with eighty-five fully-licensed public-houses and beer-houses, and eighteen beer-houses with out-door licences, situate in the before-mentioned localities, and held on short leases. The brewery and plant, with the stables and other appurtenances in connection therewith, are all in first-class order and condition, well appointed, and capable of producing a very large output, much in excess of the present trade. They are situate with a frontage to the Ashton Canal, and connected with a loading gangway to the Great Central Railway, and are in close proximity to the Guide Bridge Railway Station, and placed advantageously for most of the houses. We have also valued the rolling stock, comprising casks, horses, drays, carts, traps, conveyances, harness, loose tools, office furniture, fittings, and effects, which are all in first-class working order and condition.

The total amount of our valuation is the sum of four hundred and forty-five thousand nine hundred and two pounds six shillings and tenpence.

SUMMARY.

WILLIAM WILSON & SON, Valuers.

Messrs. F. W. Popplewell, Son, & Kenyon, of 2, Marsden-street, Manchester, chartered accountants, have audited the books of the concern since 1852, and they certify as follows:—

February 3, 1898.

We have audited the Books and Accounts of Gartsides, Limited, of Brookside Brewery, Ashton-under-Lyne, and of their predecessors, from the year 1852 to the present time, and certify that the net profits of the business, including rentals, but excluding Directors' and Managers' remuneration for the four and a half years ending December 31, 1897, were as under:—

For the year ending June 30, 1894.....	£25,796 14 2
" " June 30, 1895.....	26,656 6 1
" " June 30, 1896.....	30,463 13 11
" " June 30, 1897.....	35,474 13 9
For the half-year ending December 31, 1897....	19,549 6 9

In arriving at the above figures, large sums have from time to time been expended in repairs, renewals, and extensions to buildings and fixed plant, and charged against revenue, depreciation has not been written off, except in the case of leaseholds.

Interest on mortgages and loans, which are to be repaid by Gartsides, (Limited), has not been charged, and no rent has been charged for the Brewery, as that property, hitherto held on lease, will be owned by the proposed Company.

Extending over the four years ending June 30, 1897, there was a special trading loss of £4,694 19s. 5d. (of which £508 15s. 4d. is attributable to the year ending June 30, 1897) in respect of certain transactions which are now closed. This loss has not been charged against the foregoing profits, as it will not recur.

F. W. POPPLEWELL, SON, & KENYON,
Chartered Accountants.

The Company will have the benefit of purchases made at last year's prices of a supply of hops bought since June 30, 1897, sufficient for all probable requirements for the next fifteen months, and of malt similarly bought, which it is estimated will last until November next.

Until 1897 the business was confined to beer, ale, and stout, but now extra profits may reasonably be expected from the sale of wines and spirits to the Company's houses and the public.

The profits of the business for the 18 months ending December 31, 1897, as certified above, were £55,024 0s. 6d., or at the rate of per annum		£36,682 13 8

The policy of the Brewery has been to let their houses to respectable and bonâ-fide tenants, so as to ensure as far as possible the permanence of the licences.

The Directors propose to retain the services of the existing staff of the Brewery, and have arranged with Mr. Charles E. Redfern, who has been the Manager for twenty-one years, to be Managing Director of the Company, thereby ensuring the continuity of the present successful management.

The business will be taken over from June 30, 1897, with the benefit of the trading from that date, subject to payment of interest on the share of purchase money payable to the vendors of the brewery freehold and the old Company at the rate of £5 per cent. per annum, the old Company guaranteeing the book debts and loans, and discharging their liabilities existing at that date, other than liabilities under pending contracts, of which the benefit is included in the sale.

The present sale of the business is made by the Conversion Guarantee Company, Limited (hereinafter called the Conversion Company), who have purchased it from the old Company, and the Freehold of the Brewery is being sold by the Devisees under the late John Gartside's will. Mr. Roger A. Gartside, one of the Directors of the present Company, is one of such Devisees, and is also interested in the Conversion Company.

The aggregate purchase price for the Freehold Brewery and other Properties and Assets mentioned above, and for the benefit of the Contracts mentioned in the next clause, and the Goodwill, has been fixed by the Conversion Company (who are the promoters) at £600,000, payable in cash (in addition to the premium on the £300,000 Debenture Stock offered for subscription), of which sums amounting in the aggregate to £550,000 will be paid to the original Vendors, and the balance to the Conversion Company; who will thereout pay all the expenses of forming the Company and of this issue up to the first allotment, including printing and advertising, legal expenses, brokerage, and commissions for guaranteeing and procuring the subscription of the whole of the present issue, and all other expenses up to the first allotment (except stamp duties and registration duties and fees, and the Company's cost of conveyance and investigation of title, which are to be paid by the Company.)

In addition to the above the present Company will take over certain contracts entered into by the old Company for the purchase of additional houses not included in Messrs. William Wilson and Son's valuation set out above, and will repay to the old Company all deposit and other moneys which have been paid by them under such contracts.

Application for a settlement and quotation of the Debenture Stock and Preference and Ordinary shares will be made in due course to the Committees of the London and Manchester Stock Exchanges.

Gartsides (Brookside Brewery), Continued.—

The Trust Deed for securing the Debenture Stock will be executed on the completion of the purchase, and will be in the form of the printed draft referred to in an Agreement dated February 21, 1898, and made between the Company of the one part, and the above-named Trustees for the Debenture Stock holders of the other part, or such modified form as may be adopted in accordance with the terms of that Agreement. Pending the execution of the Trust Deed, moneys payable by subscribers for the Debenture Stock will be paid to the Trustees, who will pay over to the Conversion Company at once so much thereof as represents premium, and will retain or apply the balance in manner mentioned in the said Agreement.

The following Contracts have been entered into:—
